When the kinematographic play or scene is being photographed the orchestra leader is photographed in a small square in the lower left-hand corner of the film, and thus is projected upon the picture screen with the picture.

To enable the orchestra leader to face the orchestra and stage during the performance and yet to secure the effect of having him face the camera in the photograph, the method of the patent is adopted. In the diagram, a is the stage, b is the orchestra pit, d is the location of the orchestra leader, f is the camera, and e is a mirror in which the orchestra leader is photographed, as indicated by the dotted lines.

When the picture is projected, the orchestra leader is projected upon the screen as though facing the audience

In the lamphouse are three incandescent lamps of three colors. Upon the driving sprocket shaft is a commutator with three segments, to light the three lamps, one at a time, once each revolution. The driving sprocket is of such size as to shift the film at the rate of three images for each revolution. There is no shutter, the lighting and dimming of the lamps having the effect of the shutter. The film to be projected is a print from a negative made with three color screens, and the lamps, constantly changing in color of light, supply for each image a light of proper color. The rapid succession of colors gives the color effect to the picture by blending, as in the Kinemacolor projection.

Bessie Learn.

"I DON'T write to men" Bessie Learn explained with dignity and a smile that showed her dimples.

"What — not even a post-card when you're as far away as Europe?" asked the Edison boy who had stopped to remind her that his mail had contained no postal picture of the Roman Pantheon nor the Grand Canal at Venice and neither of these cards which he didn't receive was autographed by Bessie.

"No; my husband post-carded to men, I didn't," replied Bessie Learn-Prosser and all the Edison boy said was "Whew!" as he answered a call to a waiting scene.

"The part of Europe I liked best was neither Rome nor Venice," offered Bessie, as we made ourselves at home in the office of one of the directors. "It was Holland that I liked best and we would have stayed there longer only we were warned to get to Liverpool as fast as we could. It was just after war had been declared and ocean travel was very dangerous because everything was so terribly unsettled. So we took seventy or eighty snap-shots of Dutch children and hurried on to Liverpool.

"Of course, you know how we waited for ages and finally got steerage passage?"

"Yes, I did hear about it," I admitted thinking of the three or four detailed accounts of it I had read. "But tell me this—what, on that voyage back, impressed you the most?" And Bessie answered quickly,

"That little hard couch in the steerage, where I spent just one night." You'd never guess Bessie Learn to interpret things so literally, would you? "The reason it was only one night," Bessie explained, "was that some girls, who had a second cabin and an extra cot offered me the cot which I accepted with joy.

"But something else that left a lasting impression with me was the whistle of the Aquitania. You see," and again Bessie's tone was an explanatory one, "it was at night and we didn't know it was the Aquitania, so didn't answer it. Of course we all thought it was a German war-ship and hoped to keep clear of them by keeping the port-holes blanketed and no lights on deck. So when the Aquitania signaled, we made no answer.

"For fourteen hours," continued Bessie, "we stood perfectly still in a fog. Of course, it was dangerous. But because I had kissed the Blarney Stone just two weeks before, I felt so lucky that I prophesied we'd get here safely. And not only us, but all our baggage."

"Bring back many pretty things?" I felt I knew Bessie well enough to ask and she replied,

"Some. See this hat?" I did. It was a snug-fitting and tiny one of black velvet and from a feathery throne-effect on the side, a long, slender, inquisitive feather spiraled.

"Paris," Bessie enlightened me. "And this dress?" Also, I saw the dress. To prove it, I remarked on its particular shade of blue and offered the suggestion that it matched Bessie's eyes.

"London," returned Bessie and fingered a lavallier of beaten gold which dangled a pretty matrix. Yes, I saw the lavallier and the matrix.

"Italy," Bessie announced triumphantly and leaned back and folded her hands. "And the first thing I did when I got off of the boat," she told me, "was to buy a chocolate ice-cream soda. What joy!!" Mentally, she must have again tasted that heavenly soda; her pleased smile said as much. "The sodas in Europe —Ugh!" And as far as Bessie-Learn-Prosser is concerned there is no such thing as a European soda.

"And now that I'm back," went on Bessie, and she said it happily, "I'm here to stay—at least for a long while; a year or two anyway, for it would be nice to go again, sometime. But now, I'm enjoying my work more than ever, and this is my third year at the Edison studio. I never worked in any other studio, though I've been on the stage since I can remember. My two sisters and I always worked together and always had nice parts.

"I was born in San Diego," continued Bessie after a little discussion as to parts and the way the Learn sisters never accepted any offer which didn't include the others of them. "And when I was two years old I was taken to Chicago and stayed there until I was twelve. I was in companies with Annie Russell, Robert Hilliard and Chauncey Olcott and played in 'Hearts are Trumps' and 'Home Folks' and weeks and weeks of stock. 'Polly of the Circus' was the last big production I was in and just before coming here, I was in vaudeville. And then—I came here!" Bessie finished with a gesture of the hands and eye-brows that said 'That's all.'

But it wasn't all, so I reminded Bessie of the husband and auto and the many splendid leads she had acquired within the last fifteen months and Bessie admitted it was quite right and amended the statement by proclaiming that both the husband and auto quite were deserving of the description "splendid" also.

"It was a successful move, my coming to the Edison studio" decided Bessie. "And I'm terribly fond of my car; I drive it everywhere. But he isn't an actor, he's a broker." Meaning her husband, of course. "And as for parts—just before I went vacationing, I had ever so many good ones opposite Edward Earle and I'm hoping for more like them."

Bessie's smile of expectancy displayed her dimples and caused me to forget the magazine I had brought with which to slay subway time. So after the brown-haired and shy Bessie had said good-bye and I had turned the corner of the studio, I remembered the subway magazine and climbed two lonesome flights of stairs back to that director's desk.

Brevities of the Business

C. J. Ver Halen, pictured to the left, is now known to New Yorkers of the great film way as assistant to the general manager of the Mica Film Corporation, though to his innumerable Chicago friends he is and always will be "Chas.," one of the founders of the Reel Fellows Club, and considered a real fellow by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. "C," as you will discover from the foregoing, stands for Charles or Charlie, while what the "J" stands for is carefully hidden away among the birth certificates filed in Cook county, Illinois. It may be "Jonah" or even "Jeremiah," though to those best acquainted with this hustling ex-advertising man it will always stand for "genial."

Charlie made his debut in the film world via the Billboard, he being connected with the Chicago office of that publication for a long period, first as a vaudeville reviewer, and later chasing film news and advertising.

Mr. Ver Halen's record on the Billboard was such that it attracted the attention of the publisher of the Moving Picture News, and ere long the popular Charlie was Chicago representative of that eastern publication, and as a result became known to practically every film man in the middle west. It was while holding this position that Charlie conceived the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, and with the assistance of several other Chicagoans called a meeting at which the present prosperous film club of Chicago was born, R. R. Nehls being chosen as president, and C. J. Ver Halen as secretary.

Later the call of New York became so strong that Charlie gave up his Chicago position and boarded a rattler for the effete east, where he drew a salary for some time from Carl Laemmle. Within the last few weeks it has been announced that Mr. Ver Halen has been selected as assistant to the general manager of the Mica Film Corporation, and probably there is not one in all the thousands who knew him that will not wish him success in his new position and congratulate the Mica Film Corporation upon its astuteness in picking out such a hustler for the job.

Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, left New York last week for a trip to the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Calif., to complete the organization and equipment of the special company which is to go to Japan for the production of "The Darling of the Gods." In Chicago, Mr. Goldfish was joined by Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players, and the two men continued their trip west together.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., was hastily called to New York City from Toronto, Canada, on Friday, February 12, on account of the sudden death of his youngest brother, Harry Carpenter Cobb, in Oakland, Calif. Mr. Cobb has arranged to bring the remains East. Funeral services will be held in Philadelphia, the home of his relatives. Interment will be in Laurel Hill cemetery, Philadelphia, on February 20.

Francis Joyner, well known in stock companies, and a legitimate actor of unusual ability, is the latest acquisition of the Lubin forces, having joined that company as juvenile man under the direction of John Ince.

Although the United States government has stopped the importation of that rare animal, the Llama, the Selig Polyscope Company has succeeded in securing two of them. With the purchase, two alpaca, resembling the Llama, also were sent to the Selig Jungle-Zoo, in Los Angeles, Calif. In addition to these a shipment of animals from Calcutta is expected soon, having arrived in New York.

That courtesy is rewarded and that it is always well to show deference to city officials is attested by the fact that Thomas H. Ince, director of Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino feature films, never has difficulty in obtaining permits from Los Angeles to use any of the municipal institutions for his pictures. Mr. Ince always instructs his directors to employ the utmost courtesy in dealing with the men in charge of the buildings that are used and to take care that no damage is done to property.

Eugene Pallette, leading man with D. W. Griffith's Mutual company, will be called on next Fall to assist in coaching a Los Angeles high school football team. Pallette formerly was a star halfback on the eleven of Culver Military Academy in Indiana.

In "Ill-Starred Babbie," the four-reel dramatic picturization of Will H. Whalen's novel of the anthracite coal regions, Miss Jackie Saunders, the Balboa Company's celebrated madcap, will have a part that exactly fits her personality and her talents.

A delegation of Pennsylvania state officials visited the Lubin plant this week and had an opportunity of seeing how motion pictures are made and were shown some spectacular special feature films that have not been released as yet. William Kerry, one of the Lubin officials, and Colonel Joseph Smiley, leading man and director, acted as guides for the party.

George Kleine has announced that Charles Judels has been engaged to play opposite Irene Fenwick in the Kleine filming of the popular James Forbes comedy, "The Commuters."

Maclyn Arbuckle, who is now appearing in "The New Henrietta" at the Cort theater, Chicago, Ill., assumed the role of critic last Sunday and journeyed to the Biograph theater, where the current Bosworth success, "It's No Laughing Matter," in which he is featured, was showing.

Jacob Wilk, publicity manager of the World Film Corporation, is now a member—not active or ex-, but honorary—of the Golden Rule Brotherhood, the Sing Sing society comprised of the convicts in the prison. The honor was conferred on Mr. Wilk on Sunday, Febuary 14, when he superintended the showing of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" to a large assemblage of convicts in the prison chapel. The only disadvantage of Mr. Wilk's fraternity is that the high sign is not popular among elite circles.

Mutual Film Corporation.—There has been a spirited demand for both common and preferred. Common has sold as high as 81, and the preferred as high as 60. It is generally understood this advance has been based substantially on good earnings and the satisfactory financial condition of the company's treasury and not upon any expectation of a change in dividend rate.

New York Motion Picture Corporation.—Contrary to general expectations, the directors did not meet last week, and consequently, there was no new information given in respect to distribution of their earnings to the stockholders.

World Film Corporation.—It is to be regretted that the management does not allow more in the way of actual earnings and real figures to reach the public. Literature distributed thus far by brokerage houses rarely submits anything tangible upon which to base a proper estimate of this company. Comparative estimates as to what certain pictures cost and what they should produce are not sufficient on which to sell stock. From a high of 6½ this stock has sold down to 4½ within the past several days. That the company's management is aggressive and is really securing results none doubts.

Thanhouser Film Corporation.—This company expects to reap the benefits of 115 prints of the twenty-third episode of "The Million Dollar Mystery," which will be released February 22. A big demand throughout the country has already been evidenced.

William H. Crane will be seen for the first time as a moving picture star at the Strand theater the week of February 21, where he will appear in his great success, "David Harum." The photo-dramatization was produced by the Famous Players Film Company. A new Keystone comedy and some scientific pictures will also be shown, as will the Strand Topical Review.

Ralph Ince, Anita Stewart, Earl Williams and Paul Scardon of the Vitagraph Company, will leave for the South next week to make the final scenes of "The Goddess."

"The Phantom Thief" is the title which has been selected for the scenario finish contest conducted by the Edison Company and the Dramatic Mirror, and the name of the writer of the winning finish is soon to be announced. The production will be released on the General program March 27.

The western division of the Kalem Company had a moving day last week and with the aid of twenty auto trucks transferred the scene of their activities from Santa Monica, Calif., to Culver City in the same state. The change was made with great rapidity and no time was lost by the producers.

William Russell, formerly of Biograph and Thanhouser, and more recently seen in leading parts in Famous Players and All Star features, left Thursday, February 11, for the Pacific Coast. Mr. Russell may connect with some company in the West while there, but at any rate he will be one of the exposition visitors which is his chief reason for going.

Jack Noble and Charles Horan also left for the Coast on Thursday, February 11, in the interest of the B. A. Rolfe Photoplay company.

The wedding of Clarence Jay Elmer to Miss Edith Anderson, which was previously announced in these columns, took place in the Lubin studio, Philadelphia, last week. Motion picture cameras recorded the event and all of the popular Lubin players were present to express their well wishes for the popular couple, who are well known to patrons of the picture theaters the world over.

George H. Verbeck, manager of the Empire Kriterion film exchange of Buffalo, N. Y., has just completed arrangements for two floors in the Erie Loan and Savings Bank building at 39 Erie street. The exchange will open in its new quarters on Washington's birthday, February 22.

Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber have severed their connection with Bosworth, Inc., and are taking a much-needed rest.

Frank Donovan, who is understood to have started the film section on the New York Star a little over a year ago, and who conducted that section up until a week ago, is now at liberty. Mr. Donovan is the author of several articles on moving picture acting schools, and it was, it is alleged, on account of these articles that several of the "fake" schools went out of business. He is now open to offers in the advertising and publicity field, and any enterprising film concern that requires a real, live publicity and advertising man can address him at 1431 Broadway, New York City.

The Selig Polyscope Company, in conjunction with the Chicago Tribune is offering $500 in prizes for the best stories on the funniest incident in a person's life. There will be four prizes and the winning scripts will be produced as photoplays by Selig. William Lord Wright, George Fitch and B. L. T., "the Tribune's funny man," are the judges. The stories should not be more than 500 words in length and should be sent to the Contest Editor, Right Off the Reels Page, Chicago Tribune.

Thomas Ricketts director of the American Company has begun work on four-reel features with a company headed by Harold Lockwood.

Almost all of Universal City in the San Fernando valley near Los Angeles, Calif., was affected by one of the worst storms which ever visited that portion of the country, last week.

Director Charles Brabin of Edison who knows too well the trouble usually involved in securing permission to use the homes of millionaires, was surprised when E. C. Benedict, the South American magnate, gave his house willingly to the picture purposes recently. Upon inquiry, it was found that Mr. Benedict has been the friend of the stage and actors because of his friendship for Booth, the eminent actor.

Dave Smith of the Western Vitagraph company has just finished his second picture, "Jones' Hypnotic Eye," a comedy that's full of giggles. He has another script in preparation and plans to spring it on us as soon as the weather clears.

Ruth Helen Davis, the distinguished writer has been secured by Jack Rose, president of the Humanology Film Company, to prepare for early production a play based on "Divorce," the famous poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, which will be released by the United Film Service.

Helen Holmes has been renewing old acquaintances during her stay in the Nevada desert, where she went with her director J. P. McGowan and his Kalem company for some of the installments for "The Hazards of Helen." Miss Helen knows lots of miners and ranchmen over the deserts of Nevada as she lived there for two years.

During the time that William D. Taylor, the Favorite Players director, is assembling the film of the six-reel feature "The High Hand," Carlyle Blackwell will put on a one-reel comedy with John Sheehan and Neva Gerber in the cast.

Miss Alice Dovey, who was featured in the two recent theatrical successes, "Papa's Darling" and "The Girl on the Film," is now on her way to the Pacific Coast studios of the Famous Players Film Company, where she will assume the feminine lead in "The Commanding Officer."

Anna May Walthall, the beautiful and accomplished sister of Henry B. Walthall, has joined the Balboa list of picture players.

Paradoxical as it may seem, it rained most of the time during the filming of "In the Sunlight," the sixth of the American Company's "light series."

Second Deputy Commissioner Lord, Inspector Faurot and Lieutenant Thurston, of the New York detective bureau, all took part in the New York police picture that Captain Harry Lambart, the Vitagraph director, is taking to be shown at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Interesting light will be thrown on the practice of polygamy in a film play based on life among the Mormons, which is to be released soon by the United Film Service.

Nolan Gane of Thanhouser is seriously ill, having caught cold last week while taking a scene which required his complete submersion in the snow.

Beginning in April, the Selig Polyscope Company will release a series of athletic films which will realistically depict feats of endurance and skill. One reel will be released weekly through the General Film Company. An innovation will be the introduction of visualized lessons on the art of physical culture.

Samuel Goldfish, speaking for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, announces that House Peters is to be featured with Rita Jolivet for that star's film debut in the Lasky picturization of "The Unafraid," which is now announced for release on March 1. Mr. Goldfish also announces the engagement for his organization of Miss Fannie Ward, the distinguished international artiste, who, by the kind permission of Mr. Marc Klaw, has entered into a contract which calls for her to make her screen debut in the immediate future under Lasky management.

The Order of Elks of Springfield, Mass., played host to representative screen stars on the night of February 11, when they entertained as their guests at a dance and banquet James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, Flo LaBadie, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Costello, Rose Tapley, King Baggot, Miriam Nesbitt, Marc MacDermott, S. S. Spedon and E. F. Kaufman. Mayor Stacey received the guests and during the evening, prize cups, named after the screeners present, were given to the dancers. A special car brought the New Yorkers back late Friday afternoon.

The Pastime theater in Waterford has been closed.

Crystal Palace, at Rocky Glen, has been secured by the Phoenix Films Corporation, which was recently chartered under the laws of Delaware, for the staging of moving pictures. The organizers of the enterprise are mostly prominent California motion picture men. Thomas Kimwood Peters is vice president and general manager of the company.

John Baker has leased the Family theater at 515 East Eighth avenue, Homestead, from Shield Brothers, and has assumed possession.

The Lyric theater, at 515 Fifth avenue, McKeesport, was destroyed by fire.

The property at the northeast corner of Germantown avenue and Venango street, Philadelphia, has been sold for $27,500 by George F. Stuempfig to Jennie Effinger, who will erect a moving-picture theater on the site.

Herbert M. Meeker will erect a moving picture house at 205-207-207½ Hamilton street, Allentown, according to plans approved by the authorities at Harrisburg, and which he expects to be ready for business by June. It will have a frontage of 40 feet and a depth of 120 feet.

By orders of Fire Marshal George Elliott and Superintendent of Police Robinson, thirty-three moving picture theaters in Philadelphia were closed January 26 and will be kept closed by the police until they pay their license fees for 1915.

Tioga possesses Philadelphia's newest motion picture playhouse. It is the modern fireproof Tioga theater at Seventeenth and Venango streets, and its doors were thrown open to the residents of that section on January 30. There is a seating capacity of over 1,700 and the absolute safety of the patrons at all times is positively assured. The policy of the theater will be to present the last word in motion picture photography. The theater will be under the management of Mark W. Wilson.

Con J. Brown and John Wolf, of Ebensburg, have purchased the Moose theater in Cresson and will take possession March 1.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

TEXAS.

Birdseye moving pictures of Houston, taken from aeroplanes at considerable altitude, will be used at the San Diego, Calif., Exposition to advertise this city. In order to carry out this plan the Houston Chamber of Commerce came to an agreement with W. R. Appemon, an airman, and Nelson M. Perry, both representing the San Diego Exposition, by which the Chamber of Commerce will have charge of an aviation meet in this city about March 20, at which aviation feats will be exhibited to advertise the exposition.

George T. Stephens is remodeling his brick business property on Main street, Dallas, for an up-to-date motion picture show.

A. Pye has let contract to H. W. Clark of Lockhart for a brick building to be erected on Main street, Smithville, to be used for a motion picture theater.

Plans for the enlargement of display and operating rooms of Francis J. Gilbert, 1929½ Main street, Dallas, have been approved by the city inspectors. "Cabiria" and other Itala productions are being distributed by Mr. Gilbert in the Lone Star state and adjoining territory with marked success.

The Star motion picture theater on Pearl street, Beaumont, is being remodeled.

VIRGINIA.

Plans have been posted on the Builders' Exchange for a motion picture theater on the west side of Granby street, 200 feet north of Freemason, Norfolk, for the Arcadian Realty Corporation, which will seat approximately 1500 people, and will cost, with furnishings, about $35,000. The new building is designed to be the finest motion picture theater in the city, and will be of Moorish and Indian architecture. It will contain a number of features novel to theater buildings, one of them being the new lighting system with no lights visible.

WASHINGTON.

The picture show in Medical Lake operated by H. A. Beal has been purchased by August Giles.

L. K. Brin, manager of the Central theater in Centralia, has closed a lease on the Bell theater in Chehalis, and the Bell will be added to the Brin chain of houses. Mr. Brin will make several needed changes in the house.

WEST VIRGINIA.

A new motion picture theater is being erected in Tiltonville.

Arch Morrison will in the near future start a motion picture show in the Jacobush building, on Main street, Benwood.

WISCONSIN.

G. Harry Smith, Jr., of Chicago, recently closed a deal whereby he became owner of the Orpheum on East Market street, and the Crystal theater on the west side, Kenosha. The theaters will be renovated and re-decorated and a new ventilating system will be installed in the Orpheum. Thomas McKibben of Chicago will manage the Crystal.

Eau Claire may soon have its seventh moving picture theater.

Slight damage resulted from the fire at the Crystal theater in Oconomowoc.

Covney & Lynch, Collin House, Broadway, Watervliet, owner and architect; A. Simpkins, contractor; alterations, 232-234 State street into motion picture theater, $2,600.

F. and P. F. Diedrich have installed a Wurlitzer Motion Picture Orchestra in their theater, the Grande, at Tonawanda.

The new Astor picture theater, Brady and Astor streets, Milwaukee, of which John H. Radtke is the owner and Samuel R. Pilot manager, opened January 30. The seating capacity is about 1,000, and the theater is equipped with all modern improvements.

The motion picture theater in Waukesha owned by Harry Jones was totally destroyed by fire.

The Merrill building in Milwaukee will be remodeled this spring and a motion picture theater will occupy part of it.

The high school in Beloit will install a moving picture machine.

Mr. Blake has sold the Mermac theater in the Washington theater building, West Bend, to Otto Weber and Alex E. Yahr.

A. A. Green, the new manager of the Neenah theater, has arrived from Antigo and will shortly open same. Mr. Green has spent much money in making this photo house modern and up-to-date and giving the people of Neenah a cozy and comfortable theater.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 13—SELIG—FEBRUARY 13.—Dynamiting a huge brick elevator at Phillipsburg, N. J.; auto snow plows at work in New York City, N. Y.; Bundle Day in New York City, N. Y.; bobsled races at millionaire colony, Huntington, Long Island; baggage train of Canadian troops passing over flooded roads near Salisbury Plain, England; steamer Dacia arrives at Norfolk, Va., and prepares to sail for Germany, despite the threats of capture by England; mid-winter ice carnival at Saranac Lake, N. Y.; rescue of crew of the bark Hougomont, near Fire Island, N. Y. N. Y.

A Night Out—ESSANAY—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 15.—This is the second Charles Chaplin comedy and the famous comic star, assisted by Ben Turpin, has the lead. Charles and Ben go out "to make a night of it" and after drinking all the places in town dry and getting into innumerable comic scrapes they return to their hotel. A dog follows them into their room and a woman in pajamas chases the dog. The husband of the woman finds her in Charles' room and decides to kill him. After throwing him around for some time he eventually sets him head down in a bath tub full of water and Charles almost drowns. In the end, however, matters are satisfactorily explained and Charles determines that he will never go out with Ben again.

The Needs of Commerce—EDISON—FEBRUARY 16.—An exceptionally interesting picture, showing how United States money is made and distributed. It treats every phase of the great work from the time the plate is engraved to the distribution of the greenbacks. Views of the various buildings in which the work is done, together with close range views of the various processes used, are given. It runs a full reel every foot of which is interesting.

C. R. C.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 14—SELIG—FEBRUARY. 18.—Seven Japanese girls, winners of recent beauty contest in their own country, arrive in San Francisco for the Panama Fair; dynamiting ice of Charles Lake, near Upper Newton Falls, Mass., during search for a child's body; Baron Admiral Dewa of Japan received by high officials in Washington, D. C.; Grace Darling on her way to the Panama Canal; numerous views of the European war taken by cameraman Wallace on the scene of action; views of the great earthquake which recently visited Italy.

The Heart of a Bandit—BIOGRAPH—FEBRUARY 22.—With a price upon his head Texas Pete, a bandit, takes to the open country. A half-breed comes upon a ranch house, while the rancher's wife is alone. He attempts to kiss her but she protects herself, and the half-breed leaves vowing vengeance. While Texas Pete is asleep, the half-breed comes upon him but, fearing to attempt his capture alone, goes for the sheriff's posse. Texas Pete awakes and realizing his danger takes refuge in the rancher's barn as the posse are about to capture him. The half-breed leaves the posse and when they ride away from the ranch he again attacks the woman and Texas Pete kills him. The rancher returns and, thinking Texas Pete is the man who has been bothering his wife, shoots him. The shots attract the posse and they ride back to the ranch. The rancher, who has been told of Texas Pete's worthiness by his wife, assumes the blame of the murder of the half-breed and attempts to conceal Texas Pete. The bandit, however, is discovered and with his dying breath clears the rancher of the half-breed's murder and asks that the reward offered for his capture be paid to the woman.

Their Happy Little Home—EDISON—FEBRUARY 22. — Coincidence furnishes plenty of amusement in this picture, under the clever treatment of Bessie Learn and Saul Harrison. Better effect might have been obtained in some of the slapstick scenes by moderating somewhat the paint-slinging contest between the two rival factions of painters. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Worth, newly married, are short of money and wish to have their house repainted. Both obtain funds on the same day from unexpected sources, and decide to surprise each other by engaging painters, and having their little home all fixed up while the other is still sorrowing over its dirty appearance. The two gangs of painters start work on different sides of the house, but come together in time, and an awful battle ensues. In the midst of it the Worths return home. It takes time and no few policemen to separate the painters, but it is accomplished at last, and the menreleased Sykesy searches for him with are dragged off to jail. On the same reel is:

Protecting Big Game—EDISON—FEBRUARY 22.—This picture was made in conjunction with the Panama Pacific Board of the State of Idaho and contains a little story of a hunter who wilfully kills protected game just for the sake of the pelt or horns. The comparatively small knowledge that the average person has of the precautions taken to prevent our big game from becoming extinct, and the manner in which people travel by snowshoe, ski and dogteams over the snow-fields of the western states gives the subject more than an educational interest.

C. R. C.

Ain't It the Truth—ESSANAY—FEBRUARY 22.—Wallace Beery is seen in this clever comedy, which will be enjoyed by all, except the maiden ladies. The story has to do with Donald Wellington, who desires to marry a certain young lady, whose father opposes the wedding. Donald fools the father into believing he has a wonderful fish bait, and demonstrates his bait by cleverly attaching live fish to father's line when father is fishing. The father then gives his consent to the marriage. Donald, meanwhile encounters one friend after another and each in turn makes him believe he is crazy, out of his head and wildly insane to think of marrying. Eventually convinced that such is the case, he decides to remain a bachelor.

The Secret Room—KALEM—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 22.—As a result of his study of the occult, Dr. Wayne's mind becomes unbalanced. He saves Buford, a derelict, from suicide, and agrees to give him all the money he wants for three months, at the end of which time his body and soul will become his (Wayne's) property. The young man agrees and at the end of the specified time comes to the doctor's home. Here he meets Edna, the doctor's niece, who caused his downfall when she broke their engagement some time before. She discovers the mistake she made by rejecting him and they are happy together again, but the doctor insists that Buford carry out his agreement. He tells him that he has an imbecile son, into whose body he intends to put Buford's mind and soul. Before the doctor can carry out his determination, however, his son dies and the shock restores senses to him. He then realizes the impossibility of what he had planned to do and frees Buford, who marries Edna.

Patsy's Elopement—(NINTH OF THE PATSY BOLIVAR SERIES)—LUBIN—FEBRUARY 22.—Patsy continues to woo Tilly, despite the fact that his purpose was merely to spite his enemy Sykesy, while the faithful Jane remains in the background. A fight takes place between Patsy and Sykesy in which the latter is injured. A warrant is sworn out for Patsy and, after an exciting chase, he is arrested. Sykesy refuses to prosecute him, however, as he prefers to take the law in his own hands. When Patsy is a club, but Jane throws him off the trail and locks him in a room at the hotel. She then tells Patsy of his danger and he persuades Tilly to elope with him at once. They leave on a motorcycle and are pursued by Uncle Grace and Sykesy in an automobile. They leave the motorcycle and take to the river in a canoe which capsizes. They borrow some old clothes from a farmer and then they go to a Justice of Peace, but he refuses to marry them, so they put up at a hotel. Tilly realizes that their elopement has been a mistake and persuades Patsy to give it up. Jane learns that the pursuers have learned of Patsy's whereabouts and again warns him, allowing him to make his escape, while penitent Tilly is taken home convinced that Patsy was never intended to be her mate.

The Red Blood of Courage—Selig—(Two Reels)—February 22.—The realistic atmosphere of the far East in this picture will doubtless prove a revelation to many fans. The desert scenes are carefully selected and clearly photographed and the acting of Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Lafayette McKee is one of the delights of the film, for each creates a character which fairly lives. The plot of the story is strong and an exciting climax gives it an appealing finish. An ethnologist and his daughter, Lydia, plan a journey into the wilds of Hindustan, on which they are to be accompanied by Roscoe Harding, the professor's assistant and the girl's fiancee. Lieutenant Tavish, a British army officer, is fascinated by Lydia and, hoping to win the girl, causes Roscoe's character to be blackened in her eyes by an adventuress. He then takes the young man's place and accompanies the party into the wilds. A Hindu prince is also attracted by the girl and determines to secure her for his harem. With his followers he attacks the camp one night, kills all within it except Tavish and Lydia, whom he carries away with him. Roscoe follows the party and when he learns what has happened he rescues Lydia and the Englishman. They are pursued by the Hindus, but after a thrilling fight on a swaying bridge they escape. The Englishman then confesses his duplicity and Roscoe and Lydia are reconciled. C. J. C.

When Samuel Skidded—Vitagraph—February 22.—Samuel Peckham, a middle-aged sport, slips while getting off a car and is slightly injured. His wife determines to get all she can out of the car company and asks $50,000, under threat of suing the company. The company treats the matter as a joke and the suit is set for a certain date. A young lady detective is hired by the company. She fascinates Peckham and gets him to accompany her to a tango party, as he is really uninjured despite the limp he frames in the presence of the company's claim agent. At the trial the company's attorney has Peckham show them how the injury has affected his walk and then asks him to show them how he walked before the fall. Peckham gives himself away at this point by walking briskly across the room and when the girl detective introduces her evidence the case is dismissed. Peckham incidentally gets in bad with his wife because of his conduct. Kate Price featured.

His Romany Wife—Biograph—(Two Reels)—February 23.—Travers, a civil engineer, meets Zara, the belle of a gypsy tribe, while in the mountains, and she tells his fortune, saying that he will attain joy through srorow. In time he falls in love with Zara, who is also wooed by Tonio, the leader of the band. Travers and Zara are married and the union is blessed by a child. She is happy for a while, but in time the roving life of her people calls her and she returns to them. Travers takes his child to his mother and meets Alice Gray, a childhood sweetheart, who still loves him. Zara attracts the attention of a theatrical manager and he persuades her to become a star, she being billed as La Zarita. Travers hears that Zara is dead and Alice's tenderness leads to his falling in love with her and they become engaged. While attending the theater one night, Travers recognizes Zara and she him. He spends a night of suffering, as he realizes that he cannot marry Alice, but in the morning he reads that the dancer was killed by the jealous Tonio, while she was in the manager's apartments the night before. He is then free to marry a woman of his own people.

From a Life of Crime—Edison—February 23.—Marcia Bowers, an orphan, falls into the hands of thieves and is brought up to assist them in their operations. Rev. Matthew rescues her from them and later falls in love with her. One day she disappears and the next time he meets her she is employed in the Fletcher household. She confesses that she is there to help her "guardian" rob the house. Mr. Fletcher notifies the police and lays a trap for the thief. Croft is captured, and Marcia turns out to be the Fletchers' grandchild, and becomes engaged to the Rev. Matthew. C. R. C.

The Surprise of My Life—Essanay—February 23.—A clever mystery story in which Bryant Washburn, Thomas Commerford and Ruth Stonehouse are featured. The action takes place in the country home of John Radcliffe, a wealthy uncle of Jack Davis, where a house party is in progress. A series of petty thefts breaks up the calm of the house party, and eventually Pryor, a friend of Jack's, is summoned to see if he can solve the mystery, since no way can be discovered by which a thief could possibly enter the house. It finally develops that Jack, ere going to bed each night, has been reading a book relating to the sub-conscious mind re-action, and on falling asleep himself appropriates the various things which have disappeared. An alarm clock is so arranged that when a thief touches a certain part it will ring its alarm, and thus Jack is amazed to be awakened just as he is on the point of stealing the silver trophy cup. N. G. C.

She Would Be a Cowboy—Kalem—February 23.—Helen masquerades as a cowboy and secures a job with Joe, a rancher. Joe is in love with Hazel and sends Helen with messages to her. Hazel falls in love with Helen, not suspecting her sex, and this leads to many complications, including a duel between Helen and Hazel's father. Finally Helen's identity is made known and Joe and Hazel are reconciled, while Helen vows never again to play cowboy. On the same reel is:

Tomboys—Kalem—February 23.—Four men take their wives to the beach for a picnic and the wives for a lark dress in their husbands' bathing suits and go swimming. The husbands, mistaking the wives for sea lions, shoot at them and the women in terror swim out to a reef. When the tide rises they are in danger of being washed out to sea, but are rescued by their hubbys and swear never again to impersonate men.

Poet and Peasant—Lubin—February 23.—Artemis Long, a poor poet, lives in a boarding house and is displeased because Lotta Luks, a slavey, continually steals his poems. She is secretly in love with him and treasures his verses. A beautiful girl takes up a residence in the mansion next to the boarding house and Arty, who has learned the "flower language," believes she is in love with him when she places some plants in the window. His friend, Howe. S. Tricks, visits him one day and when the plants appear in the window leaves hurriedly. Lotta suddenly inherits a fortune from her brother in the old country but keeps this a secret. She sends many gifts to Arty, but he believes they come from the beautiful girl next door. Unknown to the poet, Lotta pays for the publishing of a book of his verses and then buys the entire edition. Arty believes that it is Howe who has done him this favor and, in his glory, throws a book across to the girl in the mansion. He is rather shaken up, however, to see both her and his friend, Howe, laughing over it, for he doesn't know that Howe is her sweetheart and that the plants in the window were a signal for him that her father was not at home. He determines to hang himself and goes to the attic for this purpose, but just before he commits the deed Lotta enters all dressed up and he realizes that she is the only woman in the world for him, though he never knows that she was the one who financed the publication of his books.

Slim Higgins—SELIG—FEBRUARY 23.—Tom Mix gives a popular characterization of a bad man of the West in this production and, as usual, introduces several thrilling features. Slim Higgins causes terror in the district and no one dare approach him. While a posse is scouting for him one day, he assists an old settler and his daughter, who are being molested by a man who attempts to collect toll for use of a water hole in the desert. He is captured, but the girl pleads for his life and he is freed. He learns then for the first time what love is and determines that he will go straight. The western atmosphere is splendidly preserved by many realistic settings.

The Still Small Voice—VITAGRAPH—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 23.—Musa, a wild dumb girl, is feared and hated by every inhabitant of a small Western mining town. She inherits a large fortune and John Oom and Hapgood, two miners, each plan to steal it by marrying her. They reach an agreement and pretend to quarrel over her. John is "victorious" and marries her. She discovers the plot, however, when she finds them planning to split her fortune between them, and kills John. Hapgood is arrested for the crime and is sentenced to be hung. Musa hears the still small voice of conscience and hangs herself, leaving a note confessing her crime and clearing Hapgood. Helen Gardner featured.

The Pest of the Neighborhood—EDISON—FEBRUARY 24.—This is a split-reel comedy. Widdy Mulligan owns a goat that is almost human in its endeavors to get in everybody's way. After meandering about the village one morning he returns to Widdy Mulligan's house followed by a crowd of angry citizens. The widow rescues him by brandishing a shovel dangerously near the heads of the foremost of the would-be avengers. On the same reel is:

The Manufacture of Big Guns—EDISON—FEBRUARY 24.—This contains more interest than the average educational subject, showing how the big fourteen and sixteen inch guns for the United States warships and coast defense are turned down to size, bored, jacketed and fired. The last scene was taken at West Point, where a sixteen-inch gun is so mounted that it commands the Hudson river for a distance of twenty-five miles to the north. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Bachelor and the Back-Pedal—ESSANAY—FEBRUARY 24.—Another of the ever popular George Ade fable series in which Sydney Ainsworth and Lillian Drew have the leading roles. This, like another Essanay release of the same week, will be far from popular with maiden ladies the country over. A bachelor with a salary of $20 per week falls desperately in love with a certain girlie, and after carefully figuring out how he can stretch his $20 per week into an expense account for two, he carefully saves up $25, $22 of which he blows for a diamond ring, and $3 for flowers. Visiting the home of his lady love, the bachelor is interrupted in his wooing by the call of another friend. When his lady love boastfully displays certain bargains she has secured that day, and the bachelor learns that a certain coat she was able to "snap up" for a trifling $850, a new hat she had "secured at a bargain" for only $65, and that a lace collar she had "discovered" is only valued at $39.50, he takes advantage of the first opportunity to "beat it" without even mentioning the ring. N. G. C.

Old Isaacson's Diamonds—KALEM—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 24.—Three thieves break into the home of old Isaacson, a diamond broker, and rob him of his gems. Two of the men are captured, but Snake Henley, the leader, escapes, and, as the police are unable to track him down, Ruth, the girl detective, and her assistant, Warrington, are called upon to solve the case. Warrington learns that Snake has a sweetheart named Queenie and Ruth takes advantage of this by masquerading as a woman of the underworld and by arousing Queenie's jealousy. Snake's sweetheart then tells the police of his hiding place. The police and Warrington trap Snake, but he escapes. Ruth again comes to the rescue, effects his capture and announces herself ready for her next case.

The Love of Woman—LUBIN—(THREE REELS)—FEBRUARY 24.—Alan Baird, the younger son of the paymaster-general of the U. S. army, neglects his sweetheart, Muriel, for Laura Carew, an actress, whose picture he has painted. Laura is an adventuress and plays with Alan's affections, exciting the jealousy of her leading man, Guy Manners. Guy is revenged upon Alan when he gets him into a card game and causes him to lose all his money and to be disowned by his father. David, Alan's brother, a paymaster in the army, returns from a distant post to obtain funds for his district and is told of Alan's actions by Muriel. David confronts Laura and he falls in love with her, though he will not admit it. Laura also falls in love with him and realizes how unworthy her past life has been. Guy causes Alan to steal government money from his father's safe and when he loses this and is renounced by Laura, who determines to give up the life she has been leading, he awakes to his true condition. David secures the money from Guy and tells his father that he took it because he was returning to his post immediately. Alan returns to Muriel and is forgiven and Laura agrees to David's proposal that she begin life anew with him. George Soule Spencer and Lilie Leslie featured.

Scars—SELIG — FEBRUARY 24.—Without being especially strong in either plot or acting this production will, nevertheless, please the average audience. The daughter of a miner elopes with a young man of the settlement, who is all right while he is sober, but who is extremely brutal while intoxicated. While under the influence of liquor he attempts to embrace her, she falls down a mountain side and a scar is left on her face. He promises to reform and they go to the mountains where he is an ideal mate until the liquor again conquers him. When she learns that he already has a wife, she leaves him and returns home. Later a young man and a woman come to the mountains and the worthless man makes love to the girl. The woman he had deceived attempts to kill him, but her bullet strikes the other young man, leaving a scar on his face. When the worthless man tries to persuade the young woman to elope with him the woman he wronged confronts him and, in attempting to escape her wrath, he falls into the rapids of a river and is drowned. As the girl whose life has been blighted by him turns away the other young man stops and tells her that the young woman he is traveling with is his sister. They then discover they are in love. C. J. C.

The Young Man Who Figgered—VITAGRAPH—FEBRUARY 24.—Papa Tubbs is determined to secure a wealthy son-in-law for his daughter, Nan. Bobby Tucker meets Nan on the street and they fall in love. Papa objects at first, but when he finds a note which Bobby has dropped saying that his profits will be $50,000 and later learns that he is the son of Major-General Tucker, he welcomes his attentions to Nan. When it is discovered that the enormous fortune will come if Bobby will win a lottery ticket and that Major-General Tucker is a member of the Salvation Army, Bobby is not so popular with Papa Tubbs and is chased from the house. He elopes with Nan, however, and next day when Papa learns that the lottery prize was won by Bobby, everything is all right.

The Call of Her Child—Biograph—February 25.—The farmer's wife is happy with her husband and their little son, until she visits a school friend in the city and learns the pleasures of society. A handsome artist becomes infatuated with her and she tells her husband that she will never return to him. A young artist, passing through the country, sees her little son at the gate of their home and is told by the child that he is waiting for his mamma to return. This furnishes the artist with an inspiration and he paints a picture of the boy and entitles it "Waiting for Mamma." At the salon this picture attracts considerable attention, and when the wife visits the exhibition with her artist-suitor she sees it. The call of her child overpowers her and she hurries back to the farm. Her husband at first does not wish to take her back, but because of their child a reconciliation is effected.

Sophie Changes Her Mind—Essanay—February 25.—One of the Snakeville comedies that have become so popular in which Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin are featured. Sophie becomes engaged to Slippery Slim but later, when he finds her flirting with Mustang Pete, the engagement is broken off. Slim, determined to foil his rival, hires two knaves to kidnap Sophie and arranges to meet them at the end of the bridge. Pete learns of the plot and with Sophie's consent, dons one of her gowns, and then carefully poses as Slim's lady fair. He is kidnapped by the knaves and taken to the bridge where Slim awaits his coming with the minister. As the ceremony is finished, Pete removes his veil, and Slim discovers that he has been stung. To carry the joke to a finish, Pete leads a posse of his friends in a chase after Slim, and later he is hung head down from a bridge, being ducked occasionally in a stream below, while Sophie on the bank nearby gives him the merry laugh. N. G. C.

Beneath the Sea—Lubin—(Two Reels)—February 25.—Ned Ellis, a draftsman in the employ of the Submarine Construction Company, and Alice Herring, the daughter of the president, are sweethearts. Herring wishes his daughter to marry Mason, the secretary of the company, and she is forced to agree to the announcement of the engagement, though she vows she will never consider it binding. Harris, an employee, who is given to drinking, is reprimanded by Ned and Mason takes advantage of the man's ill feeling to use him as a tool to ruin the draftsman. Ned invents an under water exhaust for submarine engines and when the test is made for the government Mason gets Harris to tamper with the machinery. When the submarine is below water the engine fails to work and Ned and the others within it are in danger of death. Ned, however, is shot up through the torpedo tube in time to save the lives of the others. Alice saves Harris' child when it becomes dangerously ill and when the workman sobers and learns that largely through him Ned is about to be discharged and that Alice is grieving over this, he exposes Mason's duplicity. The secretary is at once released and Herring gives his consent to the marriage of Ned and Alice, and it is evident that the invention will prove a success when the engine is left unhampered.

Paste and Paper—Mina—February 25.—Netty gives a birthday party at which Fatty Zamm, one of her admirers, monopolizes all her attention. Happy Harry, her favored suitor, is forced to sit on the porch because he is in bad with her parents. She goes out to visit him and, upon returning to the house, tells him that she will soon join him again, but among her many other admirers, forgets that he exists. Fatty and Percy, another suitor, get into a fight in which ice cream and other soft missiles are thrown, thus ruining the wall paper. Netty's father then rushes for the paper hanger to redecorate the house and Harry manages to take the paper hanger's place. When he is discovered by Netty's father and Fatty a battle royal takes place in which paste and wall paper are liberally distributed. The end comes when Fatty and Harry agree to call things quits and Netty joins them in an affectionate embrace.

The Worthier Man—Vitagraph—February 25.—Bob Hall, a carefree cowboy, defends Echo, an Indian maiden, from an intoxicated tenderfoot and wins her love. They go to his mountain cabin to live, as Bob fears he will be prosecuted for his attack on the tenderfoot. Later he learns from his friend, Jack, the sheriff, that the tenderfoot has exonerated him, and leaving Echo he returns to the settlement. He meets Mary, the niece of the man at whose home he stops, and falls in love with her. Jack is also in love with Mary, but steps back when he sees that his friend loves her. While intoxicated, Bob insults Mary and when he becomes sober apologizes and is forgiven, but the girl will have nothing more to do with him. After his meeting with Mary, Echo confronts Bob and, when he says he is through with her, she kills him. Mary is accused of the crime, but Echo's suicide and confession clears her and she realizes that her worthy lover is Jack.

The Boob and the Magician—Biograph — February 26. — The magician makes his audience's hair stand up by the tricks he performs. Young women appear out of clouds of smoke, apples and eggs jump out of a hat borrowed from a farmer and things are picked from behind person's ears with the greatest of ease. As he is about to put on some special tricks he calls for the assistance of someone and the boob climbs down from the gallery and offers his services. His first mistake is to allow the rope supporting the "Floating Maiden" to be seen by the audience and before the magician can make food appear out of the air the boob eats the pies and other things which are behind the scenes. The big act arrives and the magician goes into a barrel which is to be filled with water. The boob attempts to fill the barrel with a hose and incidentally sprinkles the audience freely. He then goes away and leaves the magacian locked in the barrel for several minutes. He finally is found and brought back to free the magic worker, after the latter is about half drowned. The audience appreciated the show more than is everything happened as it should.

The Life of Abraham Lincoln—Edison—(Two Reels)—February 26.—This subject, dealing with life of the great man who is beloved by the nation, was reviewed on page 297 of last week's issue under the incorrect date of February 16.

Stars Their Courses Change—Essanay—(Three Reels)—February 26.—A three act love story concerning a certain wager made by a beautiful girl, that she can compel the author of a successful novel to fall in love with her within three weeks. Robert Cameron, the author, while visiting his friend, Howard Chandler, meets Olivia Staunton, a friend of Edith Chandler's. When Olivia learns, that, though beloved by many, Cameron has never himself fallen in love, she boasts that she can conquer him, and true to her promise succeeds in less than a week. Cameron is really in love and kisses her, declaring that sometime the memory of that kiss will bring her back to him. As time goes on Olivia begins to believe the statement true though Cameron has assumed an air of indifference. Thinking to spite him she announces her engagement to Arthur Therril, and Cameron is completely broken up, and writes her a note admitting his love, and then returns to his lonely cabin in the woods. Olivia leaves a note to the effect that she has gone to find Cameron, and disappears. Therril visits Cameron's cabin and demands his sweetheart. Cameron takes this as an insult, and while the two are struggling, the priest enters carrying Olivia, whom he had found half frozen outside the cabin. When revived she tells Cameron of her love and they are married by the priest. Francis X. Bushman and Edna Mayo featured.

The Human Investment—LUBIN—FEBRUARY 26.—Delicia Twombly, raised in modest surroundings, aspires for the luxuries of wealth and rejects John Hastings, a poor suitor. She persuades her father to invest his money in her rather than in the bonds which he had planned to buy and goes to the city, where several of her girl acquaintances have won millionaires as husbands. She finds conditions different than she expected, however, as the wealthy men she meets are not of the marrying kind. In time her funds are exhausted and rather than return home she secures work in a chorus. Again she meets wealthy men, but none are willing to make her their wife. At a party given by another chorus girl she becomes disgusted with the life she is living and locks herself in her room. A soft rap on the door causes her to open it and John walks in. She has learned her lesson and gladly returns with him prepared to face poverty. She discovers on returning home, however, that John has struck oil on his property and is now a rich man. Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe featured.

The Millionaire Cabby — SELIG — FEBRUARY 26.—A pleasing comedy with many laughable incidents. William Stowell, Edwin Wallock and Adele Lane have the leading roles. Harry Page, a rich young idler, loves Doris Wilson, but her father says they cannot marry until Harry has earned $1,000. Harry secures a position by buying off an old cab driver and himself handling the reins. He also sends the cab driver to a banquet, dressed as an English lord and that individual has a time of his life. A couple of burglars force Harry to drive them to the Wilson home where they have planned to perpetrate a robbery. Harry's rival persuades Doris to elope with him, but through a clever ruse he foils both plans and the end finds Doris in his arms, thoroughly convinced that he is the one she is to marry. He incidentally secures $1,000 and when Papa Wilson is convinced of Harry's worthiness he agrees to the marriage. C. J. C.

A Man of Parts—VITAGRAPH—FEBRUARY 26.—Eb blows into a country town and not only secures a fine job, but also becomes manager of the Dramatic Society and attracts the attention of Emmy, the belle of the burg. Bill Swiggles, the town bully, has no use for Eb, however, and is largely responsible for him having little or nothing to say about casting the players for the production they are to put on. Despite the opposition everything points to the success of the play, but Bill manages to get all the players to strike on the night of the first performance. Eb, however, proves equal to the occasion and, with the assistance of the stage-hand, plays all the parts. Bill's plot is discovered and he receives his just reward. Emmy recognizes in Eb her true hero and permits him to clasp her in his arms.

Ham and the Jitney Bus—VITAGRAPH—FEBRUARY 26.—Ham and Bud find a wallet containing $20 and, though they are exceedingly hungry, they invest the money in a jitney bus and plan to do a rushing business. Passengers do not take kindly to them, however, and after Ham has impersonated a woman and failed to attract any business, they are forced to grab passers-by and force them into the bus. Their initial trip proves exceedingly exciting, as the bus gives a fine exhibition of a machine running in four directions at the same time. Finally it tips into a sea of mud and the passengers pursue Ham and Bud. They manage to right the machine again and make their escape, but it blows up and, when the two descend from the clouds, they find that the passengers are still hot on their trail. A well nearby offers the only place of concealment and both dive head first into it.

Rose O' the Shore—BIOGRAPH—FEBRUARY 27.—Rose, the wilful daughter of a fisherman, plays with the hearts of two young men and plants a rose bush, telling them that when it blooms she will decide which she will marry. When the flower appears she plucks it and throws it over a cliff, telling them that the one who reaches it first will win her hand. The younger of the two risks his life to secure it, falls and breaks his leg, while the older one takes the safe road to the bottom of the cliff and returns with the rose. The girl agrees to marry him and on the day of the wedding the younger man, who has been cared for by the daughter of another fisherman, learns that he has lost Rose forever. It does not affect him, however, for during his confinement he has learned to love the other girl, who is really worthy of his affection.

The Experiment — EDISON — FEBRUARY 27.—The original touch in the story, and the splendid acting of Bessie Learn, Richard Tucker, Saul Harrison and Robert Brower make this a strong and attractive drama. Max Weldon, visiting with his friend, George Foster, is called upon to show his skill as a hypnotist. When Mr. Foster is found at midnight, stabbed with the knife held by his daughter, Grace, the others think that she tried to kill him while under the spell, but later learn that some burglars are responsible for the act. Mr. Foster recovers, and all decide that they will try no more experiments of that kind.

Broncho Billy's Brother—ESSANAY—FEBRUARY 27.—Broncho's brother has a quarrel with a Mexican, and is licked in the fight which follows. Returning home, Broncho's brother, while under the influence of liquor, strikes his mother, and Broncho, hearing her screams, comes to the rescue. While outside with his brother, the Mexican approaches and shoots his brother, then hastens to the sheriff and tells him that Broncho Billy has killed his brother. The sheriff and his men arrive, but Broncho meanwhile has escaped and, visiting a saloon in which the Mexican has sought refuge, compels him to confess the crime, and when the sheriff appears, Broncho is able to turn over to him the real criminal. N. G. C.

The Open Draw Bridge—KALEM—FEBRUARY 27.—Benton, a railroad detective, is assigned to run down some crooks, who have been breaking into freight cars near the station where Helen is telegraph operator. With the girl's assistance, he manages to overpower the crooks, who work in conjunction with a band of river pirates, but they escape after fastening him to the side ladder of a freight car with his own handcuffs. By a feat of great daring Helen rescues him and together they manage to trap the leader of the crooks and he is sentenced to prison. The river pirates make a desperate attempt to rescue him by raising the draw bridge over which the train carrying Benton and the crook has to cross. Helen, however, frustrates this plot, although it almost costs her life.

The Millinery Man—LUBIN—FEBRUARY 27.—At a church bazaar in a rural district Ernestine, the wealthiest and prettiest girl in the town, is the center of attraction. Dick Devlin, her fiance from the city, attends the affair and wins a prize for trimming hats. Ernestine tells Dick that if he really cares for her he will set up a millinery shop for one year and donate the profits to her pet scheme, a cemetery for dogs. Dick, an idle son of the rich, in a thoughtless mood agrees to the plan and the shop is opened. Nora Lyman, who has been the only milliner in town, is practically put out of business because of the popularity of Dick's shop. When Dick accidentally learns of her trouble he determines to help her. An artist friend of Ernestine's makes a slurring remark about Dick and, when the latter inflicts physical punishment upon the weakling, Ernestine breaks the engagement. Dick takes Nora into partnership and when he receives a letter from his father, some time later, telling him to return home and prepare to enter into the business he tells Nora that he will not go unless she accompanies him, to which she readily agrees. Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman featured.

Hearts of the Jungle—SELIG—FEBRUARY 27.—The idea expressed in this picture—the comparing of the heart of a leopardess to the heart of a human mother—is an exceedingly pleasing one. The treatment given this production is also pleasing and the picture will, without a doubt, be received with welcome in the vast majority of houses. The leopardess and her two cubs furnish much amusement through their antics, while the acting of

Lamar Johnstone and Edith Johnson more than upholds the histrionic end of the picture. There is very little to the plot. It deals with the capturing of a leopardess' cub by a young Englishman, who has established his home in South Africa and who has a wife and child, and the attempt of the leopardess to secure her offspring. As the Englishman has taken a cub home the leopardess comes to the cabin and carries away her young, but does not touch either the Englishman's wife or son. The Englishman, who has been out hunting, sees the leopardess leave the cabin and is about to shoot her, but his wife stops him and says that she only did what any mother would do. C. J. C.

A Daughter of Strange Inheritance—Vitagraph—February 27.—Despite the warnings of his friend, Dr. Adams, William Randolph marries Mlle. Lucille, a vaudeville performer who is given to the drink habit. For a while she controls herself, but soon after the birth of their daughter she again takes to drink and dies in the arms of her husband. Sixteen years later Margaret, the child, is dismissed from the seminary which she has been attending, because she has inherited her mother's curse, and while at times perfectly normal, is at other times disagreeable and vicious. Dr. Adams, who now owns a sanatarium, believes he can cure the girl and takes her in hand. By use of hypnotic power and by showing her the terrible examples of drink, he finally does cure her and returns her to her father perfectly normal in every way. Randolph is very happy to think that his daughter has recovered completely from the curse of her strange inheritance.

Mutual Program

Who Got Stung—Princess—February 19.—The Brays, newlyweds, receive a letter from Mrs. Bray's mother, stating that she is coming for an extended visit. Bray takes his mother-in-law's picture down to the office with him to remind him of his troubles. One of his friends, Harry, decides to play a joke on him, and dresses up to look like the awaited self-invited guest. A mine under the front steps and a breakaway ceiling in the guest room are a couple of the things which Bray has prepared for his mother-in-law's welcome. The limit is reached, however, when Bray pours tabasco in Harry's whisky.

Above Par—Reliance—February 19.—Berry, a broker, likes Dick Carson, a newspaper man and his daughter's fiancee, but has little regard for the youth's profession. Stirling, another broker, determines to ruin Berry because he refuses to enter a crooked scheme, and has one of his men, Morton, placed in Berry's office. The latter loses heavily because of the leak of information. Carson scents a story in the affair and takes it up. He succeeds in spoiling Stirling's game, and piles up enough evidence against the broker to assure his conviction in court. Mr. Berry then changes his opinion about newspaper work.

The Boundary Line—Reliance—(Two Reels)—February 20.—The Malotek and Canewa Indian tribes are camped near the Coyote wind-break for the hunting season. They agree upon a certain line as separating their hunting grounds. Awasos, the son of the Canewa chieftain, slays a deer in the Malotek territory and is captured by the braves of the rival tribe. Awaneta, the Malotek chieftain's daughter, recognizes the prisoner as her lover, and that night frees him. She confesses, and is left in a cave to starve. Awasos and his braves free her, and take her to their camp. The Maloteks regret their cruelty, and return to the cave to free Awaneta. They trail her to the Canewa camp and there make peace and celebrate the marriage of the children of the two chieftains.

Two Jones—Royal—February 20.—Two men, both named Jones and exact doubles of each other, live in adjoining towns. Neither is aware of the existence of his double. One is married and henpecked, and the other elopes with his sweetheart. The two couples visit Cedarhurst at the same time, and become badly mixed up. The father of the eloping Jones arrives, and vents his wrath on the wrong person. At last both wives and both husbands meet, and get matters straightened out.

His Sister's Kiddies—Thanhouser—February 21.—Samuel Bender's will is made out in favor of his sister's two children until he undertakes the task of minding them for a few days. The experience causes him to change his will, and make it in favor of the orphan dogs of Gotham.

The Muffled Bell—Reliance—February 22.—Dan Ward, detective, is sent to investigate the sailors' outfitting shop in Captain Flinn's establishment. Nettie Howard, who tends shop for the captain, is in love with Dan, and pleads for his release when he is overcome in the basement by Basil Cerino and his gang of revolutionists, but to no avail. While Flinn is out of the room, Nettie muffles the bell by means of which the desperadoes are warned of the approach of danger, and later makes her escape and informs Dan's superior, the surveyor of the port, of the detective's capture. The surveyor details several detectives on the case, and they round up the whole gang, Flinn being unable to warn Cerino of his danger because of the muffled bell.

The Constable's Daughter—Beauty—February 23.—Joseph Harris, as a chicken thief, and Fred Gamble, as a constable, both through their make-up and acting will draw many laughs in this picture. Virginia Kirtley appears in the title role. The settings in the woodland are very prettily photographed. The constable, in an attempt to arrest a chicken thief, is thrown into the mill creek and has a chill. His daughter becomes constable during his illness and arrests not only the chicken thief, but also a young city chap whom she has found fishing in forbidden waters. When the constable returns to work he attempts to chase the city chap out of town, but his daughter frees the tramp and when that worthy and the sheriff engage in a fight, the city chap proves himself a hero and wins the constable's consent to wed his daughter. The Fatal Black Bean—Majestic—February 23.—Anita, a Mexican girl, falls in love with Gordon, an American, hated by her brother, Pedro. She learns that Pedro has planned Gordon's assassination and decides to save him by being granted the fatal mission herself. During the drawing she takes a black bean from her waist, and the others, thinking that she has drawn the fatal bean, give her the bomb and instruct her where to plant it. Pedro discovers the bean still in the hat, overtakes his sister and watches her while she plants the bomb. Secretly, however, she has removed the fuse. Gordon finds the unexploded bomb, and looking for its thrower, sees Anita struggling with Pedro in the distance. He arrives just in time to save the girl's life, and Pedro and his horse fall over the cliff to certain death below.

The Adventure of Florence—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—February 23.—John Travers is greatly impressed with Florence Clark's appearance, and, accidentally learning her telephone number, calls her up one evening and asks her to dine with him. She has just had an unpleasant interview with her parents, who insist on her marrying Dr. Ward, and in an impulsive moment accepts Travers' invitation. They are mutually attracted to each other. When father learns that Travers holds an important interest in the same mines in which Dr. Ward is interested he withdraws his objections to the match.

She Never Knew—American—February 24.—Louise Lester, as the mother in this production, does some very clever acting and is supported by such American players as Vivian Rich, Harry Von Meter, Charlotte Burton and Jack Richardson. The settings are carefully chosen and the photography is good. The wayward son, despite his mother's and sister's pleadings, continues to lead a fast life and eventually steals from his employer and runs away with an adventuress. The mother places a light in the window every night and says that some day her son will return to her. The daughter's sweetheart gives the women a pistol to protect them against a criminal who has escaped from a nearby prison. One night the son, who killed the adventuress after she had proven unfaithful to him and who becomes a fugitive, returns home and the mother, who in the meantime has encountered the criminal, fires the bullet which kills her son. The daughter's sweetheart discovers whom it is that the mother has killed and keeps the fact from her. As the film closes we see the mother again placing the light in the window.

The Grudge—BRONCHO—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 24.—Rio Ed and Dick Wayne become bitter enemies. Dick is a consumptive, and Rio takes him to his cabin and nurses him with the single object in view of getting him into shape to fight. Dick's sister, Madge, comes to town seeking her brother, and finds Rio taking care of him. She thanks Rio for his kindness to Dick, and takes her brother back to the village. A little later Dick and Rio meet in a saloon to finish their feud. Mercidio, who has long been kept away from Madge by Dick, takes this opportunity to knife Madge's brother in the back. Rio is accused of the stabbing. Dick's wound is not fatal. Mercidio attempts to force his attentions upon Madge, but she is rescued by Rio, who compels the saloonkeeper to confess to the knifing. In the fight that follows, Mercidio is killed. Rio Ed determines to live up to Madge's idea of him.

The Man at the Key—DOMINO—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 25.—Bob North, station master as Crescoe, is so excited over the birth of a baby at his house that he forgets to deliver a train order, thus causing a collision for which he is sentenced to five years in prison for criminal negligence. During a mutiny in the prison yard he makes his escape. Shot by the guard, he makes his way to the depot at Valley Junction. He hears the telegraph instrument clicking frantically inside, breaks in, takes the train order, and averts a collision between the flyer and the president's special. He is recaptured and taken back to prison, but a few days later his wife arrives with a pardon from the governor, and the railroad president has him reinstated in his old position at Crescoe.

The Sheriff's Streak of Yellow—KAY BEE—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 26.—Sheriff Hale is suspected of cowardice when he fails to capture a noted outlaw in the vicinity. Back of his apparent lack of pluck, however, lies his gratitude to Bill Todd's mother, who once saved him from death in the desert. He warns Todd that if he ever returns to that part of the country he will be shot. Meanwhile, the townspeople demand Hale's resignation and receive it. Later Bill Todd and his gang attempt to raid the Gold Bar bank, and are captured through the bravery of the ex-sheriff. Hale forces Todd to commit suicide to escape being captured. The ex-sheriff receives back his star and position, also the confidence of the community.

Animated Weekly, No. 154—UNIVERSAL—FEBRUARY 17.—The rescue of the crew of oil steamer Chester by S. S. Philadelphia; the result of an overflow of the Ohio River at Cincinnati, Ohio; a wreck on the elevated, New York City; British bark Hougomont ashore near Fire Island, N. Y.; Bundle Day in New York City; the blasting of a 140-foot tower, Easton, Pa.; making bandages for the wounded in Europe, New York City; war section showing many views of German and Allied forces, both on the battlefield and preparing for the struggle at home; cartoons by Hy. Mayer.

Dance Creations—BIG U—FEBRUARY 23.—Here is a whole reel of dance creations by Martin Brown and Roszika Dolly, star dancers in "Hello Broadway," now playing in New York. One does not have to be a dance enthusiast to enjoy this artistic demonstration.

Haunted Hearts—GOLD SEAL—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 23.—Rose Lane, Jack Devore and Nathan White, while cruising on Nathan's yacht in the South Seas, sight a small island. Rose sees a pretty flower growing on the face of the cliff and expresses a wish for it. Jack and Nathan both spring overboard and swim to the island for it. Jack reaches there first, and secures the flower, but falls from the cliff and breaks his leg. Nathan takes advantage of his helpless condition, seizes the flower, and swims back to the yacht with it, telling those on board that Jack has been drowned. A year later finds Rose and Nathan married, and Jack, now well and strong, living like a hermit on the island. In time Nathan regrets his action, and, seeing that Rose is still depressed because of her love for Jack, returns to the island for him. He becomes ill, and is taken to South America by Jack, who supports and nurses him. Four years later Jack, now wealthy, returns to New York and arranges to have Nathan operated upon. Rose, forced to work to support herself and her little boy, is head nurse in the hospital. The operation restores Nathan's memory, but leaves him so weak that he dies, but not before making a confession to Rose and reuniting her with Jack.

Nellie, the Pride of the Fire House—NESTOR—FEBRUARY 23.—Nellie is the sweetheart of the fire chief. The factory where she works catches fire and all the firemen go to the rescue of the pretty girls, leaving the homely ones to perish. The inspector and the chief vie for the honor of saving Nellie. The chief succeeds, but the inspector later has Nellie kidnaped, and a chase by the chief and his men over the tops of the houses, follows. The chief rescues her finally from the inspector and his 1902 auto.

The Prayer of a Horse—BIG U—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 25.—A feud exists between the Collins and Grey families. One day while Tom Collins is making love to Dolly Grey, the girl's father approaches. Tom's horse, Dobbin, attempts to warn his master by pulling his handkerchief out of his pocket, but is too late. Tom's father appears on the scene just in time to prevent Grey from shooting the young fellow. Grey disowns Dolly and she marries Tom. During the hard times which follow Dobbin is sold and has many adventures. One day Tom's little girl has her father buy a cart horse to save it from being beaten by its owner. The horse turns out to be old Dobbin.

The Runaway Closet—STERLING—FEBRUARY 25.—Dot loves Charley much, but a police uniform more. So Charley borrows the sergeant's uniform without that gentleman's permission, and successfully routs Dot's policemen wooers, until the sergeant himself appears in search of his missing uniform. Charley hides in a clothes closet and starts to run, taking the closet with him. It lands him at the bottom of a cliff, very much bruised, though a wiser man.

The Treason of Anatole—IMP—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 26.—Anatole, an aged violinist, is unable to find work, and hoards his little savings, subsisting on poor wine and hard bread. During the evenings he forgets his troubles by playing his violin. The family downstairs, the Von Holms, fall into the habit of listening for his music every night. One night they do not hear him play, and Fritz, the father, fearing him ill, goes upstairs to investigate. He carries the starving Anatole downstairs, nurses him back to health, and finds him a position in an orchestra. His straitened circumstances once relieved, Anatole's condition improves rapidly, both physically and financially. Then comes war and Anatole and Fritz return to their mother countries. At first the French commander turns Anatole away because of his age, but when the latter shows his skill and agility at fencing the officer accepts him. Fritz is captured within the French lines, and, being dressed in civilian's clothes, is sentenced to be shot as a spy. Anatole is appointed his guard.

The old man recalls how the other cared for him when he was most in need of help, and sacrifices himself by allowing Fritz to escape. The next day Anatole is sentenced for treason, and meets death with a smile.

Taking Her Measure—Nestor—February 26.—Wifie insists upon having a new dress, and takes her husband to Rudolph Cutter's establishment to buy her one of his advertised $75 gowns on sale for only $25. Hubby does not like the familiar way Cutter has of taking waist measurements, and marches Wifie home. Wifie orders a gown in spite of her husband's objections, and goes to Cutter's for the first try-on. Hubby learns of it, and rushes to the tailor's, where he finds his wife in the private office in negligee attire. He chases poor Cutting all about the place with a gun. Matters are settled finally when Cutting's fair assistant intervenes and explains that Cutter has been out of the room all of the time and has not seen Mrs. Newlywed. Wifie then explains that she locked herself out of the dressnig room by allowing the door to close, and had taken refuge in the private office when she heard steps approaching in the hallway.

The Laugh That Died—Victor—February 26.—Carlotta and Dick have a pretty Italian romance, which Regi, a jealous rival, threatens to break. He holds Carlotta prisoner on the day of her wedding, and Dick, in an attempt to rescue her, is injured. Carlotta hides him in a clothes closet and, after causing her guards to fight among themselves, she escapes with Dick to the church, where their friends await them. And their marriage is solemnized.

The Curse of the Desert—101 Bison—(Two Reels)—February 27.—While the colonel and his men are quelling an uprising among the natives, Nana, the natives' chief, attacks the garrison, kills the colonel's wife and captures his daughter, Nan. The colonel prepares to lay siege to Nana's palace, but receives a message from the chieftain to the effect that he will kill Nan if the English attack him. Tom and Jim, two patriotic young fellows, volunteer to rescue the colonel's daughter, and set out for Nana's palace. They overpower the guards and make their way to the harem, where they find Nana tormenting his defenseless prisoner. After a fight with the natives who rush to the assistance of their chief, Tom and Jim make their way to the dome of the castle, Nan having already made her escape, and signal to the English troops, who are in hiding outside of the walls. The soldiers attack and overcome the natives, and Tom and Jim are rewarded for their bravery with a kiss from the lips of the colonel's daughter.

Saved by a Shower—Joker—February 27.—Gum-foot Gus arrests Bunko Bill and Light-Fingered Lil, who escape and hide in a hotel where Hiram and Arabella, just from the country, are stopping. In order to get Hiram's money, Lil starts a flirtation with Hiram, is caught by Arabella, who is about to wreak jealous vengeance when Gus appears and puts both Bill and Lil under arrest. Hiram has escaped to the balcony; it is raining and Arabella keeps guard within. Hiram considers the rainy balcony the safer place, after all.

The Unknown Brother—Powers—February 27.—Robert and Gordon Staples, when boys, have a star tattooed on their arms. Twenty years later the star is the means of their being reunited, when Gordon is shot as a hold-up man and Robert, as sheriff, comes to arrest him. Both live in the west. Gordon's mines have failed to pay and he is invited to join a hold-up group which is to rob the express. He consents, but later backs out. He is shot by mistake by the hold-up men, and when the sheriff places him under arrest he sees the tattooed star and is rejoiced at the confession of one of the bandits as to Gordon's innocence. The brothers are happily reunited.

A Bit o' Heaven—Eclair—February 28.—Faith and her little sister sell newspapers, and one day are talked to by a charity worker, who tells them about God and His love for little children. The two little girls start out to look for God and, wearied, fall asleep on the steps of a beautiful residence. Faith dreams of a wonderful feast God has spread for them. She is awakened by the owner of the house, whose little girl, injured in an accident, has just died. He leads the children into the house, sits them at the birthday feast prepared for his own little daughter, and when Faith calls him "God" and tells of her search for him, he adopts both little girls.

The Avenging Dentist—L-Ko—(Two Reels)—February 28.—Each flirt is contented with his girl until he sees the other's. This leads to events which result in the Stout Flirt's getting his face in the way of the other Flirt's foot. The contact results in lost teeth on the former's part and also a fervent desire for the other's blood. Once home, his battered jaw does not improve and he consents to meet his daughter's sweetheart, who has just called. The introduction is not cordial, as the young man turns out to be the same person who kicked out father's teeth. Therefore he leaves rather hurriedly, but not without mixing with father and knocking out his few remaining molars. Father hurries to the dentist, who he finds is the same young man who knocked out his teeth. This tooth destroyer was a dentist all the time and neither father nor daughter were aware of it. In the end father is taken home on a truck, and the two dentists fall into a manhole.

The Girl Who Couldn't Go Wrong—Rex—(Two Reels)—February 28.—Nan De Vere, a chorus girl, tries hard to live right, but finds it almost impossible and at last decides to accept the attentions of Mr. Lany, a wealthy man who pretends to love her. In a last attempt to rescue her husband from the path into which he has strayed Mrs. Lany calls on Nan and begs her to turn the man away. At first Nan is contemptuous, but when the woman tells the story of how she and her husband struggled up from poverty, of his lucky mining strike and succeeding affluence, and finally of his growing indifference for her Nan's hear tis touched. She agrees to release Lany and does—so coldly that the man is led to believe that his devoted wife is the only true woman in the world.

Pathe

The Exploits of Elaine—Pathe—(Episode Nine)—(Two Reels).—In this episode Craig Kennedy makes use of the vocaphone, a loud-speaking telephone, to frighten away the Clutching Hand, who enters the home of Elaine to secure the papers concerning his own identity, which he failed to secure at the time Elaine's father was murdered. Full review of this picture will be found on page 313 of this issue.

The Acid Test—Pathe—(Three Reels).—This is one of the best features yet received from the Balboa studio. It contains plenty of fight and strength, blended with a pretty romance. Henry King, Jackie Saunders and Henry Stanley featured. Ted Miller, son of a railroad magnate, spends his days motoring and at the clubs, and his evenings at the cafes. His father induces him to accept a position in his office, but quickly discharges him when the young fellow has a couple of chorus girls call on him during business hours. Left to shift for himself, Ted journeys west and obtains employment in a construction gang. Several times he is tempted to give up and return home, but he cannot forget the smile of scorn on the telegraph girl's face, and is spurred to greater efforts to make good. In time his industry and ability attract his employer's attention, and he is promoted rapidly. Shortly after Ted's promotion to the position of assistant traffic engineer, transportation is tied up by a flood. He puts his whole heart and soul into the work, and restores service in record time. David Miller and other officials, on a tour of inspection, ask to see the man who engineered the work. Ted and his father are reconciled and Ted marries the telegraph girl whose smile of scorn has gradually given way to one of admiration and affection. C. R. C.

Colonel Heeza Liar and the Haunted Castle—PATHE.—A cartoon comedy of about 650 feet in length by J. R. Bray. It is the second of the colonel's experiences in the haunted castle which he wagered he could rid of ghosts. Bray's cartoons need no further recommendation and this comedy is one of his best. On the same reel with "Nature's Beauty Spot," colored scenes taken in Crimea. C. R. C.

When Ciderville Went Dry—PATHE.—A slapstick comedy depicting the plight of a town ruled by women. A tramp wanders into Ciderville, is arrested with a number of the citizens in a store operating a "blind tiger," and, through error, is placed in the cell in which the confiscated liquor is stored. He attracts the attention of the loungers across the street, sells out the liquor and buys his way out of jail with the proceeds. C. R. C.

Max Is Forced to Work—PATHE.—Max's time is filled with dissipation and laziness. One morning he sneaks in, shoes in hand, and turns to face his angry parents, who have waited up for him. He attempts to explain, but they will not listen, and command him to leave and earn his own living. Dressed in evening clothes, Max wanders about for two days without eating. He finds an invitation to a reception and attends, paying particular attention to the refreshments. He falls in love with his host's daughter, and they become engaged. The romance is almost shattered by her learning that he is only a waiter, but at the moment Max's father appears and begs his son to return home. This, of course, changes matters, and Max and the heiress get married. On the same reel with "The Ferrets," a colored educational treating on the habits of these animals. C. R. C.

Pathe Daily News No. 12—PATHE.—This issue of the weekly shows the wreckage caused by the collapse of a children's orphanage in New Orleans; the blaze which destroyed a monster oil tank in Tulsa, Okla.; the wreckage of two elevated trains which ran into a head-on collision in New York City; a winter carnival at Saranac Lake, N. Y.; close-ups of the new owners of the New York American baseball club; the wreckage of the British bark Hugenot, which went ashore on Fire Island, and in the war section views taken at Montreal, Canada; Paris and Belford, France, and Thann in Alsace.

David Harum—FAMOUS PLAYERS—(FIVE REELS).—The internationally famous story by Edward Noyes Westcott adapted for motion pictures, with William H. Crane as the star. Mr. Crane's portrayal of the hero of the story is one of the best examples of character work ever given on the screen. As the story runs, David Harum, country banker, horse trader and philosopher, lives with his sister, Polly, in a rural village of New York. When David learns that Chet Timson, his bookkeeper, is robbing him, John Lenox, who has lost his father and his fortune, comes to take the position and makes his home with David's sister. Later, Mary Blake, with whom John is in love, becomes the "school marm" in David's town, and soon the two are engaged. Chet Timson, out of revenge, plots to ruin John, and nearly does so, but David takes a hand in the affair and forces Chet to confess all.

Rule G—BLAZON—(FIVE REELS).—A strong railroad story adapted from a novel that appeared in the Saturday Evening Post recently, in which Harry L. Stevenson, A. C. Posey, Lawrence Katzenberg, Paul Gillett and Jack O'Connor are the principals. The rule referred to in the title of the picture is one adopted by the railroad, which prevents employes from drinking during working hours. As the picture develops, one sees how this rule causes much trouble, and the dire

Runaway June—Reliance—(Two Reels)—Episode Six—February 17.—Ned and Blye both follow June from the gambling house, but she eludes them. Blye again enlists Tommy Thomas' aid, and has her ride about the neighborhood in which he thinks June lives. She meets the runaway bride and invites her to ride with her when she learns that June is headed for an employment agency. On the way Tommy stops at a drug store, and instructs the woman in charge of the bureau to send June to Mrs. Villard's. The latter, a friend of Blye's, employs June to act as companion. While out collecting rent with Mrs. Villard one day, June comes upon a couple wrangling over that eternal money question. Her plan for reforming Grogg proves successful and thereafter he is a model husband. June is happy in her new position, and returns to Mrs. O'Keefe's for her wardrobe.

The Blood Taint—Smallwood—(Three Reels).—Mrs. Van De Water gives a coming-out ball for her daughter, at which Crayton Coombs, a millionaire roue with an incurable disease meets and falls in love with the girl. The mother is flattered at the match with the millionaire, and though both Ethel and Dr. Holt, Coombs' physician, beseech the mother to break off the engagement, Mrs. Van insists on the wedding taking place. Dr. Howard, Holt's assistant, is one day summoned to care for Ethel, who is ill, and the two are mutually attracted. Later Howard is called to a tenement district, where he cares for Helen Grayson, the divorced wife of Coombs. He tells her of Coombs' approaching marriage, and she promises her assistance in helping him to win Ethel. After the marriage with Coombs, Ethel is taken to her husband's country home, and that night, when he is sitting all alone in front of the fireplace, his former wife appears, and after recalling their own wedding and telling him what a beast he has grown to be, advises double suicide. The frightened man consents, and soon after Ethel discovers the two dead bodies before the fireplace. She is then free to marry Dr. Howard. Ethel Grandin featured.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. The Verdict—Grandin.—John Whitney, broker for Robert Courtleigh, is about to propose to Ethel Courtleigh when the father interrupts, and tells Whitney that he cannot become his son-in-law. For revenge, Whitney double crosses Courtleigh on the market and ruins him. The mother, learning that if Ethel marries him Whitney will restore their fortune, urges the girl to wed, but she is engaged to Dick Carrol, and, backed up by her father, refuses to even consider Whitney. Later she suspects she has been selfish, and in order to save her father, goes to Whitney to plead with him. Courtleigh, meanwhile, tells Carrol of developments and Carrol likewise visits Whitney, where he finds Ethel is locked in Whitney's bedroom, and later, after a quarrel, Carrol kills Whitney and then returns to his club. Ethel manages to escape by climbing over the window ledge, and takes with her Carrol's cane, which he has dropped, thus removing all evidence against him. She then arranges the gun so it will appear as though Whitney had committed suicide, locks the door from the outside and slides the key back in the room by means of a string, which she later removes, and the police next day consider it a suicide. Ethel returns Carrol's cane and explains all to him. Ethel Grandin featured.

The Convict's Conspiracy—Warners—(Three Reels).—A foreign-made picture, produced in the Features Ideal studios, in which the villain, after abducting and hiding the hero, successfully impersonates him for some time. The photography is excellent, also the scenic backgrounds, which is always the case with a Features Ideal film, while the playing of the various actors is above criticism. The parts of the two husbands are played by the same man, and before the picture ends, the mistreated hero is reinstated and the villain exposed in all his devilishness.

Universal Special

The Master Key—Universal—(Episode Fourteen)—February 15.—After spending the night at the camp of the beggars, Ruth, Dore and Sir Donald visit the American consul, at whose house Ruth and Sir Donald remain while Dore journeys into the hills in his endeavor to find the idol. In the meantime Wilkerson and Drake become lost in the hills, and stop at a deserted hut. The priest, who escaped, comes upon a band of wandering hillmen, tells them his story, and they set out to find the Americans to avenge the theft of the idol. They discover Dore and pursue him to the deserted hut, where he unexpectedly comes upon Wilkerson. They join in fighting their common enemy, and drive off the hillmen. At a reception and dance given in her honor by the consulate, Ruth meets an American naval officer, and they find that they have a number of mutual friends. After the guests have departed she sees a vision of Dore in trouble, and intuitively feels that he needs help at once.

World

Old Dutch—Shubert—(Five Reels).—Lew Fields is featured in this splendid comedy that creates laughs wherever shown. Fields appears as Ludwig Streusand and Violet Martin as his daughter, Violet. Ludwig is the inventor of the teloptophone, which enables one to see the party at the other end of the telephone wire during a conversation, and sells it to John Rockmorgan. He then departs for Palm Beach with his daughter. Meanwhile the vaudeville team of Bings and Bings is stranded, and hits upon the idea of impersonating a rich couple at the Beach hotel. When Ludwig loses his wallet, Bings secures it and represents himself as the great inventor, this being made easy since Ludwig has registered under an assumed name. The hotel proprietor, finding Ludwig unable to pay his board bill, makes him work for his board, and Fields is uproariously funny as a hostler, a bootblack, a barber and a waiter, but is relieved from his menial task by the arrival of Rockmorgan, who identifies him, and ejects Bings from the hotel.

Miscellaneous

Barnaby Rudge—Hepworth-American—(Six Reels).—A splendid production, expensively staged and well acted, of Dickens' well-known story of the same name. Such splendid backgrounds as the village streets of 1775 and the lobby of the House of Parliament were carefully staged, and the mob scenes are also worthy of particular note. The story of Barnaby, the half-witted follower of the hordes inspired by Lord George Gordon, leader of the "no popery" riots, is so familiar to all readers of Dickens that it is useless to repeat the story here.

The Price of Justice—Apex—(Four Reels).—Jim Beresford, lieutenant in the company commanded by Colonel Earle, meets and falls in love with Nancy, the colonel's daughter. Nancy's brother, Tommy Earle, is a young scapegrace, and gives a valuable ring to a barmaid. Jim, through Captain Owens, secures the ring from the barmaid, and when Tommy learns she has sold the ring to Owens, he visits the officer, the two quarrel and Tommy kills him. Jim is suspected of the murder, and Tommy refuses to confess. Later Nancy learns the real facts, and when Tommy is killed in battle, makes them known, thus clearing the name of Jim and enabling them to marry.

Reel Fellows Stage First Ball

AFFAIR HUGE SUCCESS

BUT a few seconds after the hands of the clock indicated eleven, Mayor Carter H. Harrison, with Mrs. Harrison on his arm, began the grand march which inaugurated the first cafe chantant, cabaret and grand ball of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, an event which it is expected will become an annual one.

The Louis XVI room of the Hotel Sherman was the scene of the affair and Monday, February 22, the date. Despite the most inclement weather a capacity audience, numbering anywhere from twelve to fifteen hundred, was in attendance from 9:30 until an early hour on Tuesday morning. In fact, Old Sol was peeping over the crest of Lake Michigan and dispersing the fog and smoke which invariably hangs over Chicago's loop district, when the last stragglers were wending their way homeward, after one of the most enjoyable evenings ever spent by Chicago's film colony.

Celluloid heroes and heroines from all quarters of the globe were present in vast numbers and the majority of those who were unable to be there sent wires of congratulation, or expressions of regret over the sternness of their directors, who refused to permit them to journey so far from their studios.

Chief among the celebrities loomed the bulky figure of "Pop" Lubin, who proved to the satisfaction of everyone that Philadelphia is not a dead down; the Napoleon-like figure of Carl Laemmle, who was chaperoned by Joe Brandt, Rosemary Theby and Harry Meyers, this contingent representing the New York studios; the smiling features of George Kleine, who seemed to be hugely enjoying himself; and interspersed throughout the throng were to be seen such favorites as Richard Travers, Bryant Washburn, Rapley Holmes, Beverly Bayne, Ruth Stonehouse, Gerda Holmes, Francis X. Bushman, Wallace Beery and others far too numerous to mention. All of these and hundreds more were in the half-mile-long line of the grand march which twisted and turned in order to permit of all filing between the banks of mercury arcs that a motion picture might be taken of all participating in the grand march.

About the witching hour of midnight, and shortly after the various loop theaters were closed, celebrities from the legitimate stage began to make their appearance. The coming of the thespians was made known by the appearance of a number of choristers from the "Passing Show of 1914," who appeared with a midnight extra of a Chicago journal that had issued a special photoplay edition in honor of the momentous occasion. These papers found a ready sale and were filled with items of real interest concerning the various photoplay stars and their activities. Cartoons of a number of prominent Reel Fellows were liberally sprinkled throughout the sheet. Quips and wheezes on still others were to be found scattered here and there on the four pages of the extra. Among the thespians of note who lent their presence to the occasion were noted Macklyn Arbuckle, Julian Eltinge, Henry Kolker, George Monroe, Joseph Brennan, June Elvidge, Joyce Fair, Thomas Meighan, Marilyn Miller, Thomas Ross, Mabel Taliaferro and Ernest Truex.

Though dancing was the chief attraction of the evening, entertainment of a varied nature was supplied between dances by performers of note from both the vaudeville and legitimate stages and the motion picture studios. The various turns were greeted enthusiastically and well deserved the applause they received. These turns ranged all the way from dances, popular songs and vaudeville patter, to musical acts which required a full stage and elaborate paraphernalia.

The officers of the club, Messrs. R. R. Nehls, Walter R. Early, Captain L. A. Boening and Warren A. Patrick, are deserving of a vote of thanks for the entertainment provided and the tremendous exertions through which they went to have everything ship shape for the evening, but being experienced impressarios and assisted by many others from among the club's members, were able to provide a de luxe entertainment which went through without a single hitch. There was something doing every minute and not a dull minute in the entire evening.

The ball room was decorated with American flags gracefully draped, these being appropriate to the birthday of the Father of His Country, and at frequent intervals around the room were to be seen large framed portraits of the celluoid celebrities, who are known to picture fans the world over.

At the south end of the dancing floor a stage running the full width of the Louis XVI room had been erected and on this the orchestra was seated and the various vaudeville acts took place. W. X. McCollens acted as announcer-in-chief and introduced the various performers before each turn, while the polished and debonair Warren A. Patrick frequently relieved him to introduce such guests of the evening as Mayor Harrison, Siegmund Lubin, Carl Laemmle, and the photoplay stars.

On the mezanine floor of the Hotel Sherman refreshments were served throughout the evening and between dances and during the intermission this portion of the building was crowded with guests seeking relaxation and refreshments.

Among those who attended the ball were not only members of the club, stars from the various studios, the heads of big picture concerns, but exchange men from far and near, exhibitors from both Chicago and surrounding towns, hundreds of photoplay fans, theatrical stars of note and representatives of every branch of the film industry.

Music for the dancing was furnished by Benson's orchestra of sixteen pieces, and that their music was enjoyed was proven by the innumerable encores, there being one after every dance, while the vaudeville stars literally dropped with fatigue before the audience would let them retire.

As Motography goes to press, figures are not as yet available as to the financial success of the affair, but it is assured that a sum fully as great as had been anticipated was raised, and as all the Reel Fellows know, this money will be devoted toward securing suitable permanent quarters for the fast growing club, which already bids fair to rival the Screen Club of New York or the Photoplayers' Club of Los Angeles. Success has marked its every undertaking, and judged by the affair of Monday evening, nothing is too big or too good for the Reel Fellows to undertake and carry through to success.

BETWEEN THE DANCES.

Gosh ding it, where was Big Bill Sweeney?

And Chris Whelan, too, but then, we forgot. These old chaps couldn't stand the weather. It was a bad night out-of-doors.

These all-night spasazams are fierce on us fellows who have to work for a living—especially the very next day at 8 a. m. Get that?

As a band leader, loan us Dick Travers.

Francis Xavier Bushman was there like a house afire. Essanay had 'em all over the place, from the cellar to the roof.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Russel did the honors for Dave Horsley—the man who is beginning to forget!

Wee little Eddie Kaufman, en route to California from New York, got a squint at the start of the show.

Mobilization of the film fans and fanciers began at 7:30 to avoid the crush.

A. M. Gollos, with his charming wife, played host to his brothers and their wives.

Frank Samuels, the man who threw the bull in Cabiria, wore one of those thirty-day booking smiles and did some dancing.

George L. Cox, director par excellence, with his magnetic personality got the boniface's permission to order sandwiches at 2 a. m. Mr. Laemmle will point out the difference between ordering and getting things.

W. H. Bell was "The Christian" and went home at an Early hour. Yes, we said Early.

Adolph E. L. K. Eisner, with the "smile that won't come off," pointed out all the celebrities to his pretty little wife, but carefully kept said wife to himself all evening.

Is that the goat man? Pshaw, I thought all editors were thin, educated-looking men. They are. Look at Caward there, he does the work. (Look educated, Neil!)

Carl Laemmle had enough at 4 a. m. and made several engagements for 9 a. m. to be sure some one would wake him up.

Dick Travers was ballyhoo for the house. On commission? Eh, what?

Felix Feist persisted in trying to read the Gaelic on the walls of the Celtic Room, "Hoch—shush—sholem go bragh!" but we defy a Turk to do better.

Doc (Daniel Webster) McKinney, with his 220 pounds, refused to dance. That's how he got the 220.

Watty Rothacker and Nate Sawyer went 50-50 on Mrs. Sawyer's time. Nate is just out from under the ether and feared to hop lest he shake some bones loose.

"Pop" Siegmund Lubin showed those characteristics that have endeared him to Lubinville and his gentle personality and soft, homely speech made many friends for him.

George Kleine represented the Chicago manufacturers and graced the ball room with his presence.

Charlie Ziebarth, America's greatest technical superintendent, took notes for effects that will soon be seen in American's first.

Charles Ethelbert Nixon, scenario writer extraordinary, litterateur, club fellow and dilettante, chaperoned his "chum," a very fetching "Miss" Nixon.

The Essanay Company was well represented, contributing Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Ruth Stonehouse, Richard Travers, Rapley Holmes, Gerda Holmes, Betty Brown, Bryant Washburn, Wallace Beery, Lester Cuneo, Charlotte Mineau, Bobby Boulder, Albert Roscoe, and Joseph Roach.

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby traveled to here with Joe Brandt, and Rosemary at last accounts was "Ballin' the Jack" with Pop Lubin, while Harry related the story of his life and how he took a job for thirty-five seeds once because he needed the money. Thirty-five sounds like real money these days.

Roie C. Seery Zudoraed around awhile, then grabbed a taxi to be first down in the morning.

Mr. Laemmle is now an Entered Apprentice. Every one is expected to be present at Pacific Lodge, New York, when he backs down. It is understood he can step high and far.

Ted Flaherty and Tom Quill proved the attraction of their respective wives by riding close herd on them during the evening.

Positively the only way to tell a waiter is to look for his lozenge.

Florence M. Enk maxixed, hesitationed, turkey trotted and Texas Tommeyed, thereby upholding Motography's fame.

No affair is complete without Joe Brandt. So Joe, mixing railway rebates with business, Zeppelined in during the evening.

The World condescended to come to earth, and the august McQuade flitted hither and yon.

Memberships in the Reel Fellows' Club still go at the old price. If you can qualify, it's time to crack little Willie's savings box and breeze in.

Our thoughts hung heavily on the abscence of Don Meaney, Charlie Ver Halen and Stan Twist. Those three should have been here. The baby has grown!

Surprises lurked in every nook and corner. Joe Brandt—as per usual he was in all the corners of all the rooms on several floors. If you don't know Joe Brandt, say "No." The "ayes" have it.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, New York, and all large and small cities, was on hand. Mr. Laemmle is also president of his very own city, remember. Kitty Kelly had him cornered part of the time. See daily papers for Kit's comment.

Just following the conclusion of the grand march at the Reel Fellows cafe chantant cabaret and ball in the Louis XVI of the Hotel Sherman on the evening of February 22nd this picture was taken.

Sigmund Lubin was there with bells on. He wanted to upset two mistaken ideas—one that he was getting old and the other that he comes from a slow town. He accomplished his purpose. Mr. Lubin of Philadelphia, Lubinville and Betzwood, grows younger every day. He promises to come back here again when he gets an invitation.

Abe Balaban was still after "The Spaniard." We'd rather hear Abe than grand opera.

The club's chief orator, Mr. Walt Early, used up nearly all the language in the bottle, leaving Dr. Fischer speechless.

Yea, bo, Harry Webster were there too with bells, proving so popular his Mrs. kept a sharp eye on him during the eve.

"Steve" Montgomery, celebrating his return to the management of Box Office Attractions, circulated freely, receiving congrats from all.

All credit is due to R. R. Nehls, club president, Walt Early, Warren Patrick, "Cap" Boening and other officers and members who helped to make this one of the finest moving picture affairs ever held in this city. Gentlemen, our thanks.

No, Lucy, that was Rosemary Theby's regular hair and as you may have noticed, it is black—black as the night of the Reel Fellows' Club ball.

If the weather man had been tipped off, there wouldn't have been room by about three acres.

That was a great little stunt of seeing the First American and "See Americans First" that somebody pulled on the club president. If Dick Nehls isn't careful about that slogan—but then, it seems to carry right straight through with a punch—so why worry?

It was the first time I ever saw the mayor of this town live up to the advance notices, and I've been going to conventions, conclaves and things around the burg for thirteen years. And there was Mrs. Carter H. Harrison right on the mayor's wing at the head of the procesh. Warren Patrick is some fetcher, you betcha.

Abe Balaban had a lot of his family present and did real cabaret stuff with his sister's help. A Passing Show girl passed the plate.

Photoplayer's Club Ball

It appeared as if every prominent star and player of California's famed motion picture colonies attended the grand ball of the Photoplayers' Club at Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, Saturday evening, Feb. 13. Miss Mary Pickford presided as the reigning star of the evening and led the grand march with Dell Henderson, president of the club.

All matters of state, screens and pictures were forgotten for the evening. The stars and players had ceased to be. They simply acted natural, and were a magnificent showing of highly cultivated, talented men and women. Notable society leaders of Southern California and visitors from all parts of the world now sojourning in California were among those present, while dignitaries of the financial and commercial world, film magnates, producers, cinematographers, writers and representative newspaper men added to the cosmopolitan air of the gathering.

Seated in the rear of the gaily decorated boxes occupied by the people of the "movies" were several thousand invited guests who participated in the dancing and social greetings of the ball, each meeting his or her favorite of the screen and interchanging confidences that bring warm-blood people into equal appreciation of each other.

Promptly at 10 o'clock the megaphone announcer called the grand march and the real ball festivities began, with Miss Pickford and Mr. Henderson in the lead, responding to the strains of martial music by the orchestra.

They were followed by William D. Taylor, first vice-president of the club, and Cleo Madison; Henry B. Walthall, second vice-president, and Ruth Roland; Wallace Reid, secretary and treasurer, and Dorothy Davenport; George Seigmann and Dorothy Gish; Carlyle Blackwell and Mable Normand; Douglas Gerrard and Fay Tincher; Fred Kley and Blanche Sweet; Isadore Bernstein and Mrs. Bernstein; Jack Blystone and Victoria Forde; Charles Murray and Mrs. Murray; Max Jennett and Myrtle Gonzales; J. Charles Haydon and Ethel Davis; Max Figman and Lolita Robinson; Tom Mix and Bessie Eyton; James Kirkwood and Ida Lewis; C. Ward and Marian Sais; Rupert Julian and Francillia Billington; Sam DeGrasse and Olive Fuller Golden; Oscar Steyn and Marion Rollins; William Franey and Lillian Peacock; C. E. Griffin and Juanita Hanson; Baron Winther and Miss Hotchkiss; Courtenay Foote and Winifred Kingston; Robert Herron and May Marsh; M. R. Shirley and Cleo Ridgeway; W. H. Long and Mrs. Long; D. W. Smith and Ann Schafer; Robert Leonard and Ella Hall; Chas. (Daddy) Manley and Mrs. Manley; Charles Ray and Miss Mitchell; William Worthington and Laura Oakley (chief of police Universal City); Lee Moran and Lena Rogers; L. Gray and Rena Haynes; Ford Sterling and Mrs. Sterling; Roscoe Arbuckle and Minta Dufree; Max Ascher and Gail Henry; John Dillon and Constance Johnson; H. Ford and Mrs. Ford; Joseph Harris and Lucile Young; Arthur Shirley and Cleo Frisbie; Victor Moore and Mrs. Moore; William Robert Daley and Miss Burnette; John Post and Anita King; Lloyd McClan and Mrs. McClan; H. Miller Kent and Miss Shoemaker; Harry McCoy and Mrs. Harry Davenport; L. Christian and Miss Rudolph; C. M. Walther and Miss Stearns; Richard Cummings and Mrs. Cummings; Gilbert Warrenton and Mrs. Lulu Warrenton; A. Peters and Mrs. Peters; Mr. H. Hail and Miss Parker; Walter Long and Laura Huntley; Allan Dwan and Pauline Bush; Joseph DeGrasse and Mrs. DeGrasse; Russell Bassett and Mrs. Thomas Nash; Frank McQuarrie and Mrs. McQuarrie; Baron von Ritzel and Miss Smith; Gus Inglis and Miss Taylor; J. Kelsey and Miss Hunt; Mr. Cummings and Miss Joos; Lloyd Winthrop and Miss Locke; "Jack" White and "Billy" McDonald.

There were many other notables who did not appear in the grand march, but who enjoyed this diversion from their boxes, among whom were: Hobart Bosworth and Adele Farrington and Philips Smalley and Lois Weber, Fritzi Scheff, Myrtle Stedman, Lottie Pickford, Thomas Ince and Mrs. Ince, Mack Sennett, Charles Giblyn and Mrs. Giblyn, Al Kaufman, Otis Turner, Albert W. Hale, Miss "Billie" West, William C. Foster and Mrs. Foster, Virginia Kirtley, Irene Hunt, Rena Rogers, Kathlyn Williams, J. Warren Kerrigan, Grace Cunard, Jacques Jaccard, Webster Cullison, "Capt Jack" Poland and Mrs. Poland; Leonard M. Smith, Charles G. Rosher, B. A. Rolfe, Sidney A. Franklin, H. A. Scott, J. C. Playing Hide and Seek With Death

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

BY long odds the best release yet of the Pathe serial, "The Exploits of Elaine," will be found in the ninth installment of the series, which is called "The Death Ray," and which depends on the operation of the death-dealing infra-red ray, discovered and first projected by the Italian scientist, Ulivi.

The scene in which Kennedy and Jameson are shown entrapped in the basement beneath the headquarters of the Clutching Hand's band is one that for sensationalism has seldom, if ever, been equaled. Kennedy literally plays hide and seek with death, as the deadly ray pursues him from one corner of the narrow basement to another, and he, by squirming, twisting and wriggling his body out of its path, escapes death by only a matter of inches. The conclusion of this scene in which the scientific detective turns the death-dealing ray back upon its wielders is a splendid climax, and it seems needless to say the audiences who behold episode nine will, almost without exception, return to see the next episode, and discover whether or not the Clutching Hand and his band are captured.

Perry Bennett, Elaine's attorney, brings to her in the opening moments of the story an ultimatum from the Clutching Hand in the form of a note, advising her that if the services of Craig Kennedy are not dispensed with immediately the detective will surely be killed, and as proof of his ability to kill Kennedy, the Clutching Hand declares that a man will drop dead every hour in front of Kennedy's laboratory until the ultimatum is heeded.

When Kennedy is shown the note he merely laughs, believing it a threat no worse than those which have previously been made, but when, a few moments later, his friend Jameson calls his attention to a dead man just across the street, Kennedy is startled.

Without delay, Kennedy and Jameson arrange a "busy-body" in a window, this being two mirrors fixed at such an angle that they will enable one in the laboratory to view what is going on out in the street, and an hour later Jameson beholds another man drop dead without any apparent cause.

Satisfied that the Clutching Hand really means to enforce his ultimatum, Kennedy announces that he is going to sail for South America, and with Jameson goes aboard a ship, but later they both return ashore in disguise.

Ere returning to his laboratory, Kennedy visits the morgue where the dead men are lying who were killed directly across the street from his laboratory, and there quickly discovers that they must have been slain by Ulivi's infra-red ray, the scientific death dealer that destroys any substance unable to deflect its light.

Kennedy is beginning to explain to Jameson that the only method of foiling this death-dealing ray is to divert the ray itself by a disc of platinum, when suddenly from beneath desks, behind cupboards and from secret panels in the wall, appear five or six of the Clutching Hand's minions, who seize and bind Kennedy and Jameson and convey them to the headquarters of the evil society. A little later Elaine is brought there and through a trap door in the floor is shown Kennedy and Jameson bound and helpless in the basement below.

The Clutching Hand and his men then turn on the huge apparatus that projects the infra-red ray, and begin their grim game of hide and seek with Kennedy below.

Kennedy manages to withdraw from his pocket the disc of platinum, which he was showing Jameson at the time they were captured, and to insert this in the ray of light diverting the beam, and reflecting it back on those above. The deadly ray sets the room above afire, and to add to the confusion of the band, the police arrive to raid the place, having been tipped off as to its whereabouts the day before by Kennedy. All manage to escape while the police are rescuing Jameson, Kennedy and Elaine from the flames and once more are free to wreak vengeance upon the scientific detective who is seeking them.

Crane Wilbur Joins Lubin

Crane Wilbur, widely known as a leading man, has joined the Lubin Company in Philadelphia and is to be featured in a number of novel productions, work upon which was begun this week. Mr. Wilbur will have Miss Mary Charleson as his leading woman and will be directed by John Ince. As a photoplayer Mr. Wilbur has made an enviable reputation for himself, not merely through his good looks, but by his versatility as an actor as well. He began his theatrical career some fifteen years ago as a fifty-cent super in the old Manhattan theater in New York with Mrs. Fiske. Six months afterwards he was assistant stage manager, and for four seasons he played various parts with Mrs. Fiske in all her notable productions. Following his engagement with Mrs. Fiske, Mr. Wilbur went into stock and met with much success. For two seasons he had a stock company of his own and toured extensively. His advent into pictures was rather unusual. The Pathe Company wanted a certain type of player for a picture it was making and when someone ran across a photograph of Mr. Wilbur it was unanimously decided that he was the very man they wanted. After quite a hunt they found him rehearsing for "The Girl in the Taxi" and persuaded him to go into pictures. He was with Pathe four years, his last picture being "The Perils of Pauline." Previous to joining the Lubin forces Mr. Wilbur toured in vaudeville.

Selig to Move Executive Offices

The executive offices of the Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago will be moved early in April from the present location, 20 East Randolph street, to the Garland building, corner Washington street and Wabash avenue. The continually increasing business of the Selig Polyscope Company makes it almost impossible for the employes in the executive departments to longer occupy the present location, which for some time has proven too small to accommodate heads of departments, clerks, publicity men, projection room, etc.

The new executive offices will be expensively furnished and the windows will overlook Lake Michigan. Other than the private offices of William N. Selig, president, and J. A. Berst, vice-president, there will be commodious quarters assigned to departmental heads and other employes. The furnishings of the new offices will compare favorably in beauty and conveniences with any similar offices in this country. Friends and patrons of the Selig Polyscope Company will be cordially welcomed to the new executive offices early in April.

New Officers for United

On February 17 a meeting of the board of directors of the United Film Service, formerly known as Warner's Features, with headquarters at 126 West 46th street, was held and the resignations of P. A. Powers as president and Harry Warner as vice-president were accepted.

J. C. Graham, formerly associated with Mutual and Universal, was elected president to succeed Mr. Powers, and O. S. Goan, who succeeded Mr. McKinney as general manager of Warner's, was elected vice-president to succeed Mr. Warner. Mr. Goan was also elected treasurer, and D. H. Chase, former cashier, was promoted to the position of secretary.

It is also announced that considerable more capital became available upon the consummation of the change in management and that every effort will be made in future to do all things possible to improve the quality of the films to be released through this program.

Change in Thanhouser

Wilbert Shallenberger having disposed of his interest in the Thanhouser Film Corporation, Edwin Thanhouser will shortly assume the management of this company.

Edward Shallenberger and Crawford Livingstone have been elected to the board of directors and it is stated that an entirely new policy will be inaugurated in this company at once.

Mr. Thanhouser will undoubtedly arrange to produce some more of those sterling films which have made the name of Thanhouser one to reckon with in the independent field.

We extend our hearty good wishes to the members of the new organization and wish it a world of success.

Box Office Becomes Fox Film Corporation

The Box Office Attraction Company announced last week that in the future it will be known as the Fox Film Corporation. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of New York and the necessary legal steps in changing the name have been taken. At the same time the capital stock has been increased from $500,000 to $1,500,000. Many plans have been laid for the future and the production of features of the highest quality will continue to be the policy of the concern.

Elsie Janis Makes Her Screen Debut

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

IN a whirl of comedy, vivacious, fun-loving, captivating Elsie Janis makes her screen debut in Bosworth's "The Caprices of Kitty," a five-part play written and directed in parts by Miss Janis, herself. The theme apparently has no object other than that of affording Miss Janis every opportunity for displaying the charming grace and brilliancy which has made her famous and popular both in this country and in England. It is successful in this, and should therefore prove delightful to those who have seen her on the stage and to the comedy-lovers who have not.

The play is staged as befitting a star of Miss Janis' ability and renown, and the photography is of distinctly Bosworth quality, which is in a class of its own when it is possible to differentiate. Besides Elsie Janis in the role of irrepressible Kitty Bradley, the cast contains Courtenay Foote as Gerald Cameron, the young artist who claims that those who do not owe him money know him as "Jerry"; Herbert Standing as Kitty, disguised, inquires about the model.

Kitty's guardian; Vera Lewis as saintly Miss Smyth, the school principal; Martha Mattox as prudish Miss Rawlins, the chaperone; and Myrtle Stedman as the artist's model, Elanie Vernon.

Kit, a young heiress, is sent to Miss Smyth's select seminary by her doting guardian. Instantaneous with her arrival the staid old dormitory is alive with mischievous pranks and thrilling escapades. Kit even carries her harmless outlawry into the schoolroom, more than once narrowly escaping being caught reading "Love at First Sight," the book which, she thinks, is the guide to Romance.

Notwithstanding her earnest efforts to make things exciting at school Kit finds it pretty dull, and has her racing car sent out from home. With its arrival she becomes herself again and can daily be seen burning up the roads about the school. One day one of the tires is punctured, and a young man, passing in a machine, offers his assistance. They fall in love at first sight, and a few days afterwards besiege Kit's guardian for permission to marry.

He informs them that one of the clauses in Kit's father's will is she and her lover shall not see or speak to each other for six months after their engagement. Kit visits Jerry's studio disguised as a slavey and again, as a Spanish dancer, but he recognizes her when she struts in dressed up like a "swell" and waits outside of her door in the hotel while she changes her clothes.

Seeing that her ruse has failed Kit demands to know Jerry's relations with the pretty model whose painting rests on the easel. She is delighted when he answers by slitting it with his knife. Hard to Choose Between Fame and Love

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

FAME and love. Which is to be preferred of the two? This is the problem which faces the hero of American's two-reel release of Monday, March 1, which is entitled "Heart of Flame." The picture is beautifully produced, sympathetically acted, and is staged amid some beautiful exteriors, high up in the mountains of California, some of the distant landscapes being real works of art.

David Lythgoe has the leading role of Keith Gordon, a young violinist, while Zira, a gypsy girl with whom he falls in love, is interpreted by Vivian Rich. Harry Von Meter has a splendid character role in the part of Von Ezdorf, Gordon's music teacher, and other character bits of note are the parts of Nita, the innkeeper, played by Louise Lester; Checo, the knife thrower, played by Jack Richardson; and Beppa, who is in love with Checo, enacted by Charlotte Burton.

Gordon scores a tremendous success.

As the story opens one sees Keith Gordon, the young violinist, who is the protege of an old music teacher—named Von Ezdorf. The teacher is so sure of his pupil's success that he summons Maylenheimer, the impressario, to hear Keith play, convinced that after hearing him, the impressario will contract for a concert tour. The plan develops, as foreseen by Von Ezdorf, and Gordon seems likely to win both fame and fortune.

Ere beginning the work, Gordon urges his teacher to take a trip to the top of a nearby mountain, as a bit of recreation before beginning the serious business of entertaining the public. Arrived there Keith delights in spending his days fishing in the mountain streams and forgetting all about his music, while Von Ezdorf reads constantly, disregarding his surroundings.

One day while fishing, Keith meets Zira, and the whole trend of his life is immediately changed, for the mountain girl is enraptured with his playing and he is fascinated by her beauty. Von Ezdorf, who had complained in the past of a lack of passion in Gordon's music, now declares every note of his violin has "a heart of flame," and Keith, struck by the phrase, names Zira his heart of flame, and declares she is the inspiration of his wonderful music.

At last comes the day when Keith must return for his concert tour and at the opening creates such a sensation, and is so showered with compliments, that a long engagement is assured.

Invariably when Keith begins to play he is inspired by visions of Zira, and time and time again is on the point of giving up his concert work to return to the mountains, though Von Ezdorf manages to check him for a time. So strong becomes his desire to see Zira that one day he slips off unknown to Von Ezdorf, and the old musician is compelled to hasten ahead by a different route and after telling Zira that genius such as Keith possesses belongs to the whole world rather to any one individual, persuades her to send him back to the city.

This she does by convincing him that she is in love with Checo, the knife thrower. When Checo attempts to love her, she quickly makes known that it is really Gordon whom she loves. Insanely jealous, Checo vows to kill Keith and follows him to the city, and one night outside the stage door prepares to hurl his knife at the unsuspecting musician. Zira, who has learned from Beppa of Checo's intention, arrives in time to save Keith's life, but Checo, angered, turns and stabs Zira. Keith hastens to the prostrate form of his sweetheart, and carries her into his dressing room.

Overcome with grief and unconscious of all around him, Keith acts like one in a trance, while the audience in the theater clamors for the beginning of the concert. Finally he consents to be separated from his loved one long enough to appear, and with his heart filled with sorrow, he renders his unusual selections to the cheers of the audience. The moment he leaves the stage he hurries back to the dressing room and bows with sorrow over the body of his loved one.

Remarkable Machines Shown

Theodore Wharton, collaborating with his brother Leopold in the production of the Pathe serial, "The Exploits of Elaine," has some very interesting things to say of the scientific apparatus used in the different episodes. Mr. Wharton in the first place emphasizes the fact that the various remarkable mechanisms shown are not the product of the studio workshop, but the genuine article, in one instance at least being the only one ever produced and tremendously costly.

"For instance," says Mr. Wharton, "we are now using in the making of the eleventh episode an apparatus called the 'telegraphone,' which is the only one ever made, and which represents the expenditure of millions of dollars, though the actual mechanical cost would not exceed two or three thousand. The large sum first mentioned has been expended in the experiments which have been brought to a successful conclusion in the machine which has been kindly loaned to us for a few days by the manufacturers. Briefly, this is what the apparatus will do: You call up a man in Seattle on the 'long distance' from New York. He is away, but yet you may speak into the phone what you wish to tell him, and on his return, by placing the receiver to his ear, he will get your message and in your own voice, too.

"Again, in the tenth episode we use the 'electric resuscitator,' which recently was used for the first time on a girl who had been pronounced dead by a number of able physicians, and yet who was brought back to life a half hour later by this remarkable device. This machine which is truly almost supernatural in its powers, was invented by Dr. Leduc of the Nantes Ecole de Medicine in France. The apparatus is so new and such a rarity that we found it very difficult to secure one for our picture.

"Another new and remarkable invention we have used is the 'vocaphone,' which projects the voice of the user of it so that it may be heard a long distance from the receiver at the other end.

"No, we are not faking any scientific apparatus in 'The Exploits of Elaine.' We don't have to. The inventors of these different remarkable machines voluntarily offer us the use of their devices, feeling that the use of them in a motion picture with the circulation of 'Elaine' cannot help but bring new and valuable publicity."

Opens St. Louis Office

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., opened this week an office in St. Louis, Mo., at No. 3431 Olive street, and for the present Arthur A. Lee, the traveling office manager of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., is taking charge of the new branch office. He has made some good bookings and the company's feature films have been received by the people of St. Louis with enthusiasm.

This is the eleventh new office that the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., has opened and all of them are reporting good business.

Buys Detroit Exchange

As a result of negotiations in progress several weeks the Detroit Universal Film Company, with offices at Woodward avenue and Larned street, has been purchased by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, of New York City for $150,000, says the Detroit News.

George W. Weeks will continue as general manager of the district and business will be carried on much as usual, except that patrons will deal directly with the manufacturing concern. Mr. Weeks has received word from the New York headquarters that the branch offices in Toledo, Grand Rapids and Escanaba, Mich., will be maintained.

The Detroit Universal Film Company was organized about two years ago by Mr. Weeks, James A. Fitzgerald, Frank Drew, Sam Levy and Charles Wesch, to act as distributing agent for the New York concern in Michigan and northern Ohio. It supplies films regularly to more than 400 theaters in the territory, about 60 of them being in Detroit.

Mr. Weeks has devoted the last eight years to the moving picture business and is regarded as an authority. Since becoming manager of the Detroit concern he has seen the number of motion picture houses in Detroit double.

"I believe that the moving picture industry is to see a development of which the present is only a beginning," he said. "Every day sees improvement and enlargement of scope. Productions are made today which a year or two ago would have been absolutely out of the question. The film producing and motion picture industry is now, I believe, the fifth largest in the world."

Massachusetts Exhibitors Meet

The annual meeting of the members of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was held at the Quincy House, Boston, Tuesday evening, February 9. Ernest H. Horstmann was re-elected president, John F. Patten, first vice-president, P. F. Lydon, second vice-president, G. M. Clark, treasurer, and R. W. Drown, secretary and clerk. Almost one hundred members and guests were present.

Addresses were delivered by Frank J. Howard, the Gordon Company; G. F. Washburn, Unique Theater, Boston; Fred Swett, Nicholas Power Company; N. D. Brooks, Automatic Vaudeville Company; Joseph Mack, World Film Corporation; Baron Hirsch, Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation, and John Gartland. An auditing committee composed of W. B. Sproule, G. F. Washburn and Colonel Kinkaid was appointed. John F. Patten, P. F. Lydon, E. H. Horstmann, R. W. Drown, J Laurie, Samuel Grant and G. M. Clark were elected members of the board of directors.

While the number of exhibitors who have been members of the organization during the past year is not as gratifying as it might have been, the officers are optimistic in regard to the future. The many bills now before the state legislature have awakened the interest of non-members, and despite the fact that many of them live some distance from Boston it is expected that they will shortly join the league.

Novelist Inspired by Wood Nymyh

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

THOSE who enjoy Ruth Stonehouse's interpretative dancing will find in "The Wood-Nymph," the two-reel Essanay release of March 19, a picture that is thoroughly delightful in every respect.

Miss Stonehouse's dancing, while familiar to most theater goers, and enjoyed by them all, is only one feature of interest in this two-reel production. She is capably supported by such favorites as Richard C. Travers and Bryant Washburn, who appear in the roles of Norman McPherson, a poet, and George Vandeveer, a millionaire, both in love with her.

Some of the exteriors are beautiful in the extreme, the picture having been taken last summer, and the classic dances of Miss Stonehouse given on the soft green turf of an open glade on the estate of one of Chicago's millionaires, against a background that is suitable in every way.

As the story begins we see Meta, a wood-nymph, who has been left alone in the world by the death of her parents, mourning her loss. Then we are taken to the home of the Vandeveers, friends of Meta's father, and shown that on account of this friendship the Vandeveers are to adopt Meta, treating her as a daughter of their own.

George Vandeveer quickly falls in love with the dainty girl who has come to live in his home, and soon the two are engaged.

At a lawn party given by the Vandeveers a guest of honor is one Norman McPherson, a poet, whose verses are widely read. Meta consents to dance for the guests as a wood-nymph, and McPherson, watching her graceful body as it weaves in and out in the dance steps, is thrilled to the rhythm of her dancing, and knows that he is at last in love. He is shocked, however, a little later, to learn that Meta is engaged to Vandeveer, and as a result believes that there is no hope for him.

Meta's thoughts were on Norman.

The home of the Vandeveers.

Rather than reveal his love, which he feels is hopeless, McPherson retreats to a hut in the woods and there, inspired by dreams of his wood-nymph, writes a novel in which he reveals his love for Meta. Returning to the city at the conclusion of his task, McPherson leaves the novel with a public stenographer to be typed, and George learning the nature of the book and wishing to prevent its publication, seeks to bribe the stenographer to destroy the work. She refuses, and a day or two later when McPherson calls for the typed story he receives it, but later, passing down the street, pauses to assist an old woman who has fallen, and accidentally drops the manuscript.

This is picked up later by George, and the latter, fearful that McPherson will order a new copy made, hurries back to the stenographer and succeeds finally in bribing her to destroy the hand-written copy.

When McPherson discovers his loss he finds himself unable to duplicate the story, and as a result of worry suffers a nervous breakdown.

Meta's wedding day approaches, but she still shows no interest in George, having never recovered from her fondness for McPherson. Reading in the newspaper of his breakdown, she herself falls ill.

Meanwhile the public stenographer who has accepted George's bribe, is taken ill, and troubled by her conscience, mutters in her dreams of the bribe she has accepted and the wrong she has committed. Her mother, who happens to be the same women McPherson befriended on the street the day he lost his manuscript, takes the manuscript to the Vandeveer home, and there Meta learns of George's villainy.

George's father overhears the story and commands George to write a note of confession to McPherson, and to do everything in his power to right the wrong he has done. It is easy to foresee that Meta and Norman will soon meet again, and that the engagement between George and the girl having been broken off, the poet will eventually marry his wood-nymph.

Proud of Its Record

Capt. Bonavita Joins Horsley

Captain Jack Bonavita, the celebrated lion tamer and trainer of wild animals, has been engaged by David Horsley, and has already joined the Bostock Arena and Jungle at Los Angeles.

Arrangements have already been completed whereby Captain Bonavita will appear in and assist in the production of Mina Films. The releases of this new licensed brand have heretofore been confined to one-reel comedies, so that the announcement that Bonavita would be employed has given rise to much speculation as to the further policies of the manufacturer.

A visit to the Mina offices by a representative of Motography brought forth the following statement from the general manager: "We are not quite ready to announce our plans now, further than to say that the one-reel comedies will continue in their present form for just a few more weeks, after which we will spring a surprise that will make Mina comedies the sensation of the times. Full details will soon be ready for publication."

Engage Well Known Stars for Features

Under the personal supervision of President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company, the organizing of the second feature company is rapidly nearing completion. This new company will be under the direction of Thomas Ricketts and composed of stars selected from the ranks of well known stage and photoplay artists.

Harold Lockwood, whose success on the screen with the Famous Players productions is known to thousands of picture lovers, and Elsie Jane Wilson, who played the title role in "Everywoman" and other dramatic triumphs, will be assigned to leading parts. Irving Cummings, at present with the Beauty Company, will be transferred to the feature company and cast in juvenile and character parts. The heavy leads will be acted by Hal Clements. The first production to be staged by this feature company will be Harold MacGrath's "Lure of the Mask," published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

Company Is Reorganized

The Liberty Motion Picture Company of Philadelphia announces that arrangements are about completed for its developing plant and that the company, which is now chartered under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, is to be managed by men of practical manufacturing experience and with unlimited capital. For the present at least the plant will be devoted to developing, though later on it is expected to manufacture films of the highest character. The developing plant starts off with a large capacity for handling this important phase of motion picture work and when an increase in business warrants arrangements will be made to increase the capacity of film handled per week.

Ruby Coronet in Latest Zudora Adventure

BY CLARENCE J. CAINE

IN episode fifteen of "The "$20,000,000 Mystery," two plot elements are blended together to form a highly interesting picture. One distinct part of the two thousand feet deals with the attempt to steal a ruby coronet, belonging to a society lady who has not previously figured in the story, and the other shows another unsuccessful attempt to kidnap Zudora. Until the climax, these two elements work towards each other, being finely blended together, much to the benefit of the dramatic interest. The same players who have appeared in the previous episodes have the leading roles.

In spite of the temporary balking of her plans in episode fourteen, Madame Duval does not swerve from her design to get Zudora in her power. The clever adventuress has thus far kept most of the cards in her hands, as far as the control of Zudora's rich properties are concerned, but she knows that as long as the girl is at large, her hold on them is threatened. Thus, while her fertile mind is busy with many nefarious schemes, never for an instant does she relax from her main purpose.

The band have learned of the wonderful ruby coronet presented to Mrs. Copeland, a wealthy society leader, as a birthday gift. This lady's jewels, long famous for their beauty and immense value, have already aroused the cupidity of the conspirators' chieftainess and the knowledge that the collection has been augmented by this priceless ruby coronet makes her determine on a daring coup. Through the secret influence that she possesses in many widely separated classes of society, Madams Duval obtains an invitation for herself, Captain Radcliffe and Bruce to a birthday ball which Mrs. Copeland is planning to give. From a similar source she obtains the combination of that lady's private safe, where the jewels are kept.

But the best laid plans are apt to go awry, when other schemers are involved. Mrs. Copeland's maid and her butler also have designs on the jewels, and on the morning of the ball the former manages to get the combination of the safe for her confederate. In the evening, just as Captain Radcliffe and Bruce are about to inspect Mrs. Copeland's boudoir, they are disturbed by Hook, the butler, who is bent on the same mission.

The conspirators are not aware of this, although Bruce suspects something. A night or two after the ball, Madame Duval directs her "strong-arm" lieutenants, Bill and Ike, to steal the jewels from the hiding place, previously located by Captain Radcliffe and Bruce. But the worthy pair reach the house only in time to give chase to Hook, the unscrupulous butler, who disappears over the garden wall with the jewel-filled boxes, just as they appear on the scene. Unfortunately for him, he lands almost in the arms of Bruce, who is on watch, and after a short struggle, the man is deprived of the proceeds of his crime.

Meanwhile, the Copelands, returning from a late function at a friend's, discover the robbery, and Tom Hunt is called in to trace the thieves. With Jim Baird he sets out after Hook, toward whom suspicion points with deadly certainty, and the couple locate the butler in a nearby house. By a sensational leap from a second-story window, however, their quarry eludes them, and they then turn their attention toward Bruce, whom they have reason to think has also had a hand in spiriting away the prized coronet. The trail leads them to the old Blaisdell mansion, a famous old house in a little frequented part of the town.

Before they reach it, however, Bruce has already come and secreted the stolen coronet behind a spreading pair of stag antlers, that hang in the library of the old house. It has happened, also, that Madame Duval, never neglecting a chance to make Zudora captive, has already planned to use the old house as a prison for her prey.

Fortune favors this latest plan of the band's chieftainess, for Storm, motoring with Zudora, has an accident happen to his steering gear; his automobile becomes unmanageable, and dashes into a tree, just as Madame Duval, Captain Radcliffe and Bruce, who have been trailing them, drive up. In the collision Zudora is thrown out, and Storm, frantically striving to restore her to consciousness, is only too glad to accept the proffered aid of Madame Duval, whom he does not recognize in the darkness. Without a moment's hesitation Storm lifts his inanimate sweetheart into Captain Radcliffe's car, and they drive off to the old Blaisdell mansion, where Storm carries her into the library and places her in a big Morris chair, while the others pretend to send for a doctor.

As Storm stands beside the stunned girl, Bill and Ike steal noiselessly up behind him and pinion his arms. A moment later, in spite of his desperate struggles, he is borne away, leaving Zudora to her fate. Baird and Hunt have trailed Bruce to the house and, after a spectacular struggle, they rescue Zudora and recover the coronet.

Educating the Educators

The fifth of half a dozen motion picture theaters was installed on February 12 in the Palace of Education and Social Economy at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

This pleasant method will be used to teach in elaborate fashion the latest theories and experiments in educational processes, with the accompaniment of lectures. It will be possible to witness vividly the old fashions and the new, for example, in the treatment of the insane. With the pictures will go whole sample rooms, cells, and model colonies. It will be possible to witness the latest experiments in out-door education for the feeble and for the well; all processes will be brought under one towering roof, and the pedagogues of half the world will no doubt convene there during the nine months to come.

In the entire building the number of "commercial" exhibits is confined practically to one tiny corner, where a concessionaire has found modest floor space and a mezzanine floor overhead where he can spread his school wares. It is not the intention of this building to depict inanimate objects, such as desks and blackboards; rather, the space will be given over to chart rooms, map rooms, progressive model rooms with guides in charge.

The progress of the motion picture idea has been so remarkable since the last world's fair was held that a vast new field has been opened up. All educative processes worth considering will now be found in this exhibit palace or will be pictured therein through celluloid.

Rosetta Brice—Lubin Leading Lady

Miss Rosetta Brice of the Lubin Manufacturing Company is Titian-haired, ambitious, fond of outdoor life, and only twenty-two years old. These attributes may not make a motion picture actress, but they go a long way toward it. Miss Brice is a Washington girl, although her birthplace is Sunbury, Pa., and she lived there for some years as a child. It was in Sunbury that she decided that she wanted to go on the stage. According to the family legends she was then "'bout five, goin' on six." A relative took her to the town opera house and the little girl became dazzled with the gas footlights. Since then she has ever wished and worked for success on the stage. For years Miss Brice could see but one path to success, the legitimate stage. When sixteen she played leads in a stock company, the name and place of which she is not so keen to talk about now, for they gave "two-a-day" performances. From then on her life has been much the same as that of other successful young players. She had many seasons in stock companies, her last engagement being with the famous old Orpheum stock of Philadelphia.

Approves Educational Films

Dr. J. R. Jewell, dean of the college of education of the University of Arkansas, announces that a strong effort is being made to establish a department of visual instruction for the benefit of the schools of Arkansas. The plan as initiated by the Thomas A. Edison Company, consists of a board of directors selected one from each state to pass on the pictures and see that the films are distributed to the high schools as fast as the schools themselves furnish the apparatus for showing the pictures. The films will be sent free to all schools desiring them on agreement to pay the express of sending.

To show the progress made in this field, Dr. Jewell stated that the University of Wisconsin has one man whose sole duty is to look after the development of visual education in the state. The director of Ohio, Supt. Frederick at Cleveland, has just succeeded in placing a moving picture machine and booth in every grade school and one high school in Cleveland. There the libraries of the educated people contain films on geography, physiology, sociology and other educational subjects.

The National Society for the promotion of moral education is working in connection with the Edison Company and has contributed many films on such subjects as "Fair Play," "Honesty," etc.

Films Interesting Detective Story

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

THE filming of a detective drama such as "On the Stroke of Twelve" encounters difficulties of a separate, distinct type far different than those that confront the ordinary drama. To work up proper dramatic suspense its big climax must rest upon the solving of the mystery, regardless of the nature of its counter-plots. This puts the story in narrative form, and it takes a clever director to handle it and successfully avoid obtaining a narrative effect.

In staging "On the Stroke of Twelve" Director John Collins produced his best picture to date, and one that will compare favorably with past Edison releases. It is in three reels, and is from an original scenario by Gertrude Lyon. The release date is March 12. The theme is sound of construction, intensely interesting, and takes a decidedly novel turn in proving an alibi for an accused murderer. The entire story is woven about the idea that a murdered man's watch indicates midnight as the hour of the killing, the bullet having passed through the works, stopping them. Conclusive circumstantial evidence is piled up against the accused. Even his sweetheart believes him guilty until she remembers that he was with her at midnight on the night of the murder. The play has a strong and unconventional ending, a point in keeping with its other good qualities.

The cast is a large and capable one including Gertrude McCoy as Irene Bromley, Richard Tucker as Arthur Colby, Bigelow Cooper as Sydney Villon, Duncan McRae as Rupert Hazard, Robert Brower as the prosecuting attorney, and John Sturgeon as Henry Holden. The jury, representative in its types of a jury which might be found in any courtroom, lends an air of realism and tensity to the trial scene. There is a total absence of the talking, gesticulating, and nodding of heads that the average body of extras thinks necessary on such occasions.

Irene Bromley, an heiress, calls on her guardian, Sydney Villon, junior partner in the law firm of John Villon and Son, for an additional allowance of $10,000. He tells her that she has already overdrawn her allowance to the extent of $22,000, but after a while yields and writes out a check for the amount requested.

Shortly after Irene leaves a haggard, poorly-dressed man who was seated in the waiting room when she entered forces his way past Villon's secretary and confronts the lawyer in his private office. He accuses Villon of stealing his invention and making a fortune from it, and demands that he share with him. The lawyer pays no attention to Rupert Hazard's ravings, and, with an air of tolerance, ushers him out of the office. Villon's supreme confidence in himself and his position blinds him to the expression of deadly hatred on Hazard's face.

Arthur Colby, an earnest, clean-cut young chap, is in love with Irene and his affection, to some extent, is reciprocated, but she cannot forbear playing upon his jealousy, especially when Villon is near to offer his attentions. This leads the latter to believe that he is the favored suitor, and one night after the theater he proposes. It happens that earlier in the evening Irene called up Colby and told him to drop in about eleven o'clock if he had nothing especial to do around that time.

Colby arrives just in time to overhear Villon, on being refused, threaten to reduce the girl to poverty unless she weds him. He claims, furthermore, that her inheritance never was large and is now but a small sum, but that he has plenty and as his wife she could live like a queen. Again Irene refuses him, and Colby interferes in time to prevent Villon's using violence. The lawyer leaves in anger, and the lovers are later awakened from their dream of the future by the clock's striking twelve.

The next morning Villon is found murdered, and Colby, lying on the floor beside him, his hand smeared with blood. Villon's watch is found to be pierced by the bullet, the hands pointing to twelve o'clock. Irene remembers that Colby did not leave her house until after midnight on the night of the murder, and determines to unravel the mystery.

Aided by Colby's attorney she traces the murder to Hazard, the wronged inventor, and draws from him the story of how he killed Villon. Colby, entering the lawyer's apartments to chastise him for threatening Irene, is struck on the head by Hazard, and left to take the blame of the crime. An infernal machine set for midnight by the inventor explodes, killing him.

When Hazard's confession is produced in court the charge against Colby is withdrawn, and the prosecutor is among the first to congratulate him. In going over Villon's papers his secretary, Holden, finds that Irene Bromley's inheritance is much larger than the lawyer made her believe. With light hearts Colby and Irene announce their coming marriage.

"Ladies' Night" a Success

Wednesday evening, February 17, is a date and an occasion that will not soon be forgotten by any member of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, for on that evening the organization held its first "Ladies' Night," utilizing the West Room of the Hotel Sherman, which proved far too small for the throng which gathered.

Though the affair had only been briefly announced, every member was present with a lady, and the occasion was voted the most enjoyable of any of the meetings held thus far and a prediction was made that future ladies' night would be frequent occurrences. The chief attraction of the evening was a talk by A. H. Zeck, chief cameraman of the Essanay Company, who has a reputation as a photographic expert that extends from coast to coast. Mr. Zeck described his remarkable achievement recently performed, the securing of a series of photographs of various musical notes and explained the complicated method used and also the various purposes to which the completed photographs may be put.

He displayed a number of photographs to the assembled company and everyone who heard his talk or saw the results of his labor is ready to acknowledge that without question Mr. Zeck has accomplished a feat of note, both from the standpoint of scientific knowledge and real value to the world. A rising vote of thanks was extended to him for the time taken in preparing his talk and the trouble he went to in preparing his photographs for display.

Following Mr. Zeck's talk the club was entertained with motion pictures of their own frolic at the Jauary meeting, and each of the members watched with interest for his debut on the screen. Later still the first five-reel American film, "The Quest," was projected and flattering indeed were the comments made by the audience. After brief talks by Messrs. Travers and Washburn of the Essanay Company and a very touching recitation by Warren A. Patrick, the floor was cleared and dancing was enjoyed for some time.

Universal City Being Occupied

Within the next few days the entire Universal west coast plant will have been removed from the Hollywood (Calif.) quarters, where they have been for the past two years, into the new quarters at Universal City. Already the scenario department, the laboratory, the stock room, still room and projection room have been moved into their new quarters. A number of the producing companies have for some time past been making use of the new interior and exterior stages at the new city and soon the entire plant will re-establish in their permanent home.

The final removal was delayed somewhat by the unusually severe storm which swept the coast some two weeks ago, doing several thousand dollars of damage to the buildings on the site of the new city.

New Alliance Exchange

The Alliance Films Corporation is preparing to add another office to its large list of exchanges. The new branch will handle the Alliance program in Northern New Jersey and will have its headquarters in the Strand building in Newark. L. P. Goldbaum, who recently resigned as auditor of the Alliance home office, will be in charge. S. T. Baron will be associated with him in the management of the new exchange. President Cobe intends to make this exchange the best equipped and most complete in the New Jersey territory. Mr. Goldbaum, while a new recruit to the ranks of exchange men, has been for several years connected in executive capacities with a number of film concerns and understands the motion picture field thoroughly.

Fulton Ready to Make Pictures

The E. E. Fulton Company of Chicago has installed a camera department and is now prepared to take pictures of an educational and topical nature, as well as develop and print films for other concerns. E. B. Lockwood is in charge of the new department.

The first picture taken by the Fulton Company was of Julian Eltinge, the celebrated star of the speaking stage, paying $100 for a newspaper on one of the downtown corners in Chicago last week during the "Old Newsboys' Day," the proceeds of which went to the unemployed.

Vitagraph to Make Serial

The Vitagraph Company will shortly feature Anita Stewart in a serial film based upon "The Goddess," by Gouverneur Morris. The story, which will be prepared in fifteen episodes of two reels each, will be published simultaneously in the Hearst newspapers.

When arrangements were completed between the two organizations, Ralph Ince was given the serial to produce, and he picked out a strong cast to portray the three principal characters of the story—Anita Stewart, Earle Williams and Paul Scardon.

Censorboards and Reforms are Very Busy

They Work While You Sleep

EXHIBITORS, of the middle west in particular, will do well to read the handwriting on the wall as made visible by the impending legislation in various of the middle western states and to look well to their interests while yet there is time.

As the miscellaneous items, gathered on this page, will show, censorship in one form or another is being considered in Oklahoma, Kansas, Tennessee, and Ohio, and drastic legislation seems imminent. Among the items a ray of hope may be found in the opposition to censorship which seems to exist in Minnesota and Pennsylvania.

Unless exhibitors all over the country wake up they will find themselves legislated out of business or at least so badly hampered that the prudent ones among them will voluntarily give up their theaters and close and lock the doors rather than continue under the restrictions liable to be imposed. As a mere symptom of the way things are drifting, glance hurriedly over the various items on this page.

An ordinance prohibiting children under fourteen years of age from attending moving picture shows unless accompanied by a person over twenty-one years of age, was introduced by Commissioner Patterson at the last council meeting in Muskogee, Okla. Mr. Patterson stated that he was presenting the ordinance at the request of certain persons interested in its passage. The ordinance is a most drastic one and makes owners of moving picture houses responsible for children under fourteen years of age found in the theaters without an older attendant or chaperon. The ordinance was referred to the legal department.

A Tulsa, Okla., newspaper, commenting on some pending legislation, says:

Regardless of the fact that a serious"joker" was stricken out, on the suggestion of Representative Sykes of Tulsa, the motion picture bill now before the legislature still places a severe censorship on moving pictures.

The ban is placed on a wide range of picture subjects. It prohibits the showing of any moving picture which features a bank robber, train robbery, nude forms, suggestive poses, any obscene, indecent, licentious or immoral subject.

Another clause prohibits the showing of any picture in which the police of the country are ridiculed. Moving picture men are wondering what effect this will have on the "Keystone" police force, the funniest film characterization of the age, but still a "slapstick" portrayal of the police activities.

A section which strikes at a prolific source of revenue in this state prohibits the manufacture of any moving picture films representing outlawry, or the exploitation of anyone who has been convicted of a crime. Our old friend, Al Jennings, and his "Beating Back" picture was the inspiration for this Democratic clause.

The punishment for the first violation of the act is a fine of from $25 to $100. The penalty for a second violation is a fine of from $100 to $500 and imprisonment from thirty days to six months. For the third offense the place of business shall be closed by injunction as a nuisance and the moving picture machinery and appliances confiscated and sold by the sheriff, the proceeds to go to the school fund of the county, and in addition the owner shall be prohibited from thereafter engaging in the moving picture business in Oklahoma.

Should any moving picture be shown which in the opinion of the county attorney, mayor or chief of police is a violation of the law, it is the duty of such official to notify the manager of the moving picture show and in case of refusal to comply with the law it is made the duty of the county attorney to begin prosecution.

The authors of the bill are Representatives Hargis of Pontotoc, Barbee of Grady, and Nesbitt of Pittsburgh.

A Topeka, Kansas, paper, discussing censorship, says:

State licenses for moving picture theaters and fines for displaying immoral pictures is provided in a bill introduced in the house today by Representative Pierce. The measure provides a state license of $300 a year for each moving picture theater and a fine of not more than $200 for displaying immoral pictures.

The bill provides that the picture license shall be paid to the county treasurer and that $250 of the amount shall go into the general revenue fund of the county, while $50 of the amount shall be used for county road purposes. Failure to procure a license shall subject the owner to a fine of not more than $500 and summary closing of the theater. All licenses, under terms of the bill, would expire June 30 each year. Licenses would not be transferrable.

For displaying immoral pictures, owners of a picture theater might be fined in any sum not exceeding $200 and upon order of the court the license might be cancelled.

That censorship is being considered in Tennessee seems evident from the following in a Nashville paper:

The Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts of Washington, D. C., a representative of the International Reform Bureau, who is spending several days in Nashville, addressed the Methodist pastors and ministers of the city in the regular weekly conference in the Methodist Publishing House. Mr. Crafts spoke on the question of censorship for moving pictures, advocating both national and state censorship. He spoke encouragingly of the prospects for securing legislation for state censorship in Tennessee, saying the governor favored the matter of strict laws in this regard.

That the Ohio censorboard is to remain seems likely if many more papers publish items like this in the Columbus Dispatch:

Retention of the state board of motion picture censors and condemnation of the bill introduced in the senate repealing the law through which the board was formed, was the unanimous sentiment voiced Saturday at a meeting of the recreation committee of the council of churches, philanthropic council, chamber of commerce, and representatives of many other institutions and organizations of Columbus and the state.

Those attending the meeting felt that they not only voiced the judgment of Ohio welfare societies, civic organizations and other institutions, but also registered the sentiment of a majority of the citizens of the state. A committee, composed of Rev. E. F. Chauncey of Trinity church, Gardner Lattimer and Mrs. E. M. Fullington, was therefore selected, to appear before the judiciary committee of the senate, which has the bill under advisement, and demand the defeat of the measure at a public hearing.

The committee, in person or by proxy, will therefore appear before the senate committee at the earliest opportunity this week. It was the common opinion of the representatives of the various organizations which had had the matter under deliberation, that the educational and moral influences of the state demand a continuation of the censorship.

From even out in Los Angeles, one reads:

The city council was informed by City Attorney Stephens yesterday that under existing laws the Board of Moving Picture Censors has the power to determine what moving pictures shall be prohibited from being shown in Los Angeles.

In the event that the local censor board passed a picture that proved objectionable it was explained further that the police department or any citizen could step in and prohibit the picture being shown. In case of a citizen taking steps to bar a certain picture a complaint would have to be obtained through the prosecutor's office.

In view of the city attorney's opinion the council took no further action relative to "The Clansman," the twelve-reel motion picture, the censor board already having been requested by the council to bar the picture.

Today, President A. P. Tugwell of the censor board, will decide whether he will call a special meeting of the board to act upon the council's request.

The board will hold its regular weekly meeting next Tuesday, one day after the moving picture in question has been shown. Members of the censor board are opposed to the idea of complying with the council's request and the probability is it will not be considered until the regular meeting next Tuesday.

From Minneapolis comes a faint ray of hope with the publication of the following in the Minneapolis Journal:

"I do not approve of the move to appoint a national federal censorship committee for motion pictures," said Miss Mary Gray Peck in her address before the midwinter meeting of the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs at the Leamington today. "When you have a federal censorship you bring matters into politics. We have never had, and why should we have, censorship of the picture drama or of the press? The moment you set up a censorship you have a machine for political oppression and also a system for lobbying and bribery in place of a general education of healthy public sentiment to censor the moving drama."

To bring about a high standard of picture dramas, Miss Peck suggested that in every city or town clubwomen be instrumental in organizing a local censorship committee. Such a committee should then get into communication and co-operate with the national board of censorship, a voluntary committee composed of New York spirited men and women, who censor 90 per cent of all films manufactured in this country. The manufacturers send the films to this committee for viewing and if objections are raised and the committee refuses to pass on a film the manufacturer gives it up. There are no paid offices on this volunteer committee and the power of the committee is a small bulletin which advises parents, managers, educators and others to demand the use of only the films recommended by this committee.

Miss Peck was a speaker at the biennial meeting of the M. F. W. C. last June, when she spoke at a large luncheon of the National Drama League on motion pictures and what they mean to the future of the drama.

Miss Peck scorned the sentiment of those who would wipe the motion pictures off the face of the earth, for "instead of being destructive of the drama, they are now the salvation of the drama, and are cultivating a widespread interest," she said.

"The motion picture drama has become what the preface is to the new book," said Miss Peck. "Prominent playwrights and theatrical managers in New York are ready to have picture dramas come in advance of the newest plays they are to present. It is a very amazing thing, and one that has never happened before, that we live in an age where we witness both the rise and maturity of a great art such as the picture drama."

And a clipping from a Pennsylvania paper shows the exhibitors in that state are beginning to realize the need for action. It says:

When the Pennsylvania legislature reassembles on March 2 Representative Stein of Pittsburgh will introduce a bill looking to the repeal of the present censorship law. The action is to be taken as a result of a request of the Pennsylvania branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The bill has been framed by the legislative committee of the local branch, of which Peter De Garo, Harrisburg, is president.

The members of the Exhibitors' League claim that the censorship is not only inadequate, but is absolutely unnecessary. The operation of the law has been a failure, they allege, and instead of raising the standard of moving pictures has proved nothing but an annoyance to them.

J. Louis Breitinger, chief of the State Board of Censors, is preparing a bill which will increase his force of censors. This will probably be introduced shortly.

Concerning the proposed repeal of the censorship law, Mr. De Garo said: "The public is the best censor, and the only one needed. The moving picture theaters are affording amusement and instruction to the great mass of the people and are entering on an era in which even the most intellectual classes of theatergoers will be their patrons. The public taste will, in itself, maintain the standard of the films without any state or national censorship being necessary. Should there be isolated attempts to show improper, vulgar or crime-inciting pictures there is the power of the police in every municipality or community which could be instantly invoked and the offenders summarily punished."

Has June a Chance to Elude Blye?

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

A NEW and rather startling development marks the seventh installment of "Runaway June" entitled "The Tormentors," and helps considerably in quickening the interest in this serial of the Reliance brand. Up to the present Blye, the mysterious man with the black Van Dyke, has held his followers with some strange influence. It may be his repulsive but forceful personality or it may be that he holds them in his power by knowledge of some secret of their past. But whatever the influence he wields, it has proven most effective, and he has had to but explain his plans to have them carried out.

Now, however, one of his most valued accomplices, Mrs. Villard, who enjoys June's entire confidence, revolts against Blye's tyrannical methods and assists the runaway bride to escape from his clutches. Almost every time that Blye has called upon Tommy Thomas for aid in ensnaring June she has refused him bluntly, and given in only after much persuasion and no few threats. It is more than probable that some day her will-power and determination will prove stronger than her fear of Blye and weakness for his gifts, and then she, too, will defy him and his schemes.

The end of the preceding installment left June on her way to Mrs. O'Keefe's for her wardrobe and her maid, Marie. By the time that Ned arrives at the widow's home June has flown without leaving the slightest clue as to the location of her new home. Blye calls up Mrs. Villard and instructs her to be in a certain room in the Bond Security Building at two o'clock, accompanied by June.

Billy Wolf, one of Mrs. Blye's detectives, trails the Van Dyked husband to his club, and waits for him until he comes out. Going out, Blye meets Cunningham entering the club, and makes an appointment with him for two o'clock in the Bond Security Building. Wolf overhears this, and makes haste to inform Mrs. Blye who promptly decides that she, too, will be present.

At the appointed time Mrs. Villard and her companion arrive at the downtown office, and, while waiting for Blye and his party, Mrs. Villard tells June that Blye is planning a yachting trip to the Bermudas, and wishes them to join the party. The runaway bride's answer is brief and pointed. She refuses the invitation point blank, stating that she will not go that far from Ned.

Blye and his friends arrive and June, to escape their attempts to persuade her, rushes into the inner office facing on the court. On the way downtown that morning June learned all about dominant Mrs. Pinkham and her hen-pecked husband from Mrs. Villard, and therefore rather pities poor Pinkham as he places before her enticing pictures of the yacht and scenes of beautiful Bermuda in an effort to induce her to accept Blye's invitation. Mrs. Pinkham enters in the middle of her husband's plea, denounces him for depriving her of necessities while he wastes money on his employees, glaring at June, and leaves the office in a fury, followed by her apologetic husband.

It happens that Bobbie Blethering's office faces on the court also, and he sees June in Pinkham's private office. He immediately telephones Ned who hastens to the place. Mrs. Villard sides with June when she sees that the young bride really wishes to stay near her husband, though refusing to live with him, and they leave the office building in a taxi, spurning Blye's invitation to ride back home in his machine.

As Blye and his party set out in the limousine in pursuit of Mrs. Villard and June Bobby and Ned arrive—just too late. The taxi speeds toward the Villard estate, increasing the speed to an extremely high pace when June sees that Blye is following. In going around a dangerous curve the chauffeur loses control, and the taxi and its occupants disappear from sight over the edge of a precipice.

In the meantime Mrs. Blye's clock has stopped and when she finally does arrive at the Bond Security Building to catch her husband she finds only an empty office.

Lubin to Continue Serial Releases

"We most certainly shall!" was the emphatic response of Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, to an inquiry as to whether his company would continue the release of serial stories.

"The series and the serial," Mr. Lowry continued, "have become as important in the picture business as they are in the magazine world from our point of view, and should occupy the same relation to other forms of releases as is borne by installment stories to the other features of good magazines. A proper balance should be maintained, a certain number of big features, so many short subjects for variety and utility, and a good continued story to carry over interest and guarantee a continued patronage. That is the ideal program for a magazine, as has been demonstrated beyond all question, and, for identical reasons, it is the ideal program for a motion picture theater. As the Lubin Company is striving to serve the best interests of the exhibitor, we are following just such a schedule with our releases.

"It was to meet a very obvious need and in compliance with a strong demand that the Lubin Company released its first serial, 'The Beloved Adventurer,' in fifteen single-reel installments, one each week. The tremendous success of the serial exceeded even our great expectations, and most emphatically confirmed our theory that a serial should be released in single-reel installments, and should not be drawn out to undue length. The 'Patsy Bolivar' series of fourteen reels, now running, has been no less favorably received, in fact many exhibitors who failed to appreciate the unique value of a moderate-length single-reel serial or series, were quick to get in line after seeing the value of such a production demonstrated by a competitor, and these late comers, as well as the original enthusiasts have been anxiously inquiring as to whether or not 'Patsy Bolivar' will be followed by another installment story.

"I may say here that a great many persons fail to realize how vitally important it is that a serial be a really good story. Of course, it is most desirable that every subject, whether it be a half-reel or five reels, be a good story, but should it unfortunately happen that a house show one film without particular strength, no permanent harm is done as it is soon over with, and good stories which have preceded and will immediately follow will cause it to be forgotten. On the other hand, if a serial story is poor, people will actually keep away from the house showing it, for no one will deliberately take in a show, a part of which he knows he will not like, on the chance of seeing something which he may enjoy, and may form a habit of going elsewhere before the serial has run its course.

"We have, of course, learned much through the experience with our two installment stories already released, and this information will be applied to the advantage of the third serial, which will immediately follow 'Patsy Bolivar.' But just at this time I do not wish to go into details concerning the new subject, beyond saying that it will consist of fifteen single-reel installments, released at the rate of one each week, and that it was written by Emmett Campbell Hall. The general title is 'Road o' Strife.'"

Antarctic Pictures at Weber's

Arrangements have been concluded by Lee Keedick for an extended run of the Mawson antarctic animal pictures at Weber's theater on Broadway, New York City, beginning March 1. With the opening of this famous theater another big Broadway playhouse will be added to the list of high grade film attractions on the "Great White Way."

The Mawson pictures are wonderfully dramatic and exceptionally educational. They were taken in the great unknown seventh continent south of Australia that was sighted in 1840, but was not explored until Sir Douglas Mawson, the co-discoverer, with Shackleton, of the south pole, arrived there at the head of his own expedition and mapped out the coast line in 1911-1914.

In addition to the multitudinous animal life found in this new Antarctic land, the pictures show the terrific hurricanes that rage there almost continuously, and include intimate views of the sea elephants. This is the first time motion pictures have been secured of these monsters, that measure twenty-five feet in length and weigh over 8,000 pounds.

Griffith Highly Honored

D. W. Griffith, whose spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," opens at the Liberty Theater, New York City, next week, has returned from Washington, D. C., where, on Friday night, before the National Press Club, he gave a private exhibition of this wonderful picture. Chief Justice White of the United States Supreme Court was the guest of honor. Other distinguished personages present were Secretary of the Navy Daniels, thirty-eight members of the United States Senate and fifty Representatives from the House. The statesmen were accompanied by the ladies of their respective parties.

After the presentation of the picture Mr. Griffith was showered with congratulations by the newspaper men and their distinguished guests.

Next Thursday night, Mr. Griffith, in recognition of his remarkable achievements with this picture, will be the guest of honor of the National Press Club at its "Inside Dope Night," and will deliver a talk along the lines indicated by this event upon the development of the art of motion pictures in this country.

Lois Weber Again at Work

Lois Weber, who with her husband, Phillips Smalley, decided to take a good rest after their strenuous work with the Bosworth Inc., has not been able to get away as quickly as she had hoped for she accepted the commission to picturize "Cora" in which Emily Stevens, the niece of Mrs. Fiske, is to star, for the Rolfe Film Company.

Miss Edna Mayo, the new leading woman with Essanay, is a sculptress of no mean ability.

The Danger of Inaction

ALL of us complain often and vigorously of American politics. We use more freely than is warranted, perhaps, the terms "grafter" and "robber." We pay our taxes with the feeling that at least half the money goes to questionable uses. And the whole reason for this condition, or such part of it as is true, is that the politicians spend all their time at the game and put all their thought on it, while the citizen and taxpayer devotes less than a hundredth of one per cent of his attention to it—he has his living to make.

Of all the subjects we have handled editorially in this department, censorship is easily in the lead for volume and frequency of appearance. We may even have been criticized for our devotion to the theme. But we are beginning to think that we have not, even yet, given it enough attention or made enough noise about it. For the censorship situation in this country is just like the political situation: the censors and the reformers are working at their trade all the time, with constant application and enthusiasm, while the motion picture people pay attention to it only when it annoys them directly and personally.

For evidence that the censors and their advocates are working for the propagation of the censorship idea all the time, we need only turn to the collection of reports on the subject printed on another page of this issue. And we publish these now, not because they make agreeable reading for the exhibitor, but because the motion picture trade must be jolted into recognition of the danger of inaction.

Censorship is the greatest menace the motion picture business confronts today. It is not the constant financial loss which it occasions that counts: it is the wall of restriction it has built about the business, and which is closing in upon it day by day. The exhibitors, the exchanges, the producers themselves must inevitably become slaves to the censors, doing only their bidding and not daring to express an original conception, if the censorship is allowed to continue its work.

It must be remembered that the censors themselves need not depend upon their own eloquence or popularity to sustain their position. Every club and association in the country has listened to at least one advocate of censorship in speech or paper; and it is only reasonable to suppose that every such speaker convinced at least a few of his audience—or hers; for it must be admitted that women are the chief movers against the pictures. It does not matter that such women may know nothing of their subject, and have seen practically no picture shows; the less their experience and knowledge, the more violent their attack, and the more impression they make on their hearers. Once in a while there is an exception and the pictures find an unexpected friend. Miss Mary Gray Peck of Minneapolis recently addressed the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs in the following words:

> Censorship of motion pictures is a mistaken fool idea. Censorship in Europe has ruined everything it touched.
> If a group of men were paid salaries to do the censoring it would soon become a political position accompanied by the usual graft and if one man were appointed, for instance, such a man as Anthony Comtock, the censorship would be ridiculous.
> Moving pictures are not the destroyer of the drama. They are the savior. They teach people to appreciate good plays and to want to see them. They are the poor man's theater, library and school. The best books are made into moving pictures and in a district where there are moving picture houses there is an increase of from 30 to 60 per cent in the circulation of the library.

This is excellent so far as it goes; but we regret to say there is very little of it. For every speaker with Miss Peck's spirit there are a hundred of the familiar bigoted, bitter, antagonistic type that willingly sacrifice all the facts and truths in the way to gain their point. And they do gain it; make no mistake about that. The public today favors censorship because it has been misled and knows no better.

A few years ago motion pictures had a dozen enemies to fight. City councils, legislatures, fire boards, the police, even theatrical interests—everybody made it as hard as possible for them. All these obstacles have been overcome; only censorship remains, the most dangerous and menacing enemy of them all. And the less resistance the picture men offer to its encroachments, the more passively they accept its insults and insolence, the more dangerous it becomes.

The day must come, and come soon, when all the motion picture and theatrical interests of all classes must unite against censorship, and never cease fighting until the very word becomes a joke and a laughing stock. And that means, perhaps, a perpetual fight; for there is no guarantee that the subject, quashed tomorrow, may not rise up again next week.

The chief of the Pennsylvania state board of censors is even now preparing a bill to increase his force of censors. But simultaneously Representative Stein, of Pittsburgh, at the request of the Pennsylvania branch of the League, is introducing a bill to repeal the censorship law, claiming that it is absolutely unnecessary, and pointing out that every community has police power to deal with any possible attempts to show improper pictures.

Whether the non-censorship bill is successful or not, it shows the right fighting spirit, the spirit that must be instilled into every motion picture man in every state in the Union. The present policy of inaction is endangering the very life of the business.

Pictures Aid Charity

PERHAPS the moving pictures are not so bad as they are painted. At least they offer a charity medium not to be sneezed at, thinks the Indianapolis Star, which reports the sum of $6,583 raised as a tax on the Sunday receipts of the Indianapolis picture houses.

The report of the Joseph E. Bell Picture Show Charity Fund, organized nine months ago, shows that the fund is operated at a cost of about 6½ per cent and that, therefore, more than 93 per cent of the money received goes to the relief of the poor. The headquarters of the organization is at the office of its chairman, W. T. Eisenlohr, 31 East Georgia street, Indianapolis. The investigating and relief work is done by Miss Clyde Titus.

The report shows that 871 families, with a total of 3,096 individuals, have been cared for in nine months; that 1,334 baskets of groceries, aggregating $3,296.76, have been distributed; $930.60 expended in paying rentals for unfortunates; $578.30 spent for coal and $204.53 for clothing. Other items, such as railroad fare, the purchase of furniture, meal tickets, the providing of a special nurse, the purchase of medicine, etc., bring the total expenditures for the year up to $6,358.59, and leaves a balance of nearly $225 in the bank.

The fund received in the year, $6,583, from the proprietors of moving picture theaters, represents a certain percentage from each theater of the Sunday receipts. This is gauged according to the location and seating capacity of the theaters. The amounts paid by each vary from $2 to $10.

Much of the aid given by the fund is given direct, but co-operation also has been extended to the Indianapolis Humane Society, Citizens' Humane Society, Bobbs City Dispensary, German Ladies' Aid Society, Mothers' Aid Society, Christ Child Society, Bethany Social Center, citizens' relief committee and the Indianapolis Flower Mission.

California educators are pioneers in making use of moving pictures for educational purposes. H. M. Rebok, superintendent of schools in Santa Monica, Cal., and southern California member of the state committee arranging the educational exhibit at the exposition in San Francisco, announces that moving pictures will be used daily to show visitors what the California schools and colleges are doing. Pupils in the manual training, domestic science and other departments will be shown at work and the entire system from kindergarten through all the grades, high schools and colleges will be portrayed.

AIN'T HE A SONOFAGUN?

Remember a week or two ago we called attention to the fact that Richard Willis was trying to hang something on us in spite of ourselves by sending in pictures of his friends reading MOTOGRAPHY, thus compelling us to print stuff that he couldn't get past no other way? Well what do you think? Instead of being squelched by our intended reprimand, he comes back this week with the following:

Neil Caward Sir—d'think that YOU can stop my contributions? POOH!
No matter how you fret and stew, some reams I'll send ere I am through.
It's useless Sir, to run that bluff, 'tis futile Sir, to cry "enough,"
I recognize the fact it's tough, that you should flounder through the stuff.
At times I know it's cussed bad—I'm paid to do it (aint' that sad?)
And if my previous stuff was bum, cheer up—the worst is yet to come.
Just bathe your temples—don't get blue, I've bought new pencils, new pads too.
Neil Caward Sir, d'think that YOU, can stop my contributions? POOH!

Can you beat it?

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Harry Weiss, who is just entering his twenty-seventh year, is said to be the youngest of the Chicago film exchange managers. What he is short in years, he has made up in experience. Graduating from St. Vaitors College at Kankakee, Illinois, in 1902, Mr. Weiss put in two years studying electricity, and in 1904 was employed by the Chicago Edison Company, as calibrater, having charge of the meter department of the entire south side division of the City of Chicago. Early in 1905 whenever there was moving-picture-machine trouble in Chicago, (and in those days there were but six or seven machines in operation at two of the theaters in Chicago, and a few of the colleges), the work had a fascination for Mr. Weiss, as it coupled electricity with mechanics, and the year 1906 showed him to be a full-fledged member of the old Chicago Moving Picture Operators' Local, having one of the first cards issued in Chicago. Between 1906 and 1908 Mr. Weiss in short succession became operator and then owner of a string of a moving picture theater. In 1908 he became associated with the Chicago Film Exchange, working in the various offices throughout the country. Mr. Weiss has also been manager of the Duluth Film Exchange of Duluth, Minnesota, the Minneapolis Feature Film Exchange of Minneapolis, the Feature Film Sales Company of Chicago, and was associated with the General Film Company's Minneapolis branch. Being a Chicago man, he finally drifted back to his old home town in 1911. Early in 1914 he met L. J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, and on April 29, 1914, took charge of the Chicago office, which then boasted of 600 square feet of space, and two employees. Today the same office occupies an entire floor, has twenty-one employees, and is doing exactly twenty times the business that it did when Mr. Weiss took charge.

G. M. Anderson has leased the Morosco theater, Los Angeles, Calif., where a company recently organized in New York will play musical comedy stock. Thomas Ince and two other picture men have also secured a lease on the old Lyceum theater of the same city, formerly playing Orpheum acts. It is Mr. Ince's intention to use the house for burlesque productions.

Sydney Ayres, director of and leading man with the Big U company of Universal, has received an invitation from Jack London to spend part of his summer vacation at the home of the noted author in Glen Ellen, Cal. Mr. London and Mr. Ayres for years have been the closest of friends, both being fond of outdoor sports.

Del Henderson, for the past six years comedy director for the Biograph, has joined Keystone.

That the Griffith-Mutual forces in Los Angeles are to be augmented from now on with stellar recruits from the legitimate stage became known last week when it was announced that Harry Woodruff, of "Brown of Harvard" and "When We Were Twenty-One" fame, had been secured to play the lead in a four-reel feature production.

Samuel Goldfish announces on behalf of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company that it has been decided to feature House Peters in "The Unafraid," the new picturization in which Rita Jolivet makes her screen debut under Lasky management.

According to word given out by officials of the concern, the plant of the Oz Film Company at Hollywood, Calif., which has been closed for several weeks, will reopen April first with a full company of players for the filming of the tales by L. Frank Baum.

Stanly Twist, former advertising manager for the Selig Company, has purchased state right for California on the widely advertised Captain Williamson submarine pictures.

Despite the damage done to Universal City, Calif., by the recent unexpected storm, General Manager Isadore Bernstein announces positively that the city will open on March 15, as planned.

Four George Kleine attractions, "Vendetta," "Othello," "Judge Not," and "The Golden Beetle," which heretofore have been booked through the special feature department of the General Film Company, are now available for rental through the thirteen Kleine branch offices.

Arrangements have been made by the west coast branch of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the holding of an inspection day, dance and rodeo at Universal City, Calif., on March 7, one week prior to the formal opening of the city.

It is not generally known that R. A. Walsh, director with the Reliance-Majestic Company at their Hollywood, Calif., studios, is the son of Tom Walsh, well-known New York politician.

At the initial showing of "Alias Jimmy Valentine,' Harry Weiss, of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation, pulled off a novel "stunt." Everybody connected with the city government, from officials down to the women social workers, were invited. In the audience could be seen jailers and turnkeys from the municipal institutions of the city.

Carlyle Blackwell, of Favorite Players, his director and scenario writer, have been sitting with corrugated brows reading and considering six novels to determine which shall be the next feature photoplay they will produce.

Roszika Dolly and Martin Brown, a pair of the cleverest dancers on Broadway, have been screened for the Universal program in several of their most popular dances.

Biograph Company—Several lots of this stock passed hands within the last week at between 50 and 55. Trading activity in this security seems to be increasing.

Mutual Film Corporation—Sales of the common have been reported at 82 and better, and 61 and better for the preferred. These two securities continue to be the most sought after in the motion picture field.

New York Motion Corporation—The last three days there has been a constant demand and sales of odd lots have been reported at 77 and 78.

World Film Corporation—As the par value of this company's common stock is $5.00—the bid price of 4 represents 80 in terms of a par of 100. This still seems a trifle high, for one need only to compare it with a like bid of 80, which happens to be the present market of Mutual Film common. The Mutual Film Corporation has had a seasoned record for a number of years and a consistent paymentof dividends of 1 per cent a month on the common stock, whereas World Film Corporation's life can be computed as yet only in months and no dividends have yet been paid.

Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation—This company reports an increase in business in certain localities—such as Cincinnati, New Orleans, Omaha and throughout the south and west (with the exception of Chicago, where the serial does not apparently take hold). The receipts recently are understood to be at an increasing rate.

As a memento of her stay in the Hawaiias with the 101 Bison Company last summer, Marie Walcamp, leading woman with the company, recently received from Duke Kanakancaku, world's amateur swimming champion, a present in the form of the identical surfboard on which she received her first instruction in the sport of surf riding.

Irving Cummings, of the American studios, has become enthusiastic about aviation through his friendship with De Lloyd Thompson, the California bird-man. At Hope Ranch recently Mr. Cummings took several "ground lessons" and expects to be able to explore the clouds in the near future.

"Enoch Arden," an adaptation from the poem by Lord Tennyson, is the latest Majestic-Mutual four-part release. The production was made by W. Christy Cabanne and Lillian Gish, Wallace Reid and Alfred Paget are featured in the cast.

R. H. Fox and Harry Weiss, of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation, made a flying trip into the state of Iowa, and flew out with over $2,000 worth of bookings last week.

J. Warren Kerrigan of the Kerrigan-Victor Company has become a bird and animal fancier. At his home in Hollywood, Calif., he has a collection of blooded dogs, hares, pigeons, chickens and ducks, several of which have taken prizes at local shows.

Charlotte Burton, one of the leading players of the Flying "A" Company at Santa Barbara, Calif., has returned from Los Angeles full of talk about her new wardrobe.

Word has been received at the Kleine offices of the completion of the big new studio at Grugliasco, Italy. Foreign reports claim it to be one of the largest and best appointed plants in the world.

Under the direction of Allen Curtis, the Joker Comedy Company has completed the first of a new comedy series by Clarence Badger, entitled "My Lady Baffles and Detective Duck." The series is intended as a good-humored travesty on the general run of detective stories that have become so popular recently.

Following his policy of promoting the people that work in his office, Harry Weiss, manager of the Chicago branch of the World Film Corporation, has promoted James Salter, formerly shipping clerk, to city salesman.

Charles Cleary, formerly of Selig, is featured in the Reliance-Mutual release, "A Day That Is Dead." This two-reeler was suggested by Tennyson's poem, "Break, Break, Break," and was produced by George Nichols.

Many moving picture theaters all over the country are planning to distribute small black boxes as souvenirs at each episode of the Universal serial, "The Black Box."

Maurice Costello, the popular director-star of the Vitagraph players, made arrangements to begin the celebration of Washington's Birthday on Sunday, February 21. When asked why he started so early, he remarked that it usually took two days, as it was a double celebration, Washington's and his own, Mr. Costello having been born on February 22.

Jack McDonald, Guy Oliver, Josephine Miller and Lamar Johnstone in a scene from Selig's "The Lady of the Cyclamen."

Barry O'Neil has begun the filming of Clyde Fitch's powerful society drama, "The Climbers." The scenario for this was prepared by Clay M. Greene. Miss Gladys Hanson has been engaged especially for this production and will be supported by a strong cast, which includes George Soule Spencer, Jack Standing, Charles Brandt, Ruth Bryan, Rosetta Brice, Peter Lang and Ferdinand Tidmarsh.

William Welsh, the talented character actor, has just signed another contract with the Universal Company and will continue to appear in Imp productions as hertofore.

The wedding of Clarence Jay Elmer and Edith Anderson at the Lubin studio.

Richard C. Travers appears in a dual role in the three-reel farce comedy, "Mr. Buttles," produced by Essanay. He appears first as the Earl of Everdun, then takes the part of his own double, Huggins, who is an author and newspaper man looking for local color.

Arthur D. Hoteling, director of the Lubin southern company in Jacksonville, Florida, arrived at the Philadelphia studio this week and before returning to his own players will stage a comedy.

Neal Burns, the well-known musical comedy comedian, has joined the Nestor Company in Universal City, Cal.

Vivian Reed is one of the most recent stars to join the Selig Jungle-Zoo studio. Miss Reed will be remembered as "The girl with the Million-dollar Smile," and the beauty who starred with Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Heart of Maryland," but who preferred to remain in beautiful Southern California to returning to the East with her company.

Droll Hank Mann of Keystone comedy fame has joined the L-Ko Company at the Universal West coast studios.

Emmett Campbell Hall, the Lubin scenario writer, dropped in at the Lubin studio this week with a kitful of new photoplays to look things over. Hall, unlike many of the other Lubin writers, does scarcely any writing at the studio. He lives in Glen Echo, Maryland, and spends practically all of his time there writing. Periodically he emerges from his retreat, always accompanied by a number of new photoplays.

Tess of the Hills—Biograph—March 1.—Tess loves Zack Clay, a mountaineer, but he marries another girl, named Mary, and she vows that he will pay for his act. Two brothers arrive in the vicinity and one attempts to embrace Mary and is ordered from the house by Zack. Next day the worthless brother is killed by an accident, which is witnessed by Tess, and Zack is arrested for the crime because of what transpired the previous night. Tess determines to say nothing of what she has seen. There is some talk of Zack being acquitted on the day of the trial, and the dead man's brother vows that if he is freed, he will kill the murderer himself. Tess is overcome by conscience and determines to tell what she knows, but when she reaches the court she is told that Zack has been acquitted and is on his way home. She knows that the brother of the dead man will be waiting for him and hurriedly follows him down the trail, arriving in time to take the bullet from the avenger's gun which was meant for Zack. She explains everything, and the dead man's brother realizes that in her he has met a woman whom he can love.

Patsy Among the Fairies—(Tenth of the "Patsy Bolivar" Series)—Lubin—March 1.—While hiding in the cornfield, Patsy falls asleep and dreams that he is visited by fairies, of whom Mary and her husband, Jack, are queen and king. He is taken before the throne of Titania and told that he will be granted three wishes. He at once proceeds to call for his father and spank him; Sykesy is provided with fickle Tilly as a helpmate, who is certain to cause him trouble the rest of his life; he himself is blessed with the love of a faithful woman, who proves to be the constantly loyal Jane. About this time, however, Patsy is rudely awakened by a rain storm and hurriedly seeks refuge under the top of a farmer's wagon, which starts almost immediately toward the city.

In Spite of All — Edison — (Three Reels)—March 1.—A great, three-cornered battle between a "vampire" for a married man's love, his struggle to resist her and her mysterious perfume, and the tortured wife's unwavering love and battle to hold her husband. From Mrs. Fiske's greatest stage triumph of the same name. Reviewed on page 281 of the February 20 issue.

Sweedie's Hopeless Love—Essanay—March 1.—A typical "Sweedie" comedy, in which Wallace Beery and Ben Turpin are the chief fun-makers. The story deals with the attempts of Sweedie to gain the love of a grocery boy. The latter, however, cannot exactly enjoy her attentions, and makes many comical attempts to avoid delivering groceries to the home in which she is employed as cook. When he is forced to make the delivery by his employer, Sweedie insists on embracing him. He hides in a closet, and when the husband of Sweedie's mistress returns home and discovers him he thinks him a suitor for his wife's affections. The delivery boy escapes and secures another position, but again Sweedie gets on his trail. The limit is reached when the loving miss secures a position as cook in his boarding-house. A fire breaks out and Sweedie offers to save her Romeo, but he prefers death. There are many incidents which will draw real laughs. C. J. C.

Barriers Swept Aside—Kalem—March 1.—Because of petty misunderstandings, Jack and Natalie are divorced. Natalie secures a position in the office of Murchison, the lawyer, who represented her during the divorce proceedings. He makes advances to her and she is forced to accept what she considers insults in order to keep the position which is supplying her with a means of livelihood. Jack realizes his folly and pleads with Natalie to return to him, but she refuses. At a dinner in Jack's home, Murchison, while intoxicated, coarsely announces that he is to soon be Natalie's husband. Jack throws the man from the house and, unable to stand the thought of the woman he loves being the wife of such a brute, hurries to Natalie's apartments, where he finds her kissing his own picture. She at first protests and says that she does not love him, but he takes her in his arms and they agree to be re-married.

A Child of the Prairie—Selig—(Two Reels)—March 1.—A thrilling Tom Mix picture in which Mix appears in the role of a young rancher, whose wife elopes with a gambler. Compelled to break camp very hurriedly one day, they abandon the woman's three year old baby, who has wandered away, and she is later found and adopted by some friendly cowboys. Years later, the rancher, now the sheriff of the county, rescues a pretty girl from a runaway accident, and after later meeting and killing the gambler, whom he instantly recognized, he learns the girl he rescued was his own daughter. See review on page 319, issue of February 27.

Burglarious Billy—Vitagraph—March 1.—Nellie's father objects to the attentions of Billy and the young man conceives a brilliant idea to win favor in the eyes of the parent. He masks as a burglar and gets into the house, covering father with a revolver. A real crook gets in about the same time, and is discovered by the maid, who calls the police. Billy and Nellie, when they learn of the other intruder, hide in a closet while father and the police engage in a mix-up. Finally Billy traps the real crook and hands him over to the police. Father then agrees that Billy is not so bad after all.

Columba—Biograph—March 2.—Colomba, daughter of a Corsican landowner, finds her father dead at his table with evidence nearby to point to the fact that Agostini, a millwright, is the murderer. There has been a quarrel between the rival landowner and her father over a leasehold of Agostini's and the girl at once suspects that her father's enemy is responsible, and not the millwright. She summons her lover, a bandit chief, and sends word to her father's rival and his two sons to beware of his vengeance. Her brother is set upon in the mountains by the rival's sons, but is rescued by the bandit chief, who kills them. Soldiers seek Colomba's brother, but he is warned by his sister and his sweetheart, Lydia, the daughter of the general who commands the troops. The brother and the girl's lover determine to surrender, but the confession of the landowner's rival clears them of the guilt of the crime.

When Mother Visited Nellie—Lubin—March 2.—Uncle John has promised to leave Henry, his nephew, a million or two, and when he announces his intention of visiting him, both Henry and his wife make elaborate plans. The wife's mother wires that she is coming at the same time, but as Uncle John has a dislike for mother-in-laws, they try to put her off. She arrives before they sent out the warning, however. By passing her mother off as her sister, the wife makes things very agreeable for Uncle John, who falls in love with the other visitor. When Uncle John proposes to his nephew's mother-in-law he fears to announce his engagement, because he believes she must have a tyrannical mother. Numerous complications arise, but in the end Henry explains everything to his uncle and, seeing there is no mother-in-law in his part of the deal, Uncle John makes Henry's mother-in-law his wife.

Hypno and Trance, Subjects—Edison—March 2.—A good hearty laugh is assured by this William Wadsworth-Arthur Housman comedy. Hypno and A. Trance, friends, attend a hypnotist's performance, and decide that they can distribute trances themselves. Their ludicrous attempts are not only unsuccessful but most disastrous for all concerned. C. R. C.

The Dance at Aleck Fontaine's—Essanay—March 2.—This pleasing picture contains considerable dramatic action and teems with realistic atmosphere of the snow-covered North. E. H. Calvert, Richard C. Travers and Ruth Stonehouse have the leading roles. The plot hinges upon the superstition which exists among the people of the far-off forests that the soul of a strong man, slain by a weaker one, will arise and wreak vengeance on the slayer. The bad man and the carefree son of the North both love Adele Fontaine, daughter of the dance hall owner, who returns the affection of the latter. When his rival leaves on a trip into the wilds, the bad man follows and shoots him. He leaves him for dead and returns to the settlement. The worthy suitor is found by a priest and brought to Fontaine's on the night of a big dance. When the bad man sees the other he flees in terror and falls over a cliff, meeting his death as Adele goes to the arms of the man she loves. It seems safe to predict that this will "take" in the average house. C. J. C.

Flirtatious Lizzie—Kalem—March 2.—Strongarm Will, Desperate Dud, and Dauntless Dan are all "kept on the string" of flirtatious Lizzie. Lizzie's father suggests that they play a game of horseshoes to decide who shall marry the girl. Strongarm Will secures a magnetized rod and two horseshoes and makes the most remarkable shots imaginable, ringing the rod no matter which direction he throws the shoes. His two rivals, however, suspect foul play, and shower him with horseshoes. He flees and runs into the waiting arms of Lizzie who, angry at the brutality of the two unsuccessful suitors, announces her intention of marrying Will.

The Man From Texas—Selig—March 2.—Some clever gun play makes this picture unusual. The beautiful sister of the Man from Texas is deserted by an unscrupulous gambler whom she has married, and ere she dies sends her brother a letter in which she tells of her desertion and encloses a picture of the man who betrayed her. The brother, months later, arrives in town, finds the gambler paying attention to another girl, and after shooting the man down, escorts the girl safely home. Tom Mix and Goldie Colwell featured.

The Silent Plea—Vitagraph—(Three Reels)—March 2.—Immediately after his admittance to the bar, John Aldrich asks Marie Carson to become his wife, but she tells him of her engagement to another man. Downcast, he plunges into study with his whole heart and rapidly rises in his chosen work. Time passes swiftly and Marie's husband is killed by an automobile, leaving her with two children. She secures piece work, at which she makes a bare living, but this is taken from her when her employer makes advances to her and she repulses him. The children do not receive the proper care, as their mother is forced to be away from home most of the time in order to provide them with enough money to live. In time they are placed in a reform school and there are brought in contact with children of the lower classes and form unworthy ideals to carry them through life. When they have grown up the boy is arrested for embezzlement and sent to prison. Marie, having heard that John Aldrich is now a state senator, visits him and through his influence her boy is pardoned. Upon hearing her story, Aldrich is greatly surprised, for he has just finished preparing a speech against the widows' pension bill, which he was to make the following day. He changes his mind, however, and makes the speech in favor of the bill and is largely instrumental in having it passed. Some time later John visits Marie and asks her to become his wife. This time she agrees.

A Woman Went Forth—Lubin—(Two Reels)—March 3.—Jack Rodgers and his wife, Ethel, have been married a year. He is a successful architect, in partnership with his father, while she has attained fame as an amateur sculpturess. The city offers a prize for a public arch design, and a competitor of Jack and his father hires his nephew, Guy Denton, to cause Jack's downfall and thereby eliminate him from the contest. Guy persuades Jack to lead a fast life, and Ethel, angry at her husband, also plunges into the social whirl. Guy eventually manages to ruin Jack's design by spilling ink on it, and when Jack finds his design gone and Guy in the room with Ethel, he renounces both of them and locks himself in his room to work on another design, as only a day remains before the prize is to be awarded. Left alone, Ethel sees the daughter of her housekeeper and, falling asleep, dreams of the happiness she could have found in motherhood. She also dreams of the tragic outcome of the life she is leading, and upon awakening dashes the figure she had modeled and called "Fashion," while under the spell of society, to the floor. Jack is attracted by the noise and rushes to her. A reconciliation takes place and when the daughter of the housekeeper enters the room she is taken into Ethel's arms. Jack is happy to see that his wife has at last realized the thing that was lacking to make their home a happy one.

The Heavenly Cook—Edison—March 3.—A good comedy on an old subject, namely a young wife's pitiful attempts to cook digestible food, featuring Bessie Learn, Harry Beaumont, Lou Gorey and Dan Mason. Gladys Rich discharges her cook because of her contemptuous independence, and gets dinner ready herself for her husband and his father, who is visiting them. The two men throw the food out of the window and go out to a restaurant to eat. Gladys becomes disgusted with the kitchen work and induces Bridget to return. As the men praise Gladys for her skill, Bridget marches in and takes the glory away from her. C. R. C.

A Couple of Side-Order Fables—Essanay—March 3.—Two George Ade fables which, as the title suggests, are of the light variety, but which are nevertheless pleasing. The first one deals with the attempts of many suitors to win favor in the eyes of Fastidious Fanny and many amusing incidents are used to illustrate their failure. Finally the erstwhile suitors become tired of her fickleness and each gets another girl. In despair, Fanny hangs out a sign, "Man Wanted." Betty Brown carries off premier honors by her interpretation of Fanny. In the second fable, entitled "Azalea and Her Celebrities," Bobby Bolder is the chief fun-maker in the role of a tired husband whose wife persists in dragging celebrities into their home. He finally decides to give her a dose of her own medicine, and has a comic opera actress visit them. Her actions shock the wife and she decides that their home is far happier when celebrities are not present. C. J. C.

Jared Fairfax's Millions — Kalem — March 3.—The girl detective and Warrington, her assistant, learn of an attempt to burglarize the home of Jared Fairfax, who has an immense fortune concealed in a vault built in the cellar of his mansion. The girl detective announces that the criminals will doubtless return and hides with her assistant. Her theory proves correct and the crooks come back that night but, though they are captured, they manage to turn the tables and lock the girl and Warrington in the vault. The girl, however, finds a means of escape by blowing out a fuse and bringing men from the power house to repair the damage done. These men discover the girl and Warrington and release them. Fairfax's servant tells the girl that he was innocently made an accomplice of the crooks, and leads the clever female sleuth and a band of policemen to the crooks' headquarters. A wild fight follows, which ends in the capture of the culprits.

The Missing Ruby—Selig—March 3.—A detective drama in which Bessie Eyton is featured. The story tells of the meeting of Bessie Blake, the girl detective, with Tom Sterling, the son of a millionaire broker. Later, when Tom's sister, Marion, is about to be wed, Bessie Blake is summoned to guard the wedding presents, among which is a priceless ruby given by a wealthy uncle, which is kept in an antique box with a false botton. Felix La Trobe, a friend of Tom's, with a strong inclination to become a detective himself, volunteers to guard the jewel, and after its disappearance accuses Bessie of being the thief. Though circumstantial evidence seems to be against her, Bessie astounds them all by disclosing a secret compartment in the bottom of the jewel box, which was unconsciously opened by Marion when she accidentally pressed the secret spring. Felix is naturally humiliated over his mistake.

The Girl at Nolan's—Vitagraph—March 3.—Wiles, a middle-aged rancher, holds a mortgage on the home of widow Colby, and wishes to secure both her lands and herself. He tells her that unless she marries him, he will foreclose the mortgage. Her son, Will, goes to the city to borrow sufficient money from a rich cousin to clear the notes Wiles holds. Wiles, however, tells a band of outlaws that Bill will return by stage on a certain day with the money, and they plan to hold him up. Kitty, a niece of Nolan the tavern keeper, after hearing the plot, warns Mrs. Colby, who in turn tells Will. Will manages to come through on the stage without being recognized by the outlaws, as he masquerades as a woman. Kitty greets the strange "girl" who arrives on the stage, and later learns that it is Will. The dutiful son pays off the mortgage and orders Wiles from the property. When happiness is restored to his own home, he again visits Kitty, and tells her of his love.

The Ward of the Mission—Biograph—March 4.—The second husband of a young widow is a worthless drunkard, but rather than have him mistreat the child of her first husband, she places the boy in a mission. Years later the boy wishes to become a monk, but the good fathers say that he must see something of the world before giving up his life to religion. The boy starts out and goes to a tavern, where the keeper robs him of all the money he has. A kindly woman befriends him as he leaves and learns that he is none other than her own son. She goes within to take the money away from her worthless husband and return it to her son, but in the struggle which follows the husband is accidentally shot and before he dies he confesses how worthless his life has been, and exonerates his wife. The boy, disgusted with the outside world, returns to the mission while the mother, who does not wish to let him know of the life she has led for these many years, allows him to go unmolested.

Slippery Slim's Wedding Day—Essanay—March 4.—As usual, the actions of Victor Potel, as Slim; Margaret Joslin, as Sophie, and Harry Todd, as Mustang Pete, furnish many laughs. The first part of the story is given over to playing "postoffice," at which Slim and Sophie prove very efficient. Later Slim becomes engaged to Sophie, much to Mustang's disgust. On the wedding morning Mustang sees his rival's foot sticking out of his bedroom window and paints it black. He then tells the neighbors that Slim has the black plague, and as a result Slim almost loses his bride. All ends happily, however, after Slim's predicament has aroused considerable amusement. C. J. C.

The Hermit of Bird Island—Lubin—(Three Reels)—March 4.—Viola Van Tassel, a society girl, is disappointed because her fiance, the Earl of Betzwood, will be unable to sail his speed boat in the race, because of an injured arm. She visits a fishing village and there meets Dave, who owns a high-powered fishing boat and who longs to drive a real speed craft. She persuades him to enter the race and pilot the earl's boat, and flies above the boat in aeroplane during the race, to urge him on. When he wins the race, he realizes that he is in love with her, and upon learning that she is engaged to the earl, decides to commit suicide by swimming out to sea. He realizes his folly when he is far from shore and, clinging to a raft, is washed upon a lonely island. He builds a cabin and becomes a hermit. Viola's country cousin, Agnes, visits her and the earl makes love to her. When she realizes his perfidy, she also determines to commit suicide, and rows out to sea. By chance she is washed upon the same island and, though Dave makes her as comfortable as possible, he never speaks to her, as he firmly believes that all women are unworthy of his love. That he cares for her is evident, however. One day the earl, while cruising, visits the island. When he discovers Agnes he makes advances to her, but Dave comes to the rescue. He thrashes the earl and then tells Agnes that he loves her, for he can no longer suppress his feelings. The girl sends a note to Viola, telling her to bring a minister to the island that evening, and then puts Dave to a test during the day. When the minister arrives that evening, Agnes is satisfied that he has proved his manhood. They are married and remain on the island for their honeymoon.

Love and Limbo—Mina—March 4.—Johnny and Jimmy are twin brothers and look so much alike that their own father cannot tell them apart. Jimmy is pugnaciously inclined, while Johnny is an ardent advocate of peace. Years pass and the brothers grow up, one aggressive and scrappy and the other quiet and peaceful. Jimmy's ability to handle his fists lands him in jail, while Johnny's quiet disposition lands him in the state of matrimony. Jimmy finally escapes, while Johnny, who has discovered that marriage is not what it is cracked up to be, also makes his escape. The police arrest Johnny, thinking him to be Jimmy, and take him back to jail, while Johnny's wife catches Jimmy and leads him home, believing him to be her husband. Jimmy quickly makes his escape and gladly returns to jail, where he explains that he belongs behind the bars and that Johnny is welcome to his place at home.

Peggy of Fifth Avenue—Vitagraph—March 4.—Peggy Bryant, an heiress, lives on Fifth avenue with her aunt, who is socially ambitious. Through the efforts of the latter, she promises to wed a count, but after reading the book, "Peg Woffington," she determines to test the count's love, for she recalls the true love which once was a part of her life when she was the fiancee of Bruce McAlpin, a young doctor. She has a portrait of herself painted and, while it is admired in her presence, she later learns that the count is ridiculing it, when she hides behind the portrait, substituting her own face for the painted one. The count's peasant wife, whom he deserted some time before, is also discovered by Peggy at this time. When he is confronted with evidence of his character he makes a hurried exit. The next day, while visiting the count's wife, Peggy meets Bruce, who is giving the poor woman medical service free of charge. Love is again kindled in the hearts of the society girl and the physician.

The Deputy's Duty — Biograph — March 5.—Following a quarrel over a minor affair, a cowboy kills a halfbreed and flees to the hills. A new deputy has been appointed by the sheriff and he visits his sweetheart to tell her of the news. The deputy is sent after the cowboy and, as the chase grows hotter, the cowboy seeks protection from the girl, who hides him in a closet. Thinking he will be able to escape with the money, the cowboy steals a purse he finds and leaves. When the posse rides off, the girl is heartbroken, as the money was intended to buy a wedding dress for her. When the cowboy discovers this from a note, he returns with the money and tells her that he has a sweetheart waiting for him at home. The girl then forgives him and wishes him all the happiness in the world. Just as he is leaving the cabin the deputy rides up and shoots without a moment's consideration, killing the cowboy. When he learns from his sweetheart what has taken place, he bows his head in sorrow, but he has only done his duty.

The Tragedy of the Rails—Edison—(Two Reels)—March 5.—Belle, a telegrapher in a small railroad town, and Bob Hillman are sweethearts. The enginemen give a masquerade ball and the lovers attend without telling each other how they are going to be dressed. Bob obtains a domino costume and Belle dresses in her brother's overalls. Dared by a few of the girls, Belle enters the smoking room. The men suspect her sex and gather around and tease her. Bob is chagrined when Belle takes off her mask, and scolds her for her rashness. She returns her engagement ring to him and, during the remainder of the dance, turns her attentions to Tony Malone. The next day Tony attempts to embrace her, but is repulsed. Later he sees Bob mount the cab of his engine, and determines to revenge his wounded feelings upon him. Climbing into the cab, he knocks Bob unconscious and throws the throttle wide open. His gun, cocked in his pocket, is accidentally discharged, and Tony falls dead. Belle is warned of the approach of the wild engine and, using a speeder, meets it. By a daring leap she boards the locomotive and reverses the throttle just in time to prevent a head-on collision with a passenger train. Bob and Belle become reconciled, and form their plans for their wedding. Reviewed on page 309 of the February 27 issue. C. R. C.

The Strength of the Weak—Essanay (Two Reels)—March 5.—David Fleming inherits the drug habit from his father, but determines to conquer it for the sake of his mother and sweetheart. At the death of his mother he again weakens, but for his sweetheart's sake he goes into the north woods to fight it out alone. His rival knows of his weakness and sends him a package of the drug. In a supreme struggle, David wins, and when his sweetheart visits him she realizes that he is at last a man. A complete review appeared on page 325 of the February 27 issue.

How Ida Got a Husband—Kalem—March 5.—Ida, a loving but impossible-looking maid of the Needham household, sends Mrs. Needham's picture to Bill Saddle, a westerner, in response to an ad. in a matrimonial paper. Bill at once comes to the city, where he meets Mrs. Needham on the street and follows her home. A crook breaks into the house, just as Saddle follows Mrs. Needham in and, although Ida protests that she is the one he is to marry, he determines to secure the original of the photograph as his wife. Things go from bad to worse when Mr. Needham returns home and finds the strange man in the house. Saddle finds the crook in hiding, and as he is a Justice of the Peace he at once marries Ida and the crook and makes his escape. The matter seems to be cleared up in the eyes of Ida's employers and, though the crook is not exactly happy with his lot, Ida is perfectly content to have a husband, no matter who he is.

The Good in Him—Lubin—March 5.—Poncho, an outlaw, who has been wounded, is saved from capture by a girl, who sends the posse on the wrong trail and then cares for him. Time passes and the girl's father is captured by cattle rustlers and led away to their camp in the mountains. While the girl's sweetheart goes for help, she follows the rustlers and is herself captured. Poncho stumbles upon the camp and discovers the peril of the girl who saved him. He rescues her and when she asks him to save her father he gives his life to repay the favor she did, by keeping the rustlers off until help arrives.

The Kidnapped Lover—Selig—March 5.—A clever little story in which William Scott and Elsie Greeson are featured. Nadine Blair, the daughter of a millionaire, is a confirmed flirt, and breaks the hearts of all the young men in the neighborhood, much to her father's wrath. When Jack Harris, a young Englishman, arrives, the father tells him that he will pay him a salary of one hundred dollars a week provided he will not make love to Nadine. The girl flirts outrageously with him, but he pretends to ignore her advances. Accidentally discovering the reason for his resisting her charms, Nadine one day while bathing permits him to rescue her from drowning, and later imprisons him in a small garden house, there to stay until he asks her to marry him. His attempts to escape and his final surrender will bring many laughs.

Two and Two—Vitagraph—March 5.—Disgusted because their husbands refuse to do any work, Mrs. Bunty and Mrs. Doty become suffragettes, and force their husbands to do all the housework. While they are attending a meeting, the husbands plan a rebellion and decide to become sick and make their wives believe that they have taken poison. The doctor, who is called on their case, knows their game, however, and makes them believe that they are really poisoned. He then tells the wives in the husbands' presence, that the only way to save them is to have them exercise the poison out of their systems. Again the husbands pitch into the housework, this time with a will, for they think they are working to save their lives.

Blown Into Custody — Biograph — March 6.—Woof-woof Walter, the bank looter, rides into town, orders the sheriff to hold his horse, secures the president's aid in helping him remove the money from the vaults, and then rides majestically away with the loot. The sheriff and a posse immediately dash after him and, because they persist in annoying him with bullets while he wishes to sleep, he decides to get rid of them and does so by sweeping them all down the side of a cliff with a huge boulder. As he is about to return to his slumbers again, he is suddenly blown into the air by an unexpected discharge of dynamite, placed there by a construction gang, and lands in the arms of a waiting posse. On the same reel is:

The Soup Industry—Biograph—March 6.—Another of the "Near Educational Series," in which the visitors to a soup factory see the raw materials being prepared and conveyed to the macerators, whence the finely chopped ingredients go to the big caldrons for boiling. They have considerable trouble when they get mixed up with soup in its various forms and many amusing incidents follow.

The Portrait in the Attic—Edison—March 6.—This is a charming little drama depicting the steadfastness with which a child clings to the memories of its mother, refusing to allow her place to be filled by her kind and sympathetic step-mother. The little girl's attitude towards her new mother changes, however, when, in a vision, she is visited by her real mother, who tells her to remember her always but to love and obey the new Mrs. Chadwick. Viola Dana, Miriam Nesbitt and Robert Conness featured.

Broncho Billy's Vengeance—Essanay March 6.—Strong dramatic acting on the part of G. M. Anderson and the clever arrangement of a melodramatic incident make this an exceptional western offering. Fade scenes are used to good advantage and the production as a whole is meritorious. Its true worth cannot be judged from the plot, for its strength lies in the way the subject has been treated. Broncho arrives at the bedside of his wife, who ran away from him, just as she dies. He secures a picture of the man who broke up his home and starts his search to find him. At last he locates him and then awaits his opportunity to avenge his wrong. He traps the man one day and is about to brand him with a red-hot iron, when the spirit of his wife appears to him and bids him let the man go. This Broncho does, and rides away over the hills.

The Death Train—Kalem—March 6.—A trio of counterfeiters send their paraphernalia to Lone Point, where it is discovered by Helen, who wires Savage, a railroad detective. He comes to her assistance at once, accompanied by Duncan, a secret service man. When the counterfeiters arrive, they fall into the trap which has been set for them, but two of the three get away. One of them is later captured by Savage, and Helen, while watching the capture from a high trestle, is attacked by the third, who is set on revenge. He ties her to the trestle and leaves her to her death. By loosening a cord and swinging in the air, she is enabled to grasp a beam when the train passes over the trestle and severs the cords which hold her in mid-air. Savage and Duncan, who have witnessed her struggle from afar but were powerless to help her, hurry to her aid and find that she is uninjured.

Socially Ambitious—Lubin—March 6.—Mrs. Pringle and her son are social climbers, but are handicapped by lack of funds. When their country cousin, Nancy, falls heir to a fortune she is very welcome in their home. She leaves her country lover, Dan, behind and goes to the city. For a while the Pringles spend her money without allowing her to attend any of the social functions, but one night she makes an unexpected debut and shocks society by her actions. Dan has studied social customs and arrives in the city the same evening. He joins Nancy and the two make quite an impression on the social set and, incidentally, disclose the true characters of the Pringles. The following morning both realize that they are not meant for society circles, and return to the country, neither sadder nor wiser, but much happier.

The Guardian's Dilemma—Selig—March 6.—One of the best Selig jungle zoo pictures, in which animals of almost every variety are utilized. Professor Jaquin Delano joins the circus to study zoology and the circus pitches its tent near the home of old man Cummings, who is the guardian of Anita, a beautiful girl. When Anita and Delano become interested in each other, the guardian orders him off the premises, since he refuses to have anything to do with an animal trainer. The lovers place the guardian in a dilemma by releasing a number of the animals and permitting them to roam over his premises. After seeing elephants in his yard, being treed by a panther and a bear, and chased by a monkey, Cummings is only too glad to summon Delano to capture the animals, and finally offers him anything under the sun to be rescued. Delano captures the animals and demands Anita's hand in marriage. Elsie Greeson and Franklyn Hall featured.

Roselyn—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—March 6.—Roselyn Lynn, an actress, is engaged to Phillips James, a young lawyer, and is heartbroken when he marries Helen Marr, whose social position gives him the opportunities he desires. Roselyn marries John Ware, a worthy man, but her brooding over Phillips' act and her determination to wreak revenge upon him causes their married life to be unhappy. The birth of her child brings happiness to Roselyn, but its death brings increased bitterness. She leaves her husband and returns to the stage. Phillips visits the theater one night and, when he sees her again, he becomes fascinated with her and she leads him on, determined to avenge the wrong he did her. As she is about to accomplish her purpose, the sight of his child awakens within her memories of the happiest moments in her life with her own child, and she returns to John, her own husband, thoroughly penitent and determined to make herself worthy of the man who really loves her.

The Gratitude of Conductor 786—Thanhouser—February 14.—When Conductor 786 is discharged because a woman, through her own carelessness, has fallen off of his car, Jack, the superintendent's son, persuades his father to reinstate the old man. A little later Jack appeals to the conductor to help him elope with Mary. The grateful conductor obtains the high powered line auto and they call for Mary, the parson, and a woman witness, all of them boarding the auto from upper story windows. The marriage is performed on the auto top and then the car slows down to allow Jack's father to catch up with them. Conductor 786 again comes to the rescue and effects a reconciliation between the superintendent and the newly married couple.

The Double Crossing of Slim—Reliance—February 24.—Mr. Brooks, a young millionaire, shows his wife a large diamond which he has recently purchased. Hearing him at the safe a short time later, she thinks that he has placed it there for safe keeping. Two crooks, Croaky and Slim, read of the purchase and plan to obtain the diamond. While Brooks is away on a short business trip, they enter his home and force his wife to open the safe. Thinking to double-cross his pal, Croaky takes the diamond from the safe and slips a paste imitation that he has bought to Slim. The latter is captured by the police and the stone examined. Angered at being duped by his pal, Slim tells where Croaky will try to dispose of the diamond. The detectives capture the other crook, but find that that jewel, too, is an imitation. Brooks returns home and finds his wife mourning over the late robbery. He laughingly unlocks his desk and takes out of it the real gem.

On Account of a Dog—Princess—February 26.—John Blake dislikes dogs. His young wife and Bob Mitchell, his partner, are very fond of them, however, and the partner takes Marie to the dog show. Later Blake finds a note from Bob to Marie, telling her that he has a plan whereby she can find happiness without her husband's knowledge. Furious, Blake follows them to a hotel. He is overcome with shame when, peeking through the keyhole, he sees his wife fondling a poodle pup. He assures Marie that thereafter she may have all the pets she wants.

$1,000 Reward—Thanhouser—February 26.—Madeline's mother is a widow and her twin sister, Marion, is crippled. Mrs. Goddard takes in sewing, and Madeline sells newspapers. The daughter of a wealthy man becomes interested in the newsgirl and induces her father to pay for an operation on Marion Goddard's hip. The Gordons then take Marion to their beautiful home to recuperate. Red Hogan breaks into the Gordon home, and through Marion's efforts and bravery, is captured. A reward of $1,000 is placed on the man, but Marion refuses it. Mr. Gordon retaliates by making the twins and their mother members of his own household.

The Man with a Record—Reliance—(Two Reels)—February 27.—Jim Doyle's prison record haunts him. His mother sends him to pawn her watch. In error the pawnbroker enters Doyle's name opposite the number and description of a stolen watch. Murphy, a detective and an enemy of Doyle's, traces the stolen watch to him, and he is sentenced to five years. Three years later he learns that his mother is dying, and escapes. While trying to rescue a girl, Doyle is struck by the governor's auto. He is taken to a hospital, recognized, and placed under arrest. The governor's daughter secures a doctor and visits Mrs. Doyle. She recognizes the doctor's watch as her own, and he tells the story of having bought it at the pawnshop while in college. The case is brought before the board of pardons and Doyle is freed before his mother's death.

Self-Hypnotized — Royal — February 27.—A doctor shows his wife a poison bottle which he has taken away from a would-be suicide. He empties it, and then answers a hurry call out of town. A burglar enters the house and forces the doctor's wife to serve him a cup of coffee. She makes him think that he has swallowed the contents of the poison bottle. The doctor returns, examines the frightened man, and says that nothing but an operation will save him. He calls up the police on the pretense of calling an assistant, and the man is handcuffed and led off.

A Costly Exchange—Komic—February 28.—Fred Moore and Ned Bates have new fall overcoats just alike. Moore also has a jealous wife, and Ned an engagement ring which he intends to present to Miss Clara Morrison. Ned forgets the ring and returns to the office for it. He places it in his overcoat pocket with Clara's gloves, and later picks up Moore's coat off of the rack and hurries back to meet Clara. She thinks he is making fun of her when he again fails to produce the ring. The next morning Mrs. Moore finds the gloves and ring in her husband's coat pocket and accuses him of going out with other women. In the end the four come together and the mystery of the appearing and disappearing ring and gloves is explained.

A Newspaper Nemesis—Thanhouser—February 28.—Spike, a desperate character, breaks into a jewelry store. He is surprised by Smith, the proprietor, and kills him. The police authorities are at a loss to trace the murderer. Molly Sayre, a reporter, determines to find the guilty man. She disguises herself and frequents the slums of the city, where she sees Spike. Instantly she suspects him. Molly gains his confidence and draws a confession from him. While showing her the plunder, the crook is suddenly seized with distrust for Molly, and attempts to overpower her. She is saved by the timely arrival of her lover, Sergeant Jack Grant, who followed the couple. She gets a clean scoop for her paper. Jack receives credit for a daring arrest, and he and Molly are married.

A Day That Is Dead—Majestic—(Two Reels) — February 28.— Edward Grey visits a seashore town, where he meets and falls in love with Elaine. In time Grey tires of the humdrum existence of a fisherman, and unfortunately meets Enid, a woman from the sphere of life in the city. He deserts his plain but faithful wife for the fascinating city beauty. In her despair Elaine tries to drown herself, but her brother saves her. In the city Grey quarrels with a rival and disgraces himself for Enid. Then it is that he realizes how shallow and fickle is her affection and loyalty. He returns to the village to beg Elaine's forgiveness, and finds only her brother, who is in inconsolable grief. Elaine is dead.

Heart of Flame—American — (Two Reels)—March 1.—The story of Keith Gordon, a violinist, who falls in love with Zira, a mountain girl, whom he calls his heart of flame. When Keith is offered a profitable concert engagement, he is tempted to return to the mountains to see Zira, and a struggle between fame and love is only decided when, to give his genius to the world, Zira pretends to love another. Broken hearted, Keith resumes his concert work, and later Zira follows him to the city, where she is stabbed by Checo, a knife thrower, and her death almost breaks up Gordon's career. See review on page 355, this issue.

The Haunting Memory — Beauty—March 2.—A pretty Beauty production in which Irving Cummings and Virginia Kirtley are featured. Cummings appears as Roderigo Perragini, who, when his sick mother dies when he is a lad of fifteen, she being deserted by her husband, swears that he will always remember the face of his father and some day wreak vengeance on him. Fifteen years later, under the nom de plume of Nicholas Celia, he is famous as a great cellist, and while playing at a social function sees and recognizes his father in a man who is introduced to him as the husband of his wealthy hostess. When later he is asked to play for this society woman, he is surprised alone with her by her husband, but, playing an air from "The Bohemian Girl," which had always been a favorite with his father, he surprises the husband into confessing that he is no other than Enrico Perragini, and Nicholas then discloses the fact that he is his son and informs the wife of her husband's previous desertion of the other woman.

Bobby's Bandit—Majestic—March 2.—Bobby and Sally start out on a fishing expedition, but Sally's father sends her home and Bobby is obliged to go alone. A rough-looking stranger takes his two fine bass away from him and he returns disconsolate to the village. There he sees the sheriff tacking up a sign offering a $500 reward for the capture of a dangerous bandit. Bobby decides to join in the search. So does Sally's father, who is the village constable. The latter disguises himself and sets out in search of the outlaw. Bobby sees a rough-looking character enter the constable's stable, and locks him in. He then notifies the sheriff and his posse, who surround the barn. When the door is opened, out rolls the constable. Bobby receives a scolding. But suddenly he remembers the man who relieved him of his catch of fish, and this time he puts the sheriff on the right trail.

On the Brink of the Abyss—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—March 2.—Jim Watson has but one redeeming trait—his love for his sister. Thinking he has killed a man, he moves to New York, where he becomes the leader of a band of gentlemen crooks. Mary Watson marries Jim Strong and moves to the metropolis. Strong becomes rich through an invention. Absorbed in his work, he unintentionally neglects Mary, who becomes infatuated with one of her husband's business associates. Watson enters Strong's house, and then discovers that it is his sister's home. He saves her from her folly. The police arrive and Watson, in trying to escape, is shot.

The Derelict—American—March 3.—Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen are seen to splendid advantage in this one-reel picture. Louise Wilke remarks in the presence of her fiance, Leo Holmes, and his friend, Bruce Morgan, that she could never pardon a man who drank. Later Leo becomes intoxicated at a banquet, and in that condition calls on Louise. This results in the engagement being broken off. Louise, with her thoughts then unconsciously turned towards Bruce, falls asleep and dreams that she becomes the wife of Bruce, who ten years later has grown into a drunken sot, who beats and mistreats her, while Leo is a human derelict drifting about the slums of the city. When Bruce attacks her one night, Louise stabs him with a pair of shears, and Leo, hearing Bruce scream, enters, picks up the shears and when the police arrive, declares he is the murderer. At that moment Louise awakens to find that she had only been dreaming, and after a careful consideration of the matter, forgives Leo and renews the engagement.

Winning Back—Broncho—(Two Reels)—March 3.—Ruth Castle plans to surprise her husband with an elaborate dinner and home celebration on the occasion of their fifth wedding anniversary. Rex Castle, however, has forgotten the anniversary in his infatuation for Yvette, a dancer. Mrs. Castle discovers in his overcoat pocket on the evening preceding the anniversary, a diamond necklace, which she supposes to be his gift to her. That evening at the theater she sees Yvette wearing the necklace, and realizes the truth. Going to Wallace, her husband's brother, she insists upon his taking her to a bohemian cafe, where she smokes and sings and is the life of the place. Rex, entering with Ruth, is shocked. He knocks down an habitue of the restaurant who evidently admires Ruth, and hurries her home. She tells him that she doesn't want to be good if it means losing his companionship. But the following evening the home celebration is a great success.

Your Baby and Mine—Reliance—March 3.—The joy of living disappears for Bob Sands when his baby brother comes. Sadly neglected, he appeals to Hilda for sympathy, but she takes a great liking to the young intruder, much to Bob's disgust. He becomes reconciled later when Hilda agrees to trade her toy auto for twenty-five cents and the baby. Mr. and Mrs. Sands are frantic when they find the baby gone. Mr. and Mrs. Crane are also worried about their infant, who, they believe, has swallowed a quarter. Crane sets off on a run with the child to a doctor. On the way he meets Sands, who, thinking that the baby is his own, takes it away from poor Crane. After much excitement and much phoning about town, the babies are restored to their rightful parents. Mrs. Crane finds the quarter which she supposed the baby had swallowed, and Mr. and Mrs. Sands realize that Bob deserves a little more attention, though there be a new baby in the house.

In the Warden's Garden—Domino—(Two Reels)—March 4.—Jim Haley, an ex-convict, is tempted into committing burglary by Shifty Anderson, a former pal. Shifty tips off the police, and Haley is caught and sentenced to ten years. Meanwhile, Mrs. Haley dies, and their little daughter, Thelma, is adopted from the orphanage by the warden's wife. Shifty, who is a stool pigeon, gets in wrong with the police and is sent to prison. There he points out Haley as the instigator of a planned mutiny. Haley escapes and takes refuge in the garden in the warden's yard. The mutiny, which is headed by Shifty himself, breaks out, and under the cover of the excitement Haley is not discovered. Thelma, playing in the yard, comes upon the convict, who recognizes her as his own child. She helps him get away in safety, and Haley promises that some day he will return for her.

On the High Seas—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—March 5.—Dirk Morgan, a member of a band of international crooks, secures passage for himself and Anne, a woman who deserted her husband and daughter to join the band, on the steamer Empress, leaving Melbourne with a large shipment of gold. Dirk secures the bow cabin, and cuts a hole through the partition, opening a way to the vault containing the gold. An electric drill gives him entrance to the vault and he removes the gold. He also secures provisions from the ship's storeroom and secrets them, with the loot, in a lifeboat. A party is given for the children on board on the night on which Dirk and Anne plant to cut loose in the lifeboat and blow up the ship to prevent their being followed. While waiting for Dirk, Anne hears a familiar voice, and, creeping to the dining salon, discovers her husband and daughter, Stella, within. She rushes into the cabin, grabs the bomb and throws it overboard. The officers and passengers, aroused by the sound of the explosion, find Dirk and Anne struggling. Stella recognizes her mother, and is the means of bringing about a reconciliation between her parents. Dirk is shot in resisting the sailors, and falls overboard.

His Return—Majestic—March 5.—Harry, a wild boy, is loved by Alice, his father's ward. One day, after a debauch, he quarrels with his father and runs away. Some years pass. The old father longs for his son, and the girl repels the advances of a suitor, feeling that some day Harry will return. When the father dies he makes his will in his son's favor, providing he comes back within a certain length of time. If he does not, the estate is to go to Alice. On the last day of grace Harry appears in the neighborhood. His old love comes back at sight of Alice, but he keeps his identity a secret, and, realizing his unfitness, goes away, leaving Alice to the fortune she deserves and to prospects of a worthier marriage.

Universal Program

Animated Weekly, No. 15.—Universal—February 24.—First straw hat appears in San Diego, California; Governor Whitman dedicates the Volunteer Hospital, New York City; Gasparilla Carnival, Tampa, Fla.; Admiral Dewa, Japan's representative to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, welcomed by Vice-President Marshall, Washington, D. C.; Miss Gladys Nicholson nominated by the motion picture industry as beauty queen of the Panama Exposition, Los Angeles; the latest fashions displayed in Chicago; memorial exercises at the monument of the battleship Maine, Washington, D. C.; numerous views from the battle line of Europe show both sides of the struggle; cartoons by Hy. Mayer of Puck.

Fatty's Infatuation—L-Ko—February 24.—Fatty and Johnny Boston Beans are rivals for the fair misses of the town. Fatty is given a dollar with which to pay the gas bill, but instead squanders it on a pretty girl. That night his conscience bothers him and he sets out the next morning to earn a dollar to replace the squandered one, but at the end of the day has but fifteen cents to show for his labors. The gas company shuts off the gas, and Fatty's parents force from him a confession of what happened to the dollar. He tells them that he "did it all for love," and instead of being whipped, as he had expected, he is heartily forgiven by his parents.

Pressing His Suit—Imp—March 1.—King promises to take Flo to a ball, and pawns two suits of clothes to obtain money for the ticket. He buys Flo a box of roses and sends them by messenger, also giving the boy his trousers to leave at the tailor's to be pressed. The boy gets the boxes mixed, and Flo becomes indignant on receiving the box containing King's trousers. Fanny, a friend, brings them together again, and the scene fades out as the iron, left to its own devices, burns a hole in the troublesome trousers.

The Water Cure—Joker—March 1.—Schultz and his wife go to the beach for the week-end with the Steins. The two men become enchanted with a fair damsel and are seen courting her by their wives. They decide to play a joke on their husbands, and, with the aid of some make-up and abbreviated swimming suits, attract the men's attention. They entice them out to a sand spit, where they reveal themselves and row away, leaving the poor men stranded. The wives are caught by the police and arrested for wearing abbreviated swimming suits. Knowing that their husbands are in desperate straits, the women escape from jail, row out to the sand spit and rescue the men. The police launch overtakes them and the men are forced to pay their wives' fines.

Smouldering Fires — Victor — (Two Reels)—March 1.—Nameless and homeless and just a bit of human driftwood, the boy comes to a western town. The bully and his gang enter the saloon in which he is employed as porter and insist on his holding up a card for them to shoot at. He flees and takes refuge with an old lady, the mother of a girl who sings in the saloon dance hall. The youth grows to love the kind lady and her daughter, and their uplifting influence changes him considerably. One day the bully attempts to force his attentions upon the girl. She tells the story of it at home and the boy, formerly a coward, goes out after the bully. The sheriff and the bully's gang come upon the pair and have a hard time preventing the boy from choking his adversary. The boy gains many friends and admirers through his courage, and the sheriff resigns his office in his favor. A new future has opened up for the nameless lad. J. Warren Kerrigan featured.

Their Hour—Gold Seal—(Two Reels)—March 2.—Mrs. Davis, whose husband is cold and unsympathetic, has a nervous breakdown and is advised to go to the seashore. Her only regret is at leaving her one child, a little girl. Mr. Austin leaves for the seashore to spend his vacation. His wife, a pampered society woman, was to accompany him, but changed her mind at the last moment, and also keeps their little boy at home. Mrs. Davis and Austin meet on the train and alight at the same junction to change trains. Mrs. Davis has fifty-eight minutes and Austin an hour to wait for their trains. In an exchange of confidences each learns that the other's marriage was prompted by duty rather than love. Suddenly they realize that they are in love with each other, and agree never to part, but the sight of two little children playing on the railroad tracks awakens their sense of duty to their own little children. When Mrs. Davis' train arrives, Austin places her on it and watches with tears in his eyes while it fades away in the distance.

When He Proposed—Nestor—March 2.—Eddie marries a nice girl, but later is surprised to find that in doing so he has married the whole family. They appropriate the $300 which he has left after buying a home for their own uses, giving it as the first payment on a touring car. In time Eddie tires of having his wife's relations monopolize his house and money, and sells the car, buying furniture with the proceeds. The family is indignant, of course, but Eddie is firm in his new resolution and is upheld by his wife, who decides that she loves him better than her folks, after all.

The Oath of Smoky Joe—Eclair—(Two Reels)—March 3.—Joe Brown dissolute, wild and lawless, is forced to leave town after a particularly bad escapade, and drifts out West, where he endeavors to forget his sweetheart of better days. His skill with a gun earns for him the name of "Smoky Joe." A strange friendship springs up between him and Red Peterson, a notorious outlaw. A girl from Joe's home town comes West, and, unaware of Red's true character, falls in love with him. Her simple charm and trust opens Red's eyes to a side of life he had never known, and he departs with the girl to become married and live straight. Joe finds his note, and swears to kill Red for deserting him. He shoots him and is horrified to find that Red's young wife is the sweetheart of his boyhood days. Overcome with remorse, he nurses Red's wound, and, after seeing them safely on their way, takes the outlaw's place and surrenders himself to the sheriff, who has been pursuing Red.

Bill's New Pal—L-Ko—March 3.—The waiter and the chef quarrel continually and about everything. In the first place, the chef weighs 300 pounds and monopolizes all of the bed clothes, which the waiter finds quite inconvenient on cool nights. The two are rivals for the hand of the fair cashier, and the proprietor objects on the grounds that it interferes with business. The end of the chef's patience is reached when he discovers the waiter holding a secret conference with the cashier. Choppers, saws, cleavers and knives fill the air. The waiter falls and the proprietor, patrons and waiters start chasing the chef. All of them fall down into the cellar. The waiter seeks safety in the oven, but the heat is responsible for his hasty exit.

The Recoil—Big U—(Two Reels)—March 4.—The newly elected district attorney, Charles Morrison, proves through a technicality in the law that the boxing exhibition given by the athletic league was a professional affair, and arrests all of the participants. Edna Gardner, a special writer for "The Spotlight," is sent to interview Ray Flannigan, the lightweight, on his release, and they become firm friends. One day while walking through the city park they see an announcement of a bridge party to be given by Claire Morrison, the district attorney's daughter. Edna thinks of a way of compromising Morrison, and attends the party under the guise of writing it up. She then informs the district attorney that he has the choice of withdrawing his prosecution against Ray or of being placed in a position where he will have to prosecute his own daughter for gambling. Morrison chooses the former course. Edna obtains a position for Ray in the newspaper office, and he makes a new start in life.

Such Is Life—Rex—March 4.—Olive Trent, a young girl aspiring to a brilliant career on the stage, arrives in New York and takes lodgings at Mrs. Jennings'. Her attempts to get an engagement meet with failure. Will Deming, an actor who also lives at Jennings,' sees Olive in an agency, is filled with admiration for her fresh young beauty and sympathizes with her in her distress. She repulses him, mistaking his motives. Their next meeting is at the boarding-house. Circumstances force Olive to accept Tod Wilkes' offer to place her in his burlesque company. While they are rehearsing the part in his room, Wilkes kisses her. Horrified and ashamed, Olive rushes downstairs to her room, and there finds Will and Polly, the maid, admiring Polly's rose bush, which Olive is taking care of. Will secures Olive's confidence, learns her troubles and obtains a place for her in his own company.

When Snitz Was Marriaged—Sterling—March 4.—Dot and her family anxiously await the arrival of Snitz, the bridegroom, but he fails to appear. Father calls him on the telephone, and Snitz, half asleep and only about half dressed, rushes to be in time for his own wedding. Then follows a hunt of a minister. Snitz secures one and, after encountering no end of mishaps, they arrive at the house only to learn that Dot has eloped with the milkman. The guests, Snitz and the minister arrive at the depot just in time to receive Dot's goodby, waved from the rear end of a swiftly moving train.

The Photoplay Without a Name—Imp—(Two Reels)—March 5.—A prize of $50 will be paid to the person suggesting the best title for this picture. The play begins with Dick Carson's release from prison. He sits down on a park bench, takes out the five-dollar bill given him at the prison, and thinks back to the events that transpired before he was sent to prison for three years. Some years before he was Dr. Carson, an able young surgeon with a large practice, but with an inherited weakness for liquor and gambling. Dr. Grant, his professional rival, is a clever surgeon, but has a small practice. He takes advantage of Carson's intoxicated condition one night and disconnects the telephone wires in his home. Mrs. Wilson, one of Carson's patients, grows steadily worse, and her husband tries repeatedly to get Dr. Carson on the phone, but is unsuccessful. As a result, the woman dies. Five years pass. Carson, little better than a tramp, has but one friend, Nell, a thief. He tries to save her from committing robbery one night by snatching the loot from her and returning it to the safe, but only the first part of the plan works. The police arrive before he can return the money. They fire and hit a little girl standing in the doorway. Carson makes a hasty examination, and says that only an operation can save her. Assisted by Nell, he performs it, and turns to see Grant, the child's father, watching him. Grant denounces Carson as a rogue and criminal, and the poor fellow is led off to jail. The sentence follows.

Rooms for Rent—Victor—March 5.—Mrs. Felt finds that her husband spends most of his money in saloons, and determines to put an end to the practice by carrying the family pocketbook herself. She leaves on an extended visit to her mother's, taking with her all of the family treasury. Desperate, Felt raises money by renting out the rooms. Mrs. Felt returns unexpectedly and the new cook, not knowing her, ejects her from the house. The enraged woman secures the garden hose and soon drowns the boarders out. Felt returns in the midst of the excitement and is made the center of attraction.

The Lost Ledge—101 Bison—(Two Reels)—March 6.—Andrew Leslie, a wealthy mining engineer, is plunged into bankruptcy by a fire which destroys the oil wells in which he has invested his entire fortune. Through a stroke of luck he meets Margaret Wallace and becomes acquainted with her father, a mine owner. Mr. Wallace offers Leslie a half interest in one of his mines in Mexico if he can locate its lost ledge. Leslie accepts and soon afterwards starts the search, assisted by Frank Foster, Margaret's fiance. He and Foster quarrel, and the latter in a fit of jealousy hires an old Indian to blow up a section of the mine in which Leslie and his old Aztec guide are industriously searching for the lost ledge. While imprisoned in the mine they stumble upon the ledge. In the meantime the old Indian becomes intoxicated with the money given him by Foster and exposes Foster's part in the mine explosion. In the melee which follows, the engineer is killed. Leslie escapes from the mine, tells Wallace of his discovery, and is rewarded by winning Margaret as his wife.

Some Nightmare—Joker—March 6.—Ernie would rather dream over his pipe than work and consequently is in rather straightened circumstances. His pal suggests that he attempt to borrow some money from his wife. Foolishly, Ernie tries, but the plan works out badly—and painfully. They rob a blind man, and rent two pipes from Hong Hee with the money. They go floating away on a wonderful cloud and dream of riches, beautiful women and a life of ease, but always the awful spectre of Ernie's wife intrudes, getting more fearful each time. They are so glad on awakening to find that their dream is not a reality that they swear off on the pipe forever.

The Reward—Powers—March 6.—Dayton Blair, fresh from college, asks Mr. Harrison's permission to marry his daughter, Claire, and is informed that he must first make good. The position offered is that of foreman in Harrison's oil fields. Dayton accepts. One of his workmen, Myers, dies and leaves his child in Blair's care. The foreman adopts her. Claire Harrison and her father pay a visit to the oil fields. Their first stop is at Blair's cabin, where they find a little girl. In answer to their question the little girl points to Blair's picture as being that of her father. This, of course, causes Harrison and his daughter to believe that Blair has deceived them. Hopkins, a driller, approaches Blair's shack and, hearing singing within, changes his mind about entering and peeks through the window. Inside Blair is rocking the little orphan to sleep. Harrison and his daughter return to Blair's shack to accuse him of being false. Hopkins beckons them to the window, and explains the relationship between Blair and the little girl. Claire enters, kneels beside the sleeping foreman and kisses him. He awakens and a happy reconciliation follows.

His Last Serenade—Laemmle—March 7.—Beppo, a poor Italian violinist, sits in his squalid room thinking of the beautiful past, in which he entertained the royalty with his music. Beppo wanders into a residential district one day and his playing attracts a little invalid, who sends her maid out to bring him in. Beppo and the little girl become firm friends and he visits her day after day, charming her with his music. After a few weeks have passed the girl's father sees the Italian enter the yard and, not knowing his intentions, chases him away as an ordinary beggar. Through fear of the man, Beppo stays away for some time, but is finally driven by his affection to call on the girl again. She is dangerously ill. The doctor orders Beppo to play, and the effect of the music on the girl's condition is marvelous. The crisis is passed safely, and the doctor assures the distressed parents that the child will recover.

Where the Forest Ends—Rex—(Two Reels)—March 7.—Rose, a beautiful mountain girl, is loved by Jack Norton, a ranger. Silent Jordan, an old prospector and friend of Jack's, recognizes in the girl the image of one whom he once loved, and knows that she must be his old sweetheart's daughter. Paul Rouchelle, an artist, comes upon the girl dancing in the woods in a costume of leaves and vines, and induces her to act as his model. The innocent girl falls before the charm of the polished artist and consents to elope with him. Later she learns that he has a wife and child, and returns to her mountain home. In the meantime the old hag who is the only guardian that Rose can remember, has died. The girl's first disappointments in life cause her to be greatly discouraged. Silent Jordan arrives on the scene just in time to prevent Jack from choking Paul, who then slinks away and is seen no more. The impression he has given Jack, however, almost shatters the latter's love for Rose. Silent Jordan leads the ranger and the girl to a little grave and there tells them the story of his early romance, which died because of his unwillingness to forget and forgive. The story has the desired effect on the lovers and they become reconciled.

A Coat's a Coat—Nestor—March 9.—Eddie and Mr. Bates, friends with offices in the same building, buy coats exactly alike, and get them mixed up. Eddie's sweetheart leaves him in anger when he fails to produce the ring he has promised her and the gloves which she but a short time before placed in his coat pocket. Mrs. Bates threatens to leave her husband when, on admiring his new coat, she discovers a ring and a pair of woman's gloves in the pocket. Embarrassing complications follow, but are easily explained away when the four people come together and find that the two men's overcoats are exactly alike.

The Children of the Ghetto—Box Office Attraction—(Five Reels).—Wilton Lackaye featured in the great Israel Zangwill story, splendidly produced. The picture is remarkable for the intimate touches given to the various characters and the truthful representation of Jewish life. The central figure, of course, is Rabbi Samuel, who at the very beginning wins the sympathy of all by giving the overcoat off his back to a penniless member of his flock. His daughter is of great comfort to him, though his son seems to be an equal trial, as the boy has neither reverence for his parents nor for religion. After going on the stage and entering fast cafe life, he comes home to the Passover feast, intoxicated, insults his father and blasphemes God. When young Levi is fatally injured and sends for his father, the old man refuses to go, until reminded that he is the boy's Rabbi. He then arrives too late, and is overcome with grief. His daughter becomes the legal wife of her friend's fiance through a prank, and the Rabbi obtains a divorce for her. When later she eventually falls in love, she cannot marry because the law of Israel forbids her lover, a descendant of a tribe of priests, to marry a divorced woman. The Rabbi is heartbroken, when the girl runs away and is married according to civil law. Soon after he loses his loving old wife, and is left all alone in the world. As the picture closes he is seen several years later, sorrowfully performing the rites of the Passover at his lonely table, with the empty places of his departed loved ones to remind him of his loss ,when the daughter and her two little children steal into the empty chairs and the old man's heart.

Paramount

The Love Route—FAMOUS PLAYERS—(FOUR REELS).—The film version of the famous romance of the ranch and railroad written by Edward Peple, among the striking effects being the entire construction of the railroad from the first spade full of dirt turned, to the laying of the last tie, and the final running of the mammoth engine over the newly laid line. The main characters of the play are a civil engineer and a young woman who owns a ranch through which the railroad is to pass. The story deals with her attempt to prevent the construction of the road even at the points of the revolvers of her cowboys, but though she fights to the very end, love finally wins, and after the engineer has been shot by one of her men, she herself is responsible for the completion of the line within the required time limit granted the railroad company. Harold Lockwood, Winifred Kingston and Donald Crisp are featured.

The Warrens of Virginia—LASKY—(FIVE REELS).—The famous drama which has toured the country successfully for some years will win thousands of friends in its pictured form with Blanche Sweet in the featured role of Agatha Warren, daughter of the aristocratic southern General Warren, who had before the Civil War, fallen in love with Ned Burton of New York. With the beginning of hostilities, General Warren takes command of his southern troops, and Burton enlists in the Union army, becoming lieutenant, and the lovers are naturally separated by their different sympathies. Most of the action of the drama takes place during the closing days of the war, at a time when General Warren's soldiers are suffering from a lack of supplies. Burton is forced by his superior officers to use his intimacy with the Warren family in successfully carrying out a ruse which leads to the defeat of the supply trains coming to the relief of the confederate army. When he is captured, Agatha finds that she still loves him in spite of herself and offers him the means of escape, which he is too proud to accept. The timely surrender of Lee at Appomattox saves him from being shot and the sequel of the stirring events is the ultimate reunion of the lovers.

Pathe

Pathe News, No. 13.—PATHE.—This issue of the weekly contains views of the Charity Dance held on the deck of a steamship off Brooklyn, New York; the dedication of the statue to the President of Argentina at Buenos Aires; five hundred delegates of the Canners' Association meet at the Hotel Astor, New York; the Tower of Jewels at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; the striking of the liberty bell, Philadelphia, so that its notes can be heard in San Francisco by means of a telephone; views of the floods in Ohio, and in the war section pictures taken at Epsom, England; Dennemarie, Alsace, and Brest Litovsk, Russia.

Pathe News, No. 14.—PATHE.—In tihs issue of the topical are seen a meeting of socialists at New York City; a jack-rabbit hunt at Salt Lake City, Utah; the dedication of the Volunteers of America Hospital in New York; a new motor cycle designed to run on ice demonstrated at Chicago, Illinois; an exhibition of diving at Paranagua, Brazil; a flight of carrier pigeons from the Poultry Show in New York City; a winter carnival at Hanover, New Hampshire, and in the war section, views taken at London, England, and Groningen, Holland.

Buddhist Temples—PATHE COLOR.—A natural colored scenic in which one is transported back through the centuries, when viewing these relics of bygone ages, standing in the vicinity of Pekin, China. One of the magnificent temples is shown, which is sometimes used as the residence of the high pontiff of the church. Other interesting scenes of Oriental splendor are also shown.

Police Dog—PATHE.—An animated cartoon comedy by C. T. Anderson of the Bray studios, in which Pinkerton Pup makes off with the trousers of Officer Piffle while he is enjoying a bath in the harbor. Unable to pawn the trousers, the Pinkerton Pup takes them to a butcher shop, where he trades them for a large juicy steak. Piffle, emerging from the water, substitutes a barrel for his missing garment, and later noted by "Billy" Goat, he is sent rolling toward the station house and lands on top of the captain.

A Trip to Madeira—PATHE COLOR.—Many interesting views of the Madeiras, a group of islands belonging to Portugal, which lie off the northwest coast of Africa. As one enters the harbor a panorama is given of the city, and the natives are shown diving for coins. One is also given a glimpse of the residence that once sheltered the Empress Elizabeth of Austria and taken by rail to Bombal along a series of beautiful and charming views. On the same reel is:

Wild Birds of Scotland—PATHE COLOR.—An educational picture in colors of the live wild birds of Scotland. Close-up views are given of such feathered beauties as merlins, snipe, plover, black duck and others.

Too Many Beaux — PATHE. — Mary Anne Hoolihan tires of teaching school and journeys to a small town in the West where she assumes the name of Gladys Vere de Vere, and invites the town to be manicured. The male citizens respond nobly. Luke McGluke, a bold bandit for whose capture the state has offered a big reward, visits her one day, and she makes him a prisoner. Then she wires her fiance to come and get her. When the town jays learn how they have been fooled they hide themselves ostrich-like in the lake. On the same reel with "A Trip to the Island of Madeira."

The Hound of the Baskervilles—Pathe—(Three Reels).—This is an adaptation of A. Conan Doyle's book of the same name. It is one of the best of the Sherlock Holmes adventure stories. There is a tradition in the Baskerville family that a lonely moor on the estate and a monstrous Great Dane, with flaming eyes and fire oozing from its mouth, are directly connected with the mysterious deaths of several of the family. Sherlock Holmes is summoned on the case, and reveals some surprising facts connected with an innocent-appearing man named Stapleton.

The Death Ray—(Ninth Episode of the Exploits of Elaine)—Pathe—Two Reels.—Kennedy is warned that he must withdraw from his search for the Clutching Hand, or he will be killed. As proof of his power to kill, the Clutching Hand causes the death of a man an hour, directly across the street from Kennedy's laboratory. The detective pretends to leave for South America, but really remains in New York, and discovers the death of the men was caused by the projection of an infra-red ray. Captured and imprisoned, this ray is directed against Kennedy, but he diverts it by a disc of platinum, sets the building on fire, and is later rescued by the police, who arrive to raid the den of the Clutching Hand. See review on page 351, this issue.

Runaway June — Reliance — (Episode Seven)—February 24.—June returns to Mrs. O'Keefe's for her clothing and Marie. Scarcely have they gone when Ned, the Moores, and the Bletherings arrive to find the detectives and the policemen battling on the stoop. The two girls drive to Mrs. Villard's, and Blye, who is in the house, notes their arrival with satisfaction. That afternoon Mrs. Villard takes June down town to the office of a marine broker. There she informs her that Blye is planning a trip to southern waters, and wishes them to join the party. June refuses. Blye, Cunningham, Edwards and Tommy Thomas arrive and try to persuade her to accept the invitation, but she remains firm. Across the court, Bobby Blethering sees Blye arguing with June and phones Ned. Before the bridegroom can get there, however, June and Mrs. Villard dart through the door, and flee in a taxi, pursued by the others in Cunningham's limousine.

Thanhouser Syndicate

The $20,000,000 Mystery — (Episode Fourteen)—Thanhouser—(Two Reels). —Zudora's friends plan to prove her right to the mines in Montana and Jim and Hunt go there to investigate. The conspirators secure the lawyer, who has many valuable papers pertaining to the affairs of Zudora's father, and try to get them from him. They also trap Zudora, but Jim and Hunt, after escaping from the trap laid for them in the West, return in time to right matters. Reviewed on page 317 of the February 27 issue.

The $20,000,000 Mystery—(Episode Fifteen) — Thanhouser — (Two Reels). — The conspirators determine to secure the jewels of a society woman and, despite the fact that another pair of crooks are working on the same case, they manage to get the gems. The plotters also kidnap Zudora, but Jim and Hunt, who are working on the diamond robbery, find her and again foil the conspirators' plans. A review appears on page 359 of this issue.

United

In Dutch With the Duchess—Superba. —Sir Charles Kerplunk is introduced to Emma, the lady whom his mother has chosen to be his bride, and not taking a fancy to her, he escapes from the house. Later, in the garden, he dances with one of the ladies of the court, and his conduct is reported to the duchess, who proceeds to box the lady's ears and to handle the duke rather roughly. Sir Charles later manages to escape again, and in the garden prepares to hang himself, when he is seen by Emma and once more rescued. Later the duchess leaves the palace and takes a room in the city, where she is charmed by a man playing a musical instrument in the room next door, and summons him to play for her. The maid, becoming jealous, writes to the duke telling him what is going on, and he sends his court attendants after her. Complications galore follow, but eventually things are straightened out by Charlie being compelled to return to his mother, while Emma and the duchess return to the duke.

Universal Special

The Master Key—Universal—Episode Fifteen.—Ruth instinctively feels that Dore is in danger, and in spite of the remoteness of the consul, determines to go to his rescue. To this end she arouses her beggar friend, who consents to act as guide, and then enlists the services of the naval officer and his marines. On their way into the hills they meet Dore's servant, who tells them of how Wilkerson turned on Dore, made him a prisoner in the hut, and escaped. They rescue Dore and return to the city, where they learn that Wilkerson, Drake and Mrs. Darnell have left for America, taking the plans with them. Dore cables Tom Kane to have them arrested on their arrival, which he does. Ruth, Sir Donald and Dore decide, after a consultation, that they will not prosecute Wilkerson if he will surrender the key to the Master Key mine. He craftily gives them a substitute drawing and continues his search for the mine, guided by the original plans. He is killed in a premature explosion, and Dore finds the real plans in his pocket. Drake and Mrs. Darnell are arrested for their part in the affair. Sir Donald releases Ruth from her promise to marry him, and the story closes with a happy meeting between John and Ruth.

World

Alias Jimmy Valentine — Liebler — (Five Reels).—A film story of the famous play by Paul Armstrong with Robert Warwick featured, and undoubtedly one of the best releases yet announced by the World program. Rose Fay, insulted one day in a railroad parlor car, is rescued by a handsome stranger with whom she falls in love. Years later, visiting Sing Sing penitentiary with her father, the lieutenant-governor of the state, she recognizes her rescuer in the person of Lee Randall, alias Jimmy Valentine, and brings about his release. Randall is given a position in a bank, and though his old associates tempt him and detectives try to pounce on him for offenses committed long before, he succeeds each time in proving an alibi. Jimmy's reputation as being the most expert safe opener in the country clings to him in spite of all, and one day when Rose Fay's little sister is accidentally locked in the bank safe, with no one on hand who knows the combination, and the child seems certain to suffocate, Randall makes use of his professional knowledge to open the safe, and a waiting detective, who has seen his display of skill, arrests him. Rose, who is present, after much trouble secures Lee's delivery, and declares she has more need of him than the state.

Miscellaneous

Hypocrites—Bosworth—(Five Reels). —Gabriel, an ascetic monk of olden times, perfects an image of Truth, but when it is unveiled before the villagers and the figure is found to be naked, he is stoned to death. Only two can look upon Truth, a little child and the woman who loves Gabriel, also a Magdalene who repents. Several thousand years later Gabriel, now minister of a present-day church, is pastor of the same people who stoned his former self to death. They are shocked by his denunciation of hypocrisy, and only the woman who loves him and the Magdalene who repents understand. Left alone after the service, he finds a reproduction of the famous painting, "The Truth," and sinks into a dream. His body in the form of Gabriel the ascetic leaves his present-day body and, accompanied by Truth and her mirror, visits various scenes of the story, showing him in this wondrous mirror of hers the real actions of the characters, proving them all to be hyocrites. A review appeared on page 204 of the February 6 issue.

Edison Offers Another Mary Fuller Film

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

MARY FULLER'S last big picture while with the Edison company will be released on March 15. It is a three-reel version of E. Phillips Oppenheim's popular book, "The Master Mummer," and is being released under that name. Originally, the picture was made in five reels, and was scheduled for the General Film Company's special feature service, but it was later decided to place it on the regular program of daily releases and it was cut to three reels to conform with the new Edison policy of releasing a feature film each week.

Nothing vital to the continuity of the story was lost in condensing it, and every possible chance of padding has been thereby eliminated. The theme is of recognized Oppenheim strength, and affords innumerable opportunities for striking bits of characterization and for true artistic interpretation. Walter Edwin's master hand at constructing climaxes and perfecting detail is seen in the direction, and his lighting effects show up well in good photography.

There are two others, besides Mary Fuller, who take principal parts in the acting, but are no longer with the Edison company. They are Charles Ogle, who is seen as Allan Mabane, the artist, and Barry O'Moore (Bertram Yost), who takes the part of the master mummer, M. Feurgeres. Miss Fuller plays three distinct roles, and enlivens them with her engaging personality and pleasing interpretative expression. She is first seen as the Princess Isobel, and later as Isobel Feurgeres, the daughter of the Archduchess of Britslaw (Mrs. William Bechtel). Highest praise is due the supporting cast for the manner in which its members rise to every occasion in their character portrayal. Miriam Nesbitt impersonates Lady Delahaye; Warren Cook, Sir William Delahaye; William West, Frederick IV; Charles Sutton, the Chamberlain; Duncan McRae, Arnold Greatson, the author; Harry Beaumont, Arthur Weston, the reporter; and Jessie Stevens, Mrs. Burdette.

Isobel is happy in her new home.

The cafe scene in Edison's "The Master Mummer."

M. Feurgeres and the widowed Princess Isobel fall in love, and the latter, though she forfeits her court rights in doing so, consents to marry the actor. When she is taken ill and dies a short time later, his only consolation in life is her little daughter, Isobel, whom he has always loved and treats as his own child. The scheming Duchess of Britslaw realizes that the girl may some day take up her mother's position in court, a place which she has in mind for her own daughter, and induces the chamberlain to have her taken from Feurgeres and placed in a convent.

The actor, years later, follows her and Sir William Delahaye, one of the chamberlain's conspirators, into a cafe, and there shoots the man. Feurgeres escapes in the confusion without revealing his identity to his stepdaughter, but he determines to protect her thereafter. Arnold Greatson, a writer, who was with the actor when he shot Delahaye, takes Isobel to the apartments which he shares with Mabane and Weston, and places her in the care of Mrs. Burdette, the housekeeper.

The young girl is happy in her new home, and before long has won each of the men's hearts, though unintentionally. Several attempts are made by the chamberlain and Lady Delahaye to lure Isobel away, but each time she is rescued by her three admirers and her father, who scarcely lets her out of his sight, though he keeps under cover himself. One day his desire to speak with Isobel overcomes Feurgeres, and he presents himself to her. He does not, however, tell of her royal birth.

This comes out later when, on his deathbed, he tells all. Isobel is welcomed at Frederick's court, and is given the position formerly occupied by her mother. But she yearns for the simple life and her former friends, and finally gives up all as her mother did to follow the dictates of her heart. Greatson is both surprised and startled at her return, but is speechless with joy on learning that she has decided that she would rather be his wife than the princess Isobel.

The Road O' Strife

The announcement recently made by the Lubin Company of a new fifteen-reel serial to be called "Road O' Strife" has created much interest in the moving picture world. The author of this new serial is Emmett Campbell Hall. To everyone familiar with the photoplay, this statement of authorship is an assurance not only that the story will be of dramatic merit, but that it will embody some new and striking characteristics, and most important from the standpoint of manufacturer and exhibitor, exactly meet the popular taste of the moment. The ability of this author to keep his fingers upon the public pulse and anticipate and comply with the rapidly shifting preferences of the picture fans has been a very large factor in his success.

Mr. Hall was among the first of the authors of established reputation to devote himself exclusively to photoplay writing, and for some time contributed largely to the Biograph, Kalem and Selig companies, refusing to ally himself with any one manufacturer. When, however, the Lubin Company undertook, about two years ago, to assemble a staff of photoplaywrights he became a member of that organization, and many notable Lubin releases have been his work. His serial, "The Beloved Adventurer" achieved a remarkable success, but it is intimated that the forthcoming "Road O' Strife" is far superior to anything he has heretofore done.

Waters Leaving General Film

Filmdom was a little surprised the past week by learning that the firm of Klaw & Erlanger is about to venture into the motion picture field with a plan of unusual magnitude, and Pat Casey, head of the vaudeville agency that bears his name, is authority for the statement that Klaw & Erlanger are now organizing a huge exhibition proposition of which P. L. Waters, until now general manager of the General Film Company, is to be the head. It is understood the chief purpose of Klaw & Erlanger is to provide theaters throughout the country with a steady supply of big feature films, and that at present productions will not be released at the smaller theaters, but will be booked by Klaw & Erlanger exclusively, in the same manner as regular theatrical attractions, in the larger theaters of the country, though, later on, even the smaller exhibitor may contract for bookings. It is hinted some of the first releases, at least, will be made by a special company at the Lubin studios, though this latter statement has not yet been verified.

Pathe Sues State of New Jersey

Claiming that it has paid the State of New Jersey $1,000 to which the state is not entitled, Pathe Freres last week obtained from Supreme Court Justice Trenchard a writ of certiorari to review the action of the State Board of Assessors in assessing the company on its outstanding capital stock of $1,000,000 for the year 1911.

The application for the writ was made by Eldon R. Walker, of Trenton, N. J., as counsel for Pathe Freres. The company has a plant located at Bound Brook, New Jersey, and it is a New Jersey corporation. It was claimed to the court that the Board of Assessors taxed it upon a total of $1,000,000 outstanding stock in the year 1911 when there was actually only $200,000 worth of stock paid for at that time.

It was further claimed by Mr. Walker that the company was entitled to exemption because it is an industrial concern doing business in the state. The suit is to recover the money which, it is alleged has been wrongfully paid the state.

Indiana Exhibitors Unite

The two factions of Indiana motion picture exhibitors which have been at war since the national meeting in New York in 1912, got together at a meeting in the Claypool Hotel last week and formed a new organization, which will be known as the Motion Picture League of Indiana. Officers were elected as follows:

President—L. H. O'Donnell, Washington.
Vice-president—W. E. Keating, Terre Haute.
Secretary—Dr. J. M. Rhodes, Indianapolis.
Treasurer—Joseph Gavin, Indianapolis.

A legislative committee composed of A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis; Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville; Thomas Whelan, Indianapolis, and Dr. Rhodes was appointed.

The officers of the league, with A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis; Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville; William Lipps, Alexandria, and Frank Radenbauch, Dunkirk, form the board of directors. The board will consider a proposal to join the National Association at a meeting which will be held in a short time. National censorship was indorsed, but the league is opposed to state censorship.

Battle on Bridge Gives Thrill in Serial

James Cruze, winning fame as Jim Baird, reporter.

A REALISTIC fight on a bridge between the men who have been Zudora's protectors since the conspirators determined to secure her riches, and a band of thugs in the employ of the plotters, is the most exciting feature in Episode Sixteen of "The $20,000,000 Mystery." James Cruze, of course, is one of the principals, and his character, Jim Baird the reporter, is in the center of all the action which transpires. The other leads, Marguerite Snow, Sidney Bracy, Elizabeth Forbes and Frank Farrington are also active in this installment.

After the eventful happenings narrated in Episode Fifteen, Madame Duval and her band for a time make no outward effort to harass Zudora. Nevertheless, they are by no means idle, and a constant watch is kept on the girl's movements. When Zudora and Storm go skating one day, they are closely trailed by Gyp, one of the "strong-arm" members of the band, while Captain Radcliffe seizes the opportunity to enter the Ramsey house, where Zudora lives, and search her apartment. In the old half-burned trunk, which contained so much of value for Zudora, the shrewd captain makes an important discovery. The trunk has a false bottom. Beneath it the conspirator finds a rudely drawn map made by Zudora's father, showing the location of rich deposits in the South African diamond fields.

In the meanwhile Tom Hunt and Jim Baird are working on a plan, through which they hope to possess themselves of the band's secrets. Hunt has just finished disguising himself, while Baird laughs aloud as he reads a fake letter of introduction which Hunt is to use in gaining an entrance into the haunts of the conspirators.

In the role of a famous French artist, Hunt goes to the mansion of Madame Duval and is soon made welcome in her salon. The detective plays his part perfectly; so well, indeed, that Madame Duval is completely deceived.

Before he leaves he consents to paint her portrait, and hardly has he gone when Captain Radcliffe, in highly exuberant mood, enters with the map he has purloined from Zudora's trunk. Some time later, Hunt, who has joined Baird, sees the captain speaking in a hallway with a man, whom he recognizes as a diamond cutter. Following the couple, Hunt and Baird see them enter the lapidary's shop, where the captain is observed to give his companion a number of rough stones to cut.

On the day following, Hunt goes to keep his appointment with Madame Duval to paint her portrait. But the sitting is interrupted by the fountain signal, which warns Madame Duval of the arrival of some of the band. She excuses herself, pleading fatigue, and Hunt is shown out, only to return secretly a few moments later. Hunt hides himself behind the tapestry near the entrance to the hidden elevator, by means of which the conspirators are wont to enter the salon. He sees Madame Duval and the gallant captain take a document from the secret receptacle under the table-top, and then leave the house. Meanwhile, elsewhere important things are happening. Jim Baird, trying to keep in close touch with Hunt, has entered the underground passage, leading from the old garage to Madame Duval's mansion and there he has been discovered by Bill, Ike and Gyp, three of the most desperate of the conspirators. At once a terrific struggle begins, in which Baird, by his superior quickness, is enabled to slip away from his attackers in the semi-darkness and make for the exit. There the battle begins again in deadly earnest. Through the opened door the men tumble in a confused heap, and roll struggling in death-grips toward the narrow bridge across the swift creek which flows deep and dark beside the old garage.

Marguerite Snow, who plays "Zudora" in the serial.

And here matters might have taken a serious turn for Baird, but for the fact that John Storm has chosen this road for a spin in his car. The young lawyer leaps from his machine and enters the fray. With a few well-directed blows he sends two of the thugs sprawling. Baird and Bill are grappling at the very edge of the bridge coping. In the final test of strength, Bill forces Baird off the bridge, but is himself dragged with his victim, and both fall into the water. Strong, having routed the other two, hastens to Baird's rescue. Unbuckling an extra automobile tire from his machine, he attaches it to a rope and swings it to Baird, but failing to reach him, he plunges into the water and brings him safe ashore, while Bill, vanquished, but still very much alive, makes his escape on the opposite bank.

According to Dr. Theodore Twesten, proctor of Cornell University, the moving pictures are responsible for a noticeable decrease in drinking by Cornell students.

Censorship Held Constitutional

The constitutionality of the censorship laws of Ohio and Kansas, providing for the censorship of motion picture films, were upheld in a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States handed down on Tuesday, February 23.

The opinion of the court was written by Justice McKenna and had to do with the case of the Mutual Film Corporation vs. the Industrial Commission of Ohio, et al. The Mutual contended (1) the statute in controversy imposes an unlawful burden on interstate commerce; (2) it violates the freedom of speech and publication guaranteed by Section 11, Article 1, of the constitution of the State of Ohio; (3) it attempts to delegate legislative power to censors and to other boards to determine whether the statute offends in the particulars designated.

After briefly reviewing several sections of the Ohio law and pointing out that while the shipment of the films from states outside of Ohio into Ohio was essentially interstate commerce, the court held that it was clearly evident the individual films were to be used solely in the State of Ohio and must therefore be subject to the same laws as would films made in the state. The court then took up the contention that the Ohio statute violates the freedom of speech and publication guaranteed under the Ohio constitution and said in part:

> However missionary of opinion motion picture films are, or may become, however educational or entertaining, there is no impediment to their value or effect in the Ohio statute. But they may be used for evil, and against that possibility the statute was enacted. Their power of amusement, and it may be education, the audiences they assemble, not of women alone nor of men alone, but together; not of adults alone, but of children, make them the more insidious in corruption by a pretense of worthy purpose. Indeed, we may go beyond that possibility. They take their attractions from the general interest, eager and wholesome it may be, in their subjects, but a prurient interest may be excited and appealed to. Besides, there are some things which should not have pictorial representation in public places and to all audiences. We would have shut our eyes to the facts of the world to regard the precaution unreasonable, or the legislation to effect it mere wanton interference with personal liberty.

With regard to the allegation that the censorship is an infringement of free speech, the court said:

> Are moving pictures within the principle as it is contended they are? They, indeed, might be mediums of thought, but so are many things; so is the theater, the circus and all other shows and spectaculars, and other performances may be thus brought by the like reasoning under the same immunity from repression or supervision as the public press—made the same agencies of civil liberty. Counsel have not shrunk from this extension of their contention.
> The first impulse of the mind is to reject the contention. We immediately felt that the argument is wrong or strained which extends the guaranties of free opinion and speech to the multitudinous shows which are advertised on the billboards of our cities and towns, and which regards them as emblems of public safety, to use the words of Lord Camden, quoted by counsel and which seeks to bring motion pictures and other spectaculars into practical and legal similitude to a free press and liberty of opinion.
> The judicial sense supporting the common sense of the country is all against the contention. The argument is wrong which extends the guaranties of free speech to the multitudinous shows which are advertised on the billboards of our cities and which regards them as emblems of public safety, and which seeks to bring motion pictures and other spectacles into practical and legal similitude to a free press and liberty of opinion.

The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial maintains a staff of ready and willing photographers who are ready at any time to fill assignments in any part of the world.

Mutual Masterpictures

A slight error crept into the announcement in our issue of February 20 concerning the release of the series of feature pictures of the Mutual Film Corporation. These pictures will be released as features through the Mutual exchanges. Herewith is the announcement in full:

The Mutual Film Corporation announces a series of features for release twice a week beginning March 22. These will be known as Mutual Masterpictures and will be four and five reels in length. The first release will be an American distinctive creation, "The Quest," a story of love and romance with the South Seas as the chief setting for its scenes. In this picture Margarita Fischer will be featured with Harry Pollard, Joseph E. Singleton, Nan Christy and Lucille Ward in important roles. A burning ship, blown up by dynamite, is one of the more thrilling scenes. "The Quest" is a picture of singular beauty and was selected because of its merit to lead off the series.

The second Masterpicture will be "The Lost House," by Richard Harding Davis, a four-reel Majestic product, featuring Lillian Gish, Wallace Reid, F. A. Turner, A. D. Sears and Elmer Clifton. The story is a vital, vivid action picture different from "The Quest" in type but like it in its love theme.

The Mutual Masterpictures will be participated in by the American Film Manufacturing Company, the Majestic Motion Picture Corporation, the New York Motion Picture Corporation, the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation and the Thanhouser Film Corporation. In these Masterpictures will appear a notable list of players, including Mae Marsh, Florence LaBadie, Francelia Billington, Marguerite Snow, Lillian Gish, Robert Edeson, Harry Pollard, Robert Harron, W. A. Hart, Sidney Bracy, Rhea Mitchell, Dorothy Gish, Lucille Ward, Thomas Jefferson, Margarita Fischer, James Cruze, Wallace Reid, John Emerson, Harry Woodruff, Joseph E. Singleton, and many others well known to the screen.

The forthcoming releases include stories selected solely for their picture merit, and while great names are in the list of authors, the "story" has been the thing in selection.

An extensive advertising and publicity campaign has been inaugurated in connection with Mutual Masterpictures in magazines, newspapers and the journals devoted to the film industry.

Universal Program at the Fair

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company received the following telegram from M. L. Markowitz, general manager of the California Universal Film Exchange at San Francisco, on the afternoon of Saturday, February 20: "The Panama-Pacific International Exposition have accepted the Universal program, best on earth, for exclusive exhibition during the fair in the Filmdome." This communication means that the Universal has been chosen for the place of honor at the fair. Visitors to the exposition will not only have an opportunity to see Universal pictures within the exposition grounds but, upon application at the Universal general offices in the administration building, will be provided with free transportation by "jitney bus" to Universal City, near Los Angeles.

Fire Prevention Attachment for Machines

PASSED BY UNDERWRITERS

A NEW fire prevention attachment for motion picture machines has just been passed by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. In recommending the device the underwriters' laboratories makes the following announcement of test record: "Two Simplex machines on which the device had been installed and operated for several months in the theater were used for this test. When operated normally the film was repeatedly caused to break at points above and below the device by interfering with the mechanism or jamming the film. Under all conditions when the film was broken, the motor was stopped before the film became packed in the head or ran out on the floor. Several of these devices have been in use for the past two years with a successful record of service. The device is an invention of Frank H. Frude, and is called the Frude Film Fire Frustrator."

This device is an automatic switch attachment for use with motor-operated motion picture machines, to open the motor circuit when the tension on the film between the magazine and the lower sprocket is released by breaking of the film, failure of the belt on the take-up reel, or other causes.

The device consists, essentially, of a shaft carrying the lower sprocket of the machine and at one end a cylindrical cam, engaging a pin on the shaft and having a radially projecting pin threaded into the cam, and provided with an insulated brass flange or disc opposite two contact buttons. A hollow shaft is provided, mounted concentrically with the sprocket shaft, and carrying at one end the drive pulley for the take-up reel, and at the other end a brass disc with a crank pin which engages the radial pin, mentioned above.

The hollow shaft is free to rotate relatively to the gear shaft. In normal operation the tension on the film from the take-up reel tends to drive the lower sprocket at a speed greater than that of the hollow shaft, causing the radial pin on the cam to engage the crank pin on the disc, forcing the cam disc against the contact buttons. The release of the film tension permits the sprocket to stop and the crank pin makes one revolution and engages the radial cam pin from the opposite side, causing the disc to be withdrawn from the contact buttons.

The equipment for use with the Simplex machine differs from that described only in that the concentric shafts are each provided with a separable connection which consists of pins seated against springs in stationary sections engaging in holes in the disc in the swinging section attached to the door.

This attachment can be used upon any make machine. It is most simple, and yet a most positive prevention of film fire. Furthermore, it will do away with an operator's helper. It will reduce insurance premiums, as it will be recommended by every insurance company or agent. The company which is manufacturing and selling this device is The Motion Picture Fire Prevention Devices Company, 1601 Indiana avenue, Chicago, Ill.

The device has been in constant use by all of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer theaters in Chicago for the past two years, and at no time has it failed to do what was expected of it. It has the full recommendation of that firm as the greatest fire prevention device of its kind.

nected by belt 12 with the pulley 13 on the countershaft 14 which also carries the gear pinion 15. This pinion meshes with the main machine gear 16 on the main shaft 17 and this gear meshes with the gear 18 secured to the pulley 19 which is keyed to the sleeve 20 journaled in the bearing 21, which bearing is supported from the machine frame 10 by the bracket 22. A belt 23 passes about pulley 19 and the pulley 24 on the shaft 25 which carries the intake reel R. Passing through and journaled in sleeve 20 is the shaft 26 which is further journaled at its end in the bearing bracket 27 on the machine frame. This shaft 26 has secured thereto the film sprocket member 28 of the ordinary and usual construction and whose teeth 28' engage in the openings r of the film in the well-known manner.

The left end of sleeve 20 carries the disk 29 from which extends the actuating arm or pin 30. Journaled on the right end of shaft 26 is a hub 31 having a diagonal cam slot 32 extending part way around its circumference, a cam pin 33 extending from shaft 26 into this groove whereby relative turning of the shaft and hub will effect longitudinal shift of the hub on the shaft. Extending radially from the inner end of the hub is the arm or pin 31' for co-operating with the pin 30 of disk 29. The hub carries at its outer end the flange or disk 34 to which is secured by screws 35 the contact plate or disk 36, this contact plate being insulated by the insertion of insulating material 37 between the plate and the flange 34 and by the insulating material 38 between the screws 35 and the flange.

Mounted vertically on the machine frame 10 and adjacent the contact plate 36 is a block 39 of insulating material and secured at their lower ends to this block are the terminal springs 40 and 41 whose upper ends carry laterally extending pins 42 and 43 respectively terminating in contact heads 44 and 45, the pins passing readily through openings 46 and 47 in the block. The contact plate 36 by its co-operation with the contact buttons and springs controls the current supply circuit for the motor M. Conductors 48 and 49 leading from the springs 40 and 41 respectively to the motor terminals 50 and 51, a main switch S being included in conductor 48 and connected with the current supply circuit C.

From the foregoing description the operation is apparent.

In the figure the various parts are shown in relative position for proper operation of the machine, the main switch being closed and the pin 33 being at the inner end of the cam slot 32 to hold the contact plate 30 against the contact buttons or heads 44 and 45, the pin 31' being behind the pin 30. If the film and machine continue at the same rate the relative positions shown will be maintained. However, should the film break, the shaft 26 will stop, but the sleeve 20 will continue until the pin 30 engages behind and with the pin 31' on hub 31. This hub will then be rotated on the shaft 26 and by the engagement of the cam slot 32 with cam pin 33 will be shifted inwardly along the shaft to carry plate 36 away from the terminal heads 44 and 45 whereupon the motor circuit is opened and the motor stopped. If the film should break between the take-up reel and the sprocket member 28 the shaft 26 will stop immediately, while if the break occurs between the sprocket member and the lens, the shaft will stop as soon as the broken end of the film leaves the sprocket member. Thus upon breaking of the film the motor circuit is automatically opened and the take-up reel and the machine stop.

When the machine is to be started, the main switch S is closed and the hub 31 held out by hand to engage the contact plate with the terminal buttons until the machine and film run in synchronism. As the film is wound upon the intake reel the rate at which it is drawn from the machine will constantly increase as the diameter of the wound-up film increases. The tendency will then be for the shaft 26 to rotate faster than the sleeve 20. This is, however, prevented by the engagement of the pin 31' on the hub 31 with the pin 30 on the disk 29, and to prevent undue strain on the film the belt 23 is sufficiently loose on its pulleys to slip and to thus always take up the film at a uniform rate relative to the speed of the machine.

From the above description it is apparent that the film, when traveling at the proper rate, controls the closure of the motor circuit, and that the machine, upon breaking of the film, effects adjustment to open the circuit and to stop the machine. The operations are positive and efficient.

Making Extensive Improvements

It was announced the early part of this week by Julian M. Solomon, Jr., vice-special representative of Bosworth, Inc., at the company's New York offices, that extensive improvements affecting this concern's future output are in the course of preparation and that several new and important plans are now being perfected.

Deeds were ppassed on Saturday, February 27, whereby the concern doubles its ground space and a large force of laborers, workmen and mechanics are now busily engaged in making additions to the present plant. Building permits have also been issued for additional store rooms, scene docks, paint frames, etc., and a new stage, measuring sixty by ninety, has just been completed.

On Monday, March 1, Oliver Morosco returned to the studios, bringing with him several new contracts covering the motion picture rights on new plays and stars and work will immediately be taken up in preparation for the production of these additional acquisitions about which more will be announced in the near future.

Oscar Apfel, for the past year associated with the Lasky studios and who has been directly responsible for the production of such successes as "The Squawman," "The Master Mind," "The Circus Man," "The Ghost Breaker" and "Cameo Kirby," joins the Bosworth producing forces on March 4. Mr. Apfel was formerly director for Pathe, Reliance, Majestic and Edison Companies, and has met with great success in the production of big subjects for Lasky.

Owing to the heavy strain of work caused by the many recent releases, the doctors have ordered Hobart Bosworth to take a complete rest. He will taken an extended vacation, probably a long sea voyage, and as a consequence may possibly dispose of his financial interest in the firm. In this event there will be no change in the business policy of the company, except to produce more society dramas and well known plays with stars in the leading roles. No more of the western type of drama will be produced.

Guy Oliver, the hero of many Selig film dramas, formerly played in vaudeville.

June's Husband Captured by Blye

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

THE most exasperating, and yet money-making, feature of a serial is that just as the puzzling events of the episode reach a climax and one prepares for a pleasant surprise, the action ends with the "To be continued" insert. In the eighth episode of "Runaway June's" adventures entitled "Her Husband's Enemies," we see Ned lying in wait for Blye; follow the action with bated breath as he jumps out to intercept Blye's limousine; see him seized and overpowered by mysterious hands; and then are greeted by the brand, Reliance, and the slogan, "Mutual Movies Make Time Fly." The spectator's exclamation or thought, "I wish I knew what the developments are in that next episode," which an ending such as this never fails to arouse, is worth real money to an exhibitor booking this series.

There are less flash-backs in this release than in any of its precedents, the method of telling why June ran away from her husband now being dropped. June becomes acquainted with a new phase of the eternal money question while in the hospital, but does not attempt to smooth out the domestic troubles of her patient. With but little space given to these two subjects which formerly took up about a reel, one can readily see that nearly all of this episode bears directly on the main thread of the story. Mrs. Blye, close on her husband's trail, makes several determined appearances in the episode, which is synonomous for saying that it contains considerable comedy.

Blye and his party hurry to the rescue when they see the taxi carrying June and Mrs. Villard plunge off of the roadway. June is found pinned underneath the wreckage of the smashed machine which ran into a tree on the side of the slope, and Joe, the chauffeur, is picked up some distance away, where he was hurled by the force of the impact. Mrs. Villard, not so badly injured, is able to walk with a little assistance. The other two are carried to a sanitarium nearby. Here is another example of Blye's strange influence. On entering the hospital he is greeted with great respect by all, and his wish that June and Mrs. Villard be kept in adjoining rooms is carried out without protest or question.

Blye denies himself to all callers.

June is carried from the wreck by Blye.

Meanwhile, Ned and Mrs. Blye, disgusted with their detectives' poor and hazy reports, discharge them. Ned is approached by Burton, a thin, excitable detective, who, with the utmost sincerity, assures him that he can find June and Blye if he may only be given a chance. More to humor him than anything else, Ned engages Burton, and in less than an hour afterwards receives a 'phone call from him, saying that he has located the missing pair. Ned and Burton call on Mrs. Blye, and the three of them go to Blye's club, where he is said to be. The elusive husband is warned by one of the waiters, and makes his escape.

The morning after the accident June recovers consciousness, and is informed by the nurse that she is more shaken up than injured, and only needs a rest. The two become intimate friends, and exchange confidences. June conceives the notion that she would like to become a nurse, and her friend offers to carry her request to the doctor. He, in turn, asks the owner of the sanitarium, and obtains permission for the runaway bride. Decked out in her blue gown, crisp white apron, and little white cap, June assumes the duties of her position. While attending the chauffeur, who was badly injured in the accident, June hears a new story of the household money question, for Joe's wife is anything but generous or appreciative, and later that very afternoon upbraids her husband for getting injured when she is so badly in need of money.

Burton traces Blye to the Villard estate, and learns that he and his friends are to dine there that evening. He notifies Ned immediately. June is brought before the owner of the sanitarium, and, to her astonishment, is presented to none other than Blye. It takes the combined persuasion of Mrs. Villard and Tommy Thomas to prevent her from resigning. She leaves with the others for the dinner at the Villard home. Ned, hiding in the bushes, steps out as the machine approaches, but is seized from behind before he can stop it, and borne to the ground while the limousine sweeps by.

To Get Lubin Features Direct

Chicago exhibitors were privileged Wednesday, February 24, to have with them Siegmund Lubin, head of the Lubin Manufacturing Company. He brought with him a print of "The Eagle's Nest," the first of the big six-reel features he is planning to market in a new way.

After telling the exhibitors how glad he was to be with them and promising to come to Chicago more frequently, Mr. Lubin explained that it has long been his hope to get in closer touch with the exhibitors, as he felt by that means and that means only, could he really come to know from personal observation what the exhibitors liked and what they disliked.

He stated bluntly that he liked to receive kicks, because it was only when objections were made to his productions that he could learn their weaknesses and that the manufacturer who welcomed objections and set about immediately correcting them would be the manufacturer who, in the long run, would be making the most perfect pictures.

Then Mr. Lubin further startled his hearers by declaring that instead of handling his future big features through the special service of the General Film Company, an arrangement was being effected by which the exhibitors could secure these big features almost directly from the manufacturer. In other words, Mr. Lubin is arranging with representatives in all the states in the union to handle these feature releases exclusively, and the exhibitors will be able to secure them only from these Lubin representatives who closely approximate state rights buyers, but who will serve to bring Mr. Lubin into much closer touch with the exhibitors of the country than they have ever been before.

After Mr. Lubin had invited the exhibitors of Chicago to write him personally such complaints as they might have, and promised them to listen most attentively to anything they might have to say to him, he bade them farewell, and his first direct offering, "The Eagle's Nest," was thrown on the screen.

This picture has already been reviewed in Motography, though at the time when it was eight reels in length, instead of six. The cutting which has since occurred has strengthened the picture, and today it stands as a classic of its kind. As the exhibitors well know, Edwin Arden, the author and famous legitimate star, is featured in the production, which was produced by Romaine Fielding in Colorado, many of the scenes taking place in the Garden of the Gods, which gives the story a wonderful background. Mr. Fielding himself appears in the heavy role of the production and is seen to splendid advantage. It is understood that in all of the future big Lubin productions, a widely known legitimate star will be featured, supported by a strong cast of the popular Lubin players.

Williams Heads Export Department

J. D. Williams, internationally famous as a film expert, has been appointed the head of the special attractions export department of the World Film Corporation by General Manager Lewis J. Selznick.

Mr. Williams is known to exhibitors throughout the United States, Canada and Australia. He acquired his first interest in pictures while in Vancouver, B. C., in 1905. Later he engaged in the theater business in Spokane, Washington, where he conducted a film exchange in addition to operating theaters, and in 1909 went out to Australia and soon became managing director of the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company, capitalized at $1,000,000. He was also managing director of the J. D. Williams New Zealand Company and the Luna Park Company of Melbourne.

Ere leaving Australia, Mr. Williams formed a gigantic picture combine there, by which five of the largest companies were merged into one, a concern with a capital in excess of $3,000,000.

Upon his recent return to America he became associated with the Bosworth Company, of Los Angeles, and W. W. Hodkinson, of San Francisco, and, resigning his positions with these firms, he went abroad to study film conditions; was forced to come back to America on account of the present European war, and consequently is in possession of just the knowledge required by the head of an export department, and will use this knowledge to advantage in his new position. World films for export will be most carefully chosen, and will all have to measure up to a fixed standard and the peculiar requirements necessary for an international hit.

Miss Damon Receives Check

Miss Ida Damon, winner of the $10,000 prize solution of "The Million Dollar Mystery," Thanhouser's great photoplay, has received the money from the hands of his honor, the mayor of St. Louis.

The unexpected fortune which has thus come to Miss Damon was celebrated out of a spirit of civic pride by half the population of the "show me" metropolis. The theater in which she was awarded the capital prize by St. Louis' chief executive was thronged hours before the appearance of the lucky girl.

The twenty-third episode, Miss Damon's solution, was thrown upon the screen, and the crowd cheered itself hoarse. Then a commotion at the rear of the theater bespoke the arrival of the winner. Leaning on the arm of her aged father, and surrounded by a cordon of police fighting a passage through the crowd, Miss Damon finally reached the stage.

The mayor of St. Louis and other city officials awaited her coming. Then, the entire party appeared before the audience. The mayor paying a graceful tribute to the girlhood of St. Louis then handed over the check, making Miss Damon independently rich for life.

Selig Offers Unique Costume Production

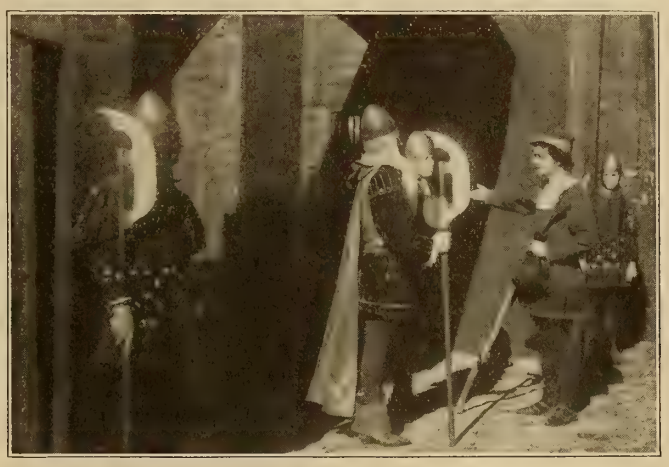
BY NEIL G. CAWARD

IN Selig's two-reel feature, "The Fork in the Road," released on Monday, March 15, one is taken back to the middle ages, and there beholds the brave knights of old and their ladies fair, as well as those who are not so brave, and the type of men who formed the marauding bands of those days.

This costume production was put on by Thomas Santschi and features Bessie Eyton and Leo Pierson, the former as Elsa, the pretty daughter of an innkeeper, and the latter as Rudolph, the innkeeper's assistant and employee.

The greater portion of the picture is told as a dream, but this does not detract in any way from the stirring battle scenes or the views in a beautiful city where the hero in his dream performs prodigies of valor, wins promotion and finally rides back in supreme command of the army to wed the princess.

The story begins in the humble inn, where Elsa discloses her love for Rudolph, her father's assistant. When the innkeeper discovers the love between his daughter and his man-servant, he orders the girl to her room and commands Rudolph to attend to his work. Some time later, an old hag enters the inn and offers to read Rudolph's palm. When he consents to her proposition, she predicts for him a life of stirring action in which he is to win fame by brave deeds and to defend fair ladies. Happy over such a prophecy, Rudolph prepares to serve her with wine, but the inkeeper, appearing at that moment, chases the old crone out of the inn and berates Rudolph for listening to her. She departs in fury, while Rudolph resumes his humble labor in his master's inn.



Rudolph enters the beautiful city.

Next day Elsa is told of the old witch's prophecy, but refuses to listen to Rudolph's suggestion that they elope. At length Rudolph decides to seek his fortune in the great world, and bidding farewell to Elsa and the innkeeper, he sets forth and after traveling all day comes to a fork in the road. Uncertain which path to follow and being weary, he sits down to rest beneath a sign-post and, overcome by fatigue, falls asleep.

Sentenced to death in the city of gloom.

Rudolph marries the princess of the beautiful city.

In his first dream he arrives in a beautiful city and succeeds in joining the army, as an humble soldier. Later on, however, he performs such deeds of valor as to win rapid promotion, and eventually rides back to the city as the supreme commander of the army, cheered and honored by all the populace.

The king welcomes him back and praises him for his valor, there offering him the hand of the princess in marriage. As he emerges from the cathedral, following the ceremony, with the princess on his arm, he sees Elsa and her father in the crowd of yokels gathered along the street, and stops to give the innkeeper a purse and leaves Elsa sobbing in her father's arms.

His dream then changes and he imagines himself to have taken the other road, which leads to a gloomy and desolate town. As he enters the street lined with ramshackle buildings, he encounters a dying citizen, who has been struck down by a highwayman, and kneeling at his side Rudolph picks up the weapon with which the man had been killed, and just at that time assistance arrives, and seeing Rudolph with the knife in his hands, our hero is accused of having murdered the citizen and is condemned to execution. Just as he ascends the scaffold and is about to have his head cut off by the executioner, he awakes to find it was all a dream.

Unable to decide which path leads to glory and fame and which to misery, Rudolph decides to take the only way he knows and return to the inn. He arrives there in time to save Elsa and her father from an attack by three thieves, who are the sons of the old palm-reading hag, and after routing them, the prophecy of the old crone comes true, since the innkeeper gives his consent to Rudolph's marriage to Elsa.

New York Exhibitors Unite

February 25 proved an auspicious date for many exhibitors, as on that Thursday morning representatives of the Cinema Club, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Greater New York, and Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America met at the Candler Theater, which had been offered them without cost by George Kleine, and there carried through their amalgamation and harmony program with the result that all New York exhibitors are now enrolled under one banner, and in the future their organization will be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Local No. 1.

John J. Wittman, presiding as chairman, put the motion of Sam Trigger that a resolution for the amalgamation which was drawn up at a mass meeting of representatives of the various organizations in and about Greater New York, be adopted, and Mr. Trigger, together with other members, spoke strongly in its defense. The motion was carried and the gathering immediately proceeded to elect the following officers: Lee A. Ochs, president; M. Oestreicher, vice-president; Adolph Weiss, secretary, and Phillip Rosenson, treasurer. A finance committee composed of Messrs. Wittman, Hirsch and Hollender, representing the Bronx, Manhattan and Brooklyn, was elected, and Mr. Ochs, acting as president of the committee, appointed Messrs. Martineau and Hartstall of Brooklyn; Goldreyer and Samelson of the Bronx, and Needle and Valensi of Manhattan to meet and confer with the temporary officers.

Marion S. Pearce, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, who had come on from Baltimore to attend the gathering, was on the platform and made a speech in which he congratulated the New York exhibitors on the action they had taken and prophesied that they were now in a position to whole-heartedly combat any adverse legislation that might arise.

When it came to the discussion of financial plans, Mr. Ochs and his associates offered the unique suggestion that some one of the well known manufacturers be induced to act as treasurer of campaign funds, thus enabling the exhibitors to really inspire confidence in all who might wish to contribute. Mr. Ochs pointed out that manufacturers were loath to offer financial aid, as they had little faith in the ability of the exhibitor to campaign against adverse legislation, while the exhibitors themselves were unable to raise sufficient funds alone to make much of a fight, but expressed the hope that if such a man as P. L. Waters or Mr. Kennedy of the General Film Company, or Mr. Blackton of the Vitagraph Company would consent to hold the position of treasurer, nearly everyone would be willing to contribute largely to the general cause.

An executive session of the newly elected officers, together with the two members appointed from each borough, was held on Tuesday of this week, at which time much important business was transacted. MOTOGRAPHY goes to press too early to contain a report of this meeting, but in its next issue expects to relate what occurred.

Universal Studios Move Overnight

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal sent a telegram to his forces at Hollywood last Wednesday which certainly caused a commotion. The telegram laconically read:

"Move entire plant over to the new city."

Big Bill Horsley, who built Universal City, took one sidewise slant at the telegram and then bellowed out his orders in stentorian tones. It was 5:45 p. m. when the telegram was received. At 6 Hollywood was on the move. Everybody was anxious to make the jump as quickly as possible and owing to the rush of work everyone realized that it was absolutely necessary to make the move over night so that work could commence on schedule time next morning.

The scenario department already was in its new quarters but had left its furniture behind. This was moved over first. Then, with "Clara," the big Hollywood elephant, on the job pushing the trucks along, ton after ton of property room scenery and equipment was loaded on trucks and flattop wagons and hauled over to Universal City. The old laboratory equipment was removed after 9 p. m., and then came the projection room apparatus and other mechanical equipment.

Preparations are now being made for the big inspection day and dance to be held at Universal City on March 7, in celebration of the final occupancy of the new quarters. Hundreds of invitations to the fete have been sent to men prominent in social and business circles in and around Los Angeles. The Rotary Club has signified its intention of appearing en masse, while the cowboys and soldiers at the ranch as well as the members of Henry McRae's company of 101-Bison players are arranging a rodeo for visitors at the celebration.

Simplex Machine at Sing Sing

Since Thomas M. Osborne has been warden of Sing Sing prison, Ossining, N. Y., much interest has been displayed throughout the country in his work of uplifting the prisoner. Entertainments are now given in the prison chapel for the purpose of broadening and educating the minds of inmates, who attend unaccompanied by guards. Moving pictures is the favorite form of entertainment, and it is declared by officials at the prison that the inmates learn more from the great variety of subjects shown on the screen than they possibly could by any other form of instruction.

The owners of the Strand theater, New York City, have sent film subjects to the prison from time to time and learned that they have had much trouble with the moving picture machine. Accordingly, Max Spiegel, secretary of the Mark Strand Theater Company sent R. Alfred Jones and J. Victor Wilson of the Strand theater's executive staff to the prison to see if anything could be done to improve the moving picture entertainment there. The managers reported that a new picture machine and full electrical equipment was required. Mr. Spiegel at once ordered a new Simplex machine with full electrical equipment sent to the prison. Mr. Rothapfel will go to the prison and put on the first moving picture show given with the new Simplex, and he says that it will be done in regular Strand theater style.

Essanay to Release Three-Reel Comedy

Sallie and her mother arrive at the earl's home.

ON MARCH 9 the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company will release its first three-reel comedy, a most pleasing production entitled "Mr. Buttles," adapted from Frederic Arnold Kummer's well known work of the same title and presenting Harry Dunkinson, Richard C. Travers and Edna Mayo in the leading roles.

The production is quite different from anything recently attempted by this company and is sure to meet with a warm reception at the hands of the exhibitors and fans. While the three stars mentioned in the first paragraph share the honors with fair equality, Mr. Travers will probably attract more attention than the other pair because of the double role he enacts—an English count and a reporter-novelist seeking adventure. His interpretation of the former character is amusing without becoming unplausible, while the latter is along more conventional lines, but nevertheless fairly distinctive. Mr. Dunkinson is thoroughly at home in the title part and will draw many laughs through the clever execution of the "business" assigned him.

Miss Mayo, a recent addition to the Essanay forces, was seen for the first time by this reviewer, and the impression she left was indeed pleasing. She has perfect screen presence, a fascinating personality, and many delightful little womanly ways which will endear her to the picture-play public. Her part does not give her a very great opportunity for real acting, but judging from the manner in which she utilizes her few chances she will soon become one of the many admired players working under the banner of the Indian head. The supporting cast is a large one and all the players do acceptable work. While their parts are not essential to the story, Ernest Maupain and Sydney Ainsworth furnish considerable amusement in the scenes in which they retire to the smoking room to talk over the elopement of the former with the latter's wife.

The plot of the story is rather complicated, due to the numerous "side-issues," but to those accustomed to the photodrama it will be easy to understand, as the minor incidents are at no time allowed to interfere with the main development of the main theme, despite the amount of footage devoted to them. The interior sets are fairly large and well appointed and the photography is clear throughout. The director is entitled to his share of credit for the skill exercised in "putting over" the important scenes, as well as for the general treatment given the entire production.

The plot revolves around a deal arranged by Buttles, one of the last of a prominent family of servants, who is butler at Everdun Towers, the estate of the Earl of Everdun, a noble with a title but without funds. Buttles forms a corporation of the servants to work for tips from guests and persuades the earl to act as the drawing card at a salary. The earl gets Huggins, his chauffeur, who is his double, to masquerade as his lordship, while he slips off to Paris. Huggins' real name is Hemmingway and he is an author and London newspaperman looking for local color. Huggins falls in love with Sallie Flighter, an American heiress and guest at the Towers and tells her who he really is but Buttles, fearing the end of his scheme, makes the girl think he is a bit "balmy." Huggins is led into a compromising situation through the visit of a chorus girl, one of the sweethearts of the earl. Buttles extricates him from his predicament upon his promise not to try again to reveal his true identity.

Buttles engineers two proposed elopements in such a way that he stops both and gets handsome tips. The earl is informed of the love affair of his double and Sallie. He returns to stop the match. By skillful maneuvering Buttles persuades the earl to leave with Gwendolyn, for which Huggins agrees to act out the part of his lordship to the end of the season, Miss Flighter alone knowing the secret. The syndicate reaps a rich reward.

Animal Film of Exceptional Interest

A new pillar has been added to the supports of the "See America First" campaign. It is a six-reel picture of wild animal life in America, photographed by Edward A. Salisbury and being released by the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc. The photography, a most important and by no means dependable factor in pictures such as these taken on, above, and below earth and water, could hardly be better were it taken under the best of studio or weather conditions.

At the initial exhibitions of the pictures in New York on Tuesday, February 23, and in Chicago, three days later, Mr. Salisbury lectured and told many thrilling and amusing stories of events that occurred during the filming, which covered a period of about three years. The pictures were originally taken for scientific study and research purposes, but they proved to be so unusual and attractive, dealing with a subject in which every American is more or less interested, that Mr. Salisbury cut his 250,000 foot film down to 6,600 feet for exploitation in the theaters.

By special permission Mr. Salisbury and his party erected blinds in the biological survey, and were enabled to get close-ups within three to ten feet of some of the birds. Some of the other unusual features of the film are a pictured explanation of the wonderful work done by fish hatcheries, a quail hunt with trained dogs, a California goose hunt, beautifully tinted views of Mt. Shasta and other famous peaks, and some thrilling episodes showing the capture alive of bear, lynx and mountain lions. One of the men in the party, an Indian half-breed, wins a bet of $2.50 by climbing up a tree and pulling a ferocious mountain lion down by the tail.

Salisbury's pictures of Wild Animal Life in America stand alone in the field of scientific and hunt pictures, and reveal much of the life, appearance, and habits of American fin, fur and feather animals that few people know. Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Central Film Company of Chicago has secured the state rights to Illinois and four other central states and is now securing bookings on the film, which is running at the Studebaker theater in Chicago at the present time.

Ohio Censor Challenged

Representatives of the Chambers of Commerce of various Ohio cities held a conference at Columbus, Ohio, Friday, February 26, at which the participants argued pro and con, mostly con, on the possibility and benefits of repealing the state's censorship law, covering the censoring of motion pictures.

Maud Murray Miller, a member of the censor board, was the chosen child of the event. One who attended purely out of curiosity, after absorbing yards of vocal fol-de-rol, felt compelled to arise and object to Mrs. Miller's mis-statements. Mrs. Miller, the only woman on the board, is just the sort of a woman one would not select to choose entertainment for the masses. A protege of a proven political failure, Maud Murray Miller was appointed to the Board of Censors by Ex-Governor Cox, and she has a death grip on the job that a Frisco earthquake could not shake.

Mrs. Miller in a statement asserted that motion picture producers were in league to outwit the Board of Censors and did not abide by the board's decisions —insofar as eliminations were concerned. Some of her mis-statements were:

Producers never keep faith with the censors.

"The Hypocrites" (which was rejected by the Ohio Board) has been condemned by every municipality.

That the producers are in favor of state boards.

That four pictures out of five are immoral.

That if any one could prove her incompetent she would gladly resign from the board.

The one who had objected then was called upon by the chairman and in contradiction to Mrs. Miller stated:

That at least 95 pictures out of a hundred were clean morally and produced to teach a lesson.

That "The Hypocrites" had been rejected only in Illinois and was at that very moment playing in at least twenty towns.

That the producer was more anxious to comply with the rulings of censors than the censors were to comply with the interpretation of the law, and then the speaker stated that he would take the fifty people assembled in conference, let them witness "The Hypocrites," and that if ten people out of the fifty condemned the picture he would burn it up in the public square, and on the other hand if the picture was voted worthy of exposition in Ohio by the assembled representatives, Mrs. Miller was to consider it as a vote of her incompetency and resign.

Mrs. Miller refused to accept the challenge and the meeting closed with nothing definite being done one way or the other.

Declares a Dividend

An event not at all common in the feature film business was recorded Tuesday of last week when the Picture Playhouse Film Co. Inc., with offices in the World Tower Building, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, declared a semi-annual dividend of four per cent on the preferred stock of the corporation. The Picture Playhouse people say that this declaration of a dividend is the first which has been recorded in the history of the feature film business—and there are a lot of people who will agree that the declaration of such dividends is at least a rare occurrence in this branch of the industry.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., was capitalized at $200,000 about six months ago and is most widely known as the American distributing agency of the Pasquali features in America. Mortimer D. Metcalfe is the president, Albert Amato the vice-president, Philip O. Mills the secretary, Grenville Temple Snelling the treasurer, and these officers, together with James Roosevelt, Frederick B. Cochran and Ernest G. Metcalfe, constitute the board of directors.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

HOW POSITIVES ARE PRINTED

THE long strips of "negatives" which have been taken with the cameras shown in the last article, and "developed" and washed and dried and inspected, are now ready for "printing." This means that they will be put in a machine, face to face with a similar strip of "positive film stock," in such a way that light can shine through the transparent places of the negatives directly onto the sensitive face of the positive film stock.

Thus wherever the negative is clear the positive will turn black under the influence of the light, just as the dark places in the negatives were caused by light coming through the lens of the camera. There is one important difference however, between positive and negative film-stock. The positive emulsion is not nearly so sensitive as the negative. The reason is twofold. First, it does not need to be, for in printing we have plenty of light, and can allow more time; and second, it is much easier to attain the desired qualities of "gradation," "brilliance," "softness," etc., much of which may be sacrificed when extreme speed is the all-important consideration.

There are two kinds of printers in common use, and these are known as "continuous," and "intermittent" or "step" printers. Figure 17 shows an English type of step printer, and Figure 18, a continuous printer of American manufacture. In order to understand the particular uses to which each is adapted, it will be necessary to consider the problems with which the designer of printers has to contend, and particularly some of the qualities of the film itself, which is not nearly so reliable and well behaved under all circumstances as the manufacturers would like it to be.

In the first place, film shrinks. This would not be so bad if it always shrunk alike, which it does not. It may shrink all the way from one-fiftieth of one per cent to three or four per cent, according to the make, and the processes of development, and the after-treatments, particularly the method of drying. Ordinarily, negatives developed after the most approved fashion, and dried under average conditions, will shrink two-fifths of one per cent, and in such a case, where the manufacturer has systematized the handling of the film so that its development, etc. will be uniform, a printer like that in Figure 18 will answer very well, and has the advantage of great speed of operation.

Almost in the center of Figure 18 is a round box-like part marked Q, through which both films pass from top to bottom. They pass around just inside of the left-hand edge of the box, which is curved just enough, so that if the negative, which is at the right, is 1/256 shorter than the positive stock, they will go through at the same rate of speed, and therefore the pictures will not be blurred. This is because both films are bent into a circle where they pass the light, and although the film that is on the outside of the circle has the farthest to go, it will get through just as fast, for the films are both fed by sprockets, and the speed is determined by the number of holes, rather than by the length of film.

In Figure 17, the films go through the printing aperture perfectly straight, but as they are pulled down one picture at a time, and come to a dead stop while the light is shining through the negative, there is little danger of blurring the positives, even though the negative film may be much shorter than the positive film-stock. After the positive has been developed and dried it also will have shrunk to about the same length as the negative, and its length remains fairly constant unless it is subjected to extreme conditions of temperature and humidity.

In a continuous printer the light reaches the film through a narrow slot which can be adjusted to different widths, so that when the negative is unusually dark or "dense" the slot may be opened wider to let more light reach the positive, and still the films may be fed at the same rate. In practice, however, both the width of the slot and the speed of the films, as well as the intensity of the light may be varied so that any condition of the negative can be met, and a uniformly exposed positive produced even from a very faulty negative.

In the step printer, the opening in the "aperture-plate" is exactly the size of one image or picture, and the films start and stop, just as in the camera and projecting machine. Here also are several ways of controlling the exposure. The electric motor which drives the printer can be given six different speeds by "throwing in" different "resistances," L, Figure 17, and there are purely mechanical devices which further vary these speeds, so that there are really twenty-four rates available. Then there are two different ways of modifying the light which reaches the film. The lamp, J, Figure 17, can be moved to and from the printing aperture, E, and as the intensity varies inversely as the square of the distance, when the lamp is twice as far away there will be one-fourth as much light at the aperture. When three times as far away there will be one-ninth as much light, etc. There are also other resistances, M, Figure 17, which, when put "in circuit" with the lamp, cause a direct variation of its brightness.

When the first "print" is made from an unknown negative there is much adjusting and testing, and usually some "over-printed" and "under-printed" positive, but after the inspector has given it the "once-over" on the screen, there is no more excuse for faulty printing. It is here that the system of the factory comes into play. Usually the first positives that come through are not only imperfectly printed, but contain much that is to be eliminated from the final prints. Therefore the inspector (and he is not alone) uses several kinds of judgment before the reel is finally arranged. Then, after the many short pieces of positive film have been cemented together to make 1,000 feet that everybody from the actors and the directors down to the boss will pass, the index-cards are prepared and the precious, never-to-be-duplicated negative or rather negatives, are correspondingly cut to pieces and cemented together in the proper order.

Thus it happens that all sorts of negatives (from the printer's standpoint) are strung along in a heterogeneous row, one and three-eighths of an inch wide. and nearly a quarter of a mile long. And he (or she) must take them as they come, first a few feet of "stock" trade-mark, then some properly exposed "title," followed by an undertimed "interior," then more title, and some "outside stuff" that is so black you can't see through it. And so it comes, with dozens of changes that would tax the alertness as well as the judgment of the cleverest of printers.

But here is where the system comes in. The actual printing operation is all but automatic, even where they do not have the modern devices (mentioned below) for making the negative do its own controlling. By the card system, each portion of the negative has its printing quality noted (in the language of printer adjustments) on a card which is given to the printer, who, after a mental rehearsal will be able to turn out a good positive the first time, and if the same printer is kept at the same negative for an entire run of (say) twenty prints, he will turn out the last dozen prints as if he were part of an automatic machine, the many and varied manipulations having become second nature to him.

This is all very well for a small factory (which today is several times larger than the big factory of yesterday) but economy is so important to the very large producers that means for further simplifying the process have been developed, and it is now possible to print from a 1,000 foot negative having all the diversity of an Uncle Tom's Cabin picture taken by an assortment of amateurs, in all kinds of weather, without requiring any personal attention to the adjustments of the printing machine.

This is accomplished in several ways, one of the best known being to punch some small holes on the edge of the negative film, the arrangement of these holes corresponding to the amount of light required to print a "normal" positive from any given portion of the negative. The holes merely serve to let two points of electrical contact come together at pre-determined intervals, they being normally held apart, one being on each side of the film with a spring trying to press them together.

When a hole comes along and these points do touch, an electrical circuit is closed, and this causes a magnet to attract some one of the adjusting levers in a certain way, either to throw in or out a resistance, as for the motor or the lamp, or to perfrom some other operation affecting the time of exposure.

If the hole happens to be near the edge of the film it will close one circuit, and if nearer the image it will close another, etc. Hence it is possible to make the machine do practically everything except exercise the judgment which the brains of the industry get paid for. Perhaps it is this very limitation of machinery, however wonderful and efficient, that accounts for the discrepancy between the large salaries of some of those who do the things that machines cannot do, and the small wages of those who only compete with them, or whose work is in itself mechanical.

American Film Artistically Treated

BY CLARENCE J. CAINE

NOVEL methods employed to advance the action and exterior settings selected with careful discrimination distinguish the two-reel production entitled "The Truth of Fiction," to be released on March 8 by the American Film Manufacturing Company, from the average picture of the same length.

In the latter part of the film two of the characters sit down to read a book and the story told by the printed pages appears on the screen, with the open book as a frame for the picture. The American Company has used something along this line on other occasions and it has always proved successful because of the skill of the photographic department. In working this effect into the story it would have been easy to make the picture appear confusing to the average patron of a theater, but the clever manner in which it is "put over" in this picture, as well as in its predecessors, can leave no doubt in the mind of even the unintelligent as to its purpose.

The early part of the first reel contains many long range views of a cattle round-up, the scenery being typical of the present-day West. The backgrounds used throughout are a little different than those usually seen in "Flying A" pictures and, if possible, are even prettier. Every scene is clearly photographed and these things alone, not considering acting or story, hold one's interest.

One thing which is very noticeable about the story is how it contrasts fact and fiction. In the scenes representing real life the actions of the characters, the costuming and the general atmosphere are all plausible, while in the scenes representing the story told by the printed pages of the book, the acting is highly melodramatic, the costumes exaggerated and the entire effect unreal.

The cast is composed of Winifred Greenwood, Pete Morrison, George Field, John Steppling and Anna Kromann and the acting of all is pleasing, Miss Greenwood taking premier honors by her portrayal of a novelist. This actress has the faculty of looking and acting the part of any type she assays and doing it perfectly. In this case she transforms herself into a maiden lady whose ideas of life are set, in such a manner that one would never think she would be capable of portraying the girlish characters in which she often scores successes.

As the story opens the woman novelist is seen in her city home, where she is dissatisfied with the life she is leading. A letter arrives from a girl friend in the West inviting her to visit the ranch which her father owns. The novelist accepts the invitation and soon is in the heart of the cattle country, where she feels that life is worth living.

Her girl friend is in love with one of the cowboys on the ranch and is loved by another one. The man she loves pays marked attention to the novelist, though the latter does not notice this. The girl's father gives the cowboys a holiday in order that they may entertain the novelist with feats of daring. A portion of the picture at this point is given over to various feats of horsemanship.

As the plot unfolds the girl, seeing the man she loves and the novelist together all the time agrees to elope with the other man, but is prevented from taking this step by the woman of fiction. About the same time the man with whom she was to elope is arrested for wife desertion. The novelist realizes that she is interfering with the love affair of the western couple and returns to her city home.

She writes a book about the affair and when a copy is received on the ranch the girl and the cowboy, who have become reconciled, recognize the leading characters as themselves, the novelist and the unworthy man. The story tells how the woman from the city went away when she learned she had caused sorrow and how the western lovers found happiness in each others arms and they know that the novelist wishes them to do likewise. In the city the novelist, alone and unhappy, realizes the price that is often paid for the truth in fiction.

Will She Be Queen?

Representative bodies throughout California are nominating candidates for queen of the exposition, and as one of the foremost industries of the state, the executives of the motion picture manufacturing companies on the Pacific Coast have been asked by the authorities of the Panama-Pacific Exposition to nominate a candidate to represent them, with a view to removing their interest in the contest as far as possible from what might appear to be only another way of securing newspaper and trade paper publicity for some photoplay star. They have nominated Miss Gladys Nicholson, a native daughter of the Golden West and a member of Los Angeles' most exclusive set, to represent them. Much interest is being taken in the candidacy of Miss Nicholson, and the manufacturers are devoting reams of publicity matter to her in their effort to elect her the carnival queen. Among those who have endorsed her candidacy are: I. Bernstein of the Universal Film Company; H. M. Horkheimer of the Balboa Amusement Company; Carlyle Blackwell of Favorite Players; Jim McGee of Selig Polyscope Company; Fred Kley of the Lasky Players; A. Kaufman of Famous Players; Captain J. Melville of the Lubin Company; Tom Ince of the New York Motion Picture Company; G. P. Hamilton of the Albuquerque Film Company; Mr. Smith of the Vitagraph Company; Lee Dougherty of the Biograph Company; James Horn of the Kalem Company; Frank A. Garbutt of Bosworth, Inc.; L. J. Vance of Fiction Pictures, Inc.; A. M. Kennedy of the Kriterion Features; G. M. Anderson of the Essanay Film Company; J. P. Epping of the Majestic and Reliance Companies; S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company; Mr. Levy of the Eclair Company, and representatives of Bostock's Arena. The publicity work is in charge of Don Meaney, the well known dopester, and Don is expecting to bring home, as usual, the winner.

Forming Another Program

As the result of the success obtained by the Life Photo Film Corporation in contracting for its entire output for a year with the leading exchanges throughout the United States, which achievement, prior to the results obtained, was considered almost impossible by the larger number of feature photoplay manufacturers, several of the independent feature manufacturers not allied with program releasing concerns, have been in communication with the officers of the Life Photo Film Corporation, in an endeavor to interest them, and through them, their exchanges, in tying up the releases of these other manufacturers for the same territory and with the same exchanges and upon the same terms as those secured by the Life Photo Film Corporation.

The plan is that three other reputable and well known feature manufacturers, together with the Life Photo Film Corporation, shall between them all, agree to supply the exchanges with one feature a week for six months, making one feature a month from each manufacturer, and thereafter two features from each manufacturer a month, making a total release of two features a week, each manufacturer to attend to its own lithographs, heralds, slides, and publicity matter, but the four manufacturers agreeing upon release dates, and from the board of directors of each concern, one gentleman to be chosen to act as a committee to pass upon each play, the star, the scenario, and, finally, the production itself, when completed, before permitting its release to the exchanges, thereby insuring the highest form of productions and a guarantee that all manufacturers will live up to their contracts with the exchanges.

Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary of the Life Photo Film Corporation, who inaugurated the plan of dealing directly with exchanges, when interviewed, stated that prior to his departure for a tour of the country, he outlined this plan to three other large feature manufacturers, who, while they agreed with him upon its adaptability and practicability, nevertheless were quite unwilling to engage in trying out the idea to prove its merits or demerits, and it remained with the Life Photo Film Corporation to enter the field quite unassisted.

"The Pageant of San Francisco"

"The Pageant of San Francisco" has been secured by Andrew J. Cobe, president of the Alliance Films Corporation, and will be released March 15 through the newly organized Alliance special department.

This picture, which is in five parts, opens with the discovery of the Golden Gate by Spanish adventurers over two hundred years ago. All of the events that have made San Francisco one of the greatest of American cities and aided materially in the development of the Pacific slope are shown in this film. The first settlement, the lawless days under Mexican rule, the arrival of the hustling Yankee, the rising of Old Glory, the discovery of gold and the rush of '49 follow in historical sequence. The terrible earthquake, the heroic rise from the smouldering ashes into a new city follows, and the picture is brought to a fitting climax with the opening of the Panama Pacific Exposition.

Mr. Cobe, in commenting upon the picture, said, "I expect great things of this film. Its romantic appeal and timeliness ought to make it a big winner."

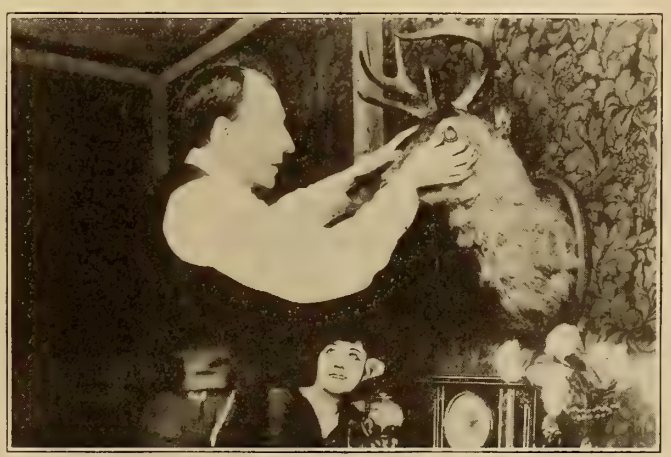
Hero Discredited With His Sweetheart

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

CRAFTY and resourceful as Craig Kennedy, the scientific detective, has proven himself to be in the previous episodes of the Pathe serial, "The Exploits of Elaine," he finds himself in the tenth installment of the story outwitted and placed in a wrong light by the cleverness of a woman.

All his scientific knowledge, all his undoubted cunning and craft, seem unable to overcome the jealousy of Elaine when she is shown photographs of him kissing another woman. As the story ends poor Kennedy is still at outs with his lady fair, and audiences who are following the story will watch eagerly to learn how he restores himself to her affections with such prima facie evidence against him.

As usual, scientific apparatus is used by Kennedy in foiling another attempt on the part of the Clutching Hand to do away with Elaine, this time it being an electric resuscitator that is used to save her life after the Clutching Hand has all but killed her.



The camera is prepared in the deer's head.

As the story opens the Clutching Hand is seen in conference with two members of his band, and ere the conversation is finished they have agreed upon a plot that will discredit Kennedy in the eyes of Elaine, his sweetheart.

Through the medium of Jameson, his reporter assistant, Kennedy is summoned to the home of the female accomplice of the Clutching Hand for the apparent purpose of learning about a poisoned kiss which she alleges she has received and concerning which many of the metropolitan newspapers have carried a story.

Ere Kennedy reaches her apartment the clever lady has arranged with another to photograph her meeting with the detective. The camera has been installed in the head of a deer that stands over the fire-place, and the woman's assistant hides in a closet behind this fire-place, prepared to operate the camera when the proper signal is given.

When Jameson and Kennedy arrive the Clutching Hand calls Jameson away with a fake telephone message and Kennedy is left alone with the woman, who at once throws her arms about his neck, and by pretending to give a demonstration of just how the poisoned kiss was received, places him in a decidedly embarrassing situation. The necessary signal is then given and poor Kennedy is photographed while being embraced by the unscrupulous woman.

Later the adventuress calls upon Elaine and displays the photographs, when Miss Dodge, thoroughly angered, promises to have no more to do with Kennedy.

Though he later calls with a beautiful solitaire, Elaine refuses to even listen to his explanation, and after showing him the pictures which have been left with her she peremptorily dismisses him and Kennedy sulks for days.

The Clutching Hand entices Elaine to the home of his woman accomplice and Kennedy and Jameson, also bent on investigating the mysterious victim of the poisoned kiss, visit the house and discover it to be empty, and later, on searching the basement, are amazed to discover a trap door in the floor is concealing someone beneath.

Hiding behind some boxes in the cellar they are amazed to see a man in an oxygen helmet come up through the trap door and on capturing and overpowering him they learn that the trap door leads down to an abandoned sewer, the oxygen helmet being necessary for anyone who ventures within, as the foul gas would soon overcome anyone thus unprotected who tried to breathe its noxious air.

The electric resuscitator revives Elaine.

Kennedy captures the man from the sewer.

When Kennedy finds a blond hair on the man's shoulder, he recognizes it as one of Elaine's, and quickly suspicions that the girl must be imprisoned below.

Donning the oxygen helmet, Kennedy descends to the sewer and after making his way for some distance along its intricate windings, he finds Elaine unconscious and apparently dead.

Bringing her to the surface he summons an ambulance, but when the ambulance surgeon has made use of the pulmotor, he declares that the girl is beyond aid.

Kennedy, however, is not so hopeless and orders her taken to his own laboratory, where he makes use of the electric resuscitator and finally succeeds in bringing her back to consciousness after she has been apparently dead for more than an hour. The apparatus used in this scene is one that the Pathe Company explains was secured with much difficulty and is probably the only one obtainable in this country.

Edison to Have Theater

The Edison company has completed arrangements with Manager Fred Dollinger of the Claremont Theater, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street and Broadway, New York, whereby that theater will be given over Thursday night of every week to the Edison company and the complete Edison weekly releases for the week previous will be shown.

The first such night will be Thursday, March 4, and the event has been planned as a gala occasion. About twenty of the Edison artists will be present and novelties are promised, different each week. Manager Dollinger has advertised the night widely and has extended the most cordial invitations to all fellow exhibitors as he believes that they will welcome an opportunity to see, at one theater and on one night, all the releases of the Edison company, for one week.

The following releases, from Wednesday to Friday will be shown: "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," 2000 feet; "The Experiment," a drama, 1000 feet; "In Spite of All," the Fiske play, in 3 reels; "Hypno and Trance," a 1000-foot Wadsworth and Housman comedy; and "That Heavenly Cook," a 1000-foot comedy.

On next Thursday night, Frank McGlynn, who took the part of Lincoln, will, when the picture fades out, be found on the stage in exactly the same position as "Lincoln," in his costume and make-up. The same idea will be followed out with Gertrude McCoy and Robert Conness who take the lead in "In Spite of All."

The Claremont is claimed to be the finest theater in the Washington Heights section and is of the best type of a well-appointed motion picture theater. It seats 1500, and is beautifully decorated. Manager Dollinger is one of the most progressive of managers and is enthusiastic that his departure will bring returns and prestige as unusual as the time and thought put into the plan.

First Hesser Production

Under the new Hesser brand the first production will be "Husband or Lover?" a four-reeler ready for release on March 22. It is now being made in Atlanta under the direction of Edwin Bower Hesser, and, although it is a modern society drama in its essentials, the story has woven into it a daring melodramatic plot which included some very sensational scenes on the famous Stone Mountain of Atlanta and other important parts of the story are laid in the great federal prison there. Over 500 people appear in this picture.

Mr. Hesser's leading woman is Elaine Ivey, who is supported by Frank W. Day, Elvina Neal, Julia Gwin, Thelma Freeman, and several other excellent players.

In order to make his producing company a truly local industry, Mr. Hesser has established a training school for motion picture acting and the students, during their course of instruction appear as extras and in minor characters, the plan being to promote them to more important parts as their abilities progress. Two features a month are scheduled. The second production, for release on April 7, will be "The Beauty Ball" with Elaine Ivey featured. "Race Suicide," a daring play on a big topic will be ready on April 22.

In the near future a company for producing one-reel comedies will be established in Atlanta by Mr. Hesser, under a well known comedy director. The general offices of the concern have been moved from New York to the Forsyth Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Change in Bosworth Release

Bosworth, Inc., announces a change in its release schedule during the month of March which will affect the release of "Sunshine Molly," which was originally listed for distribution commencing March 18. The date of release for this production has been placed forward one week and in accordance "Sunshine Molly" will appear on March 11.

Bosworth has three releases for the month of March, the first being Elsie Janis in "The Caprices of Kitty" on March 8, followed by "Sunshine Molly," featuring Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley on March 11, and Fritzi Scheff in "Pretty Mrs. Smith" on March 29, the last mentioned being a Morosco subject produced in association with Bosworth.

"Sunshine Molly," with Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley in the principal characters, has just been finished and judging from the glowing accounts of the film, received from the coast, the picture promises to score another success for Bosworth, Inc. The film offers a thrilling dramatic story concerning the history of the discovery of oil in California and presents several spectacular incidents including the burning of three large oil wells. The stars are supported by such capable players as Herbert Standing, Vera Lewis, Roberta Hickman, Frank Elliott and Adele Farrington.

Selig Press Bulletins

As bright and interesting as a regular newspaper is the Selig Weekly Press News, the four sheet press bulletin issued every week by the publicity department of the Selig Polyscope Company. The news items it carries on the front page are arranged with regular two and three line newspaper heads, and the text itself is very interesting reading matter. On the inside pages are the synopses of the current Selig films, while on the back page appears an advertisement for the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial.

The same company is also issuing on the first of every month a magazine, the Selig Monthly Release Herald. It contains stories of Selig pictureplays to be released during the month, with illustrations. The March number is bound in a cover presenting a portrait of Miss Kathlyn Williams in five colors. It is produced from an original painting.

Who's Who in the Film Game

Facts and Fancies About a Man You Know or Ought to Know

THE portrait that finds a resting place in the exact center of this page is stolen property. It has been filched from a snapshot photo showing a busy man at his desk. It was never originally intended that the desk and other evidences depicting commercialism should be removed from the scene, but you can do strange things to pictures. Here you have the plain portrait of a plain business man who was too busy to sit for a regular photograph and who doesn't care a hoot whether you see him in print. He prefers to see you face to face, right across the desk that occupies so much of his time. The desk that has so completely disappeared from view still exists. It is part of the substantial furnishings of a splendid new office equipment at 25 West 45th Street, New York City. You will find it in the schedule of furniture and fixtures account, Pathe Exchange, Inc. The man is Felix Malitz, who might have spelled it M-a-l-y-t-z just as well as not, thereby including all the final letters of the alphabet. Not that Felix Malitz is a tail-ender, by any means, for he isn't that at all. He is the guiding spirit, the vice-president and managing director of Pathe Freres and Pathe Exchange, Inc. He has been associated with the Pathe interests in the United States for little more than a year.

He speaks fourteen languages and never stammers!

He is rather under the average height, broad-shouldered, black haired and abrupt, though courteous, in his manners. As a linguist few men can equal him. He speaks fourteen languages and never stammers! His father was German and his mother Italian. He was born in Brandenburg, January 10, 1876, and he wears his mustache a la the Kaiser. Mr. Malitz received a great portion of his education in the world-famed Gymnasium Zum Grauen Kloster—the seat of learning that claimed Bismarck as a student. It was here he developed those broad shoulders and a penchant to speak the languages of all other men.

Early in life Felix Malitz became interested in commerce. He identified himself with a large French concern and specialized in organizing sales forces. In this country he would have been styled an efficiency expert.

In assuming the duties of responsibility that attach to his present position, Mr. Malitz is bringing his past business experience into full force. He is thoroughly imbued with the idea that the great reputation of his house—a pioneer in film production and a leader in foreign countries—should attain and maintain these distinctions in America. Mr. Malitz—a natural student—is endeavoring by scientific methods to popularize his brand of films among exhibitors. The success attained by "The Exploits of Elaine" gives him assurance that his labor is bearing fruit.

To judge a man's ability by results achieved in so short a time would be unfair. Mr. Malitz has no apology to offer for his work thus far. The record is flattering, but it had best be regarded as indicative of what the future promises. Pathe Freres are film makers in this and other countries. The troubles of Europe compels concentration in America, and Felix Malitz is one of the very best little concentrators you are apt to run across.

If there is any special thing for emphasis in connection with Mr. Malitz, it is his fondness for work. He is vigilant during all reasonable and unreasonable hours. He acquired the habit of mastery in his school days and more subsequently with the languages. He carries this same indomitable spirit into business and transmits it to his co-workers. He tolerates no distractions. The task never ends till the work is finished, and in the film business all men find plently to do.

Calmness in the proceedings is another characteristic. Mr. Malitz isn't easily rattled. He never betrays nervousness. His plans are carefully planned and rigidly adhered to and his self-confidence is a predominating trait.

And he doesn't smoke.

Dynamite Exploded In Ince Drama

Fifty tons of dynamite were used by Richard Stanton, actor-director of the Kay-Bee Company, while producing "On the High Seas," an absorbing melodrama released in the Mutual program. The story deals with the attempt of a woman and a crook, aboard a steamer, to steal a consignment of gold. Seeing her daughter and the husband she has deserted aboard, the woman balks at the last moment and throws overboard the bomb that was designed to wreck the steamer.

"Fundamental Principles"

NOT very often do we feel that we should call especial and emphatic attention to any particular feature of our reading pages. Even upon this occasion we must admit that good articles speak for themselves and require no editorial boosting. But when we are presenting valuable information that has never before appeared in print, information that must form part of the mental equipment of every motion picture technician, and should be in the possession of everyone in the business, we will be pardoned if we make a little noise about it. Our motive in this is, indeed, quite altruistic; for while it can bring us only reputation, it offers to our readers that increased learning which proverbially means increased earning and so benefits the whole industry. We refer, of course, to the series of articles at present running in Motography under the title "Fundamental Principles, Transformed by Featherstone."

Although the motion picture has been known to science for many years, and to the lay public for a decade or more, up to six years ago it had practically no literature. This was about the time Motography—or rather its predecessor, The Nickelodeon—started. A reference to the early files of this publication and its contemporaries reveals all too clearly that "stories" were obtained only by great labor; and pictures—in the picture business!—impossible. The familiar "still" of today was unknown. Even the player was forced, temperament or no, to hide his light under a bushel. And as for inside information and illustration of technical processes, it were treason to mention such a thing.

The publicity department of the business has changed since then. Now still pictures and players' photographs are to be had for the asking, or without it; and stories are delivered in baskets. The magazines, trade and popular, have let the public into most of the early "secrets" of film making, and he is poorly informed indeed who cannot tell how the pictures are produced. There has been, too, a large amount of technical information disseminated by the same agencies; while books on the subject have gradually appeared until a small but excellent library has been built up.

The writer of technical literature of the motion picture, therefore, if he would surpass prior efforts, must himself be possessed of no ordinary fund of knowledge. And besides that knowledge and experience he must have an analytical mind, capable of drawing new conclusions from old facts. These qualifications the author of "Fundamental Principles" has in abundance.

We believe that in "Fundamental Principles" we are giving our readers something of more than ordinary value, and that everyone should make it a point to read it carefully. Even those who are already well informed on motographic technics will be well repaid for the slight investment in time required to read its bi-weekly installments, and novices and beginners will find it an education.

The Supreme Court's Decision

THE decision of the United States Supreme Court, handed down February 23, in the case of the Mutual Film Company against the states of Ohio and Kansas, upholds the constitutionality of state censorship. This opinion is doubtless very disappointing to the appellant, whose claims for the freedom of motion pictures are familiar to those who have followed our frequent expressions on the subject. An abstract of the holding, shorn of its legal verbiage, will be found on another page. It is plain that it effectually destroys all immediate hope of legal relief against official censorship.

The National Board of Censorship, naturally deeply concerned in the result of this case, has issued over the signature of J. W. Binder the following statement:

> The campaign against legalized censorship of motion pictures in Ohio and throughout the country is by no means closed by the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the Ohio law constitutional. The same high judicial body sustained the constitutionality of human slavery by a number of decisions. Yet Abraham Lincoln, backed by the awakened conscience of a majority of the American people, killed it with a stroke of his pen. That was physical slavery. We are fighting for freedom of much more subtle and vital matter—freedom of the intellect and the right to express thought without previous legal restraint. And this battle will be won as was that other great conflict because both contentions are based on eternal truth.

While this attitude reveals a certain tinge of indignation, and has perhaps a more political than practical flavor, it is a good example of the motion picture temper following the decision. It offers no solution of the problem, nor even a mode of effort; but it does suggest that public opinion is the proper weapon to use against those forms of censorship now made legitimate by the court.

Public opinion has always been the proper weapon. With all respect for the beneficent results of litigation, our courts, low or high, cannot take into their consideration those factors of public sentiment and sympathy without which no cause can be really won. What would it avail if any amusement interests won in the courts the right to give entertainment of which the people did not approve? Why should it matter if motion picture interests lose the right to show pictures of which the public does not approve?

The answer to the latter question uncovers the unfortunate aspect of the whole situation. The people have no voice in the matter because the official censors are not their true representatives. It is not a case of displeasing the public; that would be the shortest road to failure, the one vital thing to avoid. It is really a case of disagreement, not between the producers and the censors, but between the people and the censors—and the courts give the latter the right of way.

It was only last week—the day before the Supreme Court handed down its opinion—that we said:

The day must come, and come soon, when all the motion picture and theatrical interests of all classes must unite against censorship, and never cease fighting until the very word becomes a joke and a laughing stock. And that means, perhaps, a perpetual fight; for there is no guarantee that the subject, quashed tomorrow, may not rise up again next week.

It is evident now that it will rise up again next week—and with full legal sanction. The persistent, organized appeal to public opinion is the only immediate way out. Some day there may be new legislation on the subject—could be if the state associations of exhibitors would act.

The work of fighting censorship is now more than ever work for a strong, well organized association. If no organization now existing seems competent to act aggressively, it is time to form another. Such an association should be able to enlist the aid of the newspapers and big popular mazagines; to place speakers on the subject before club meetings; in a word, to work hard all the time and by all the methods that ingenuity can suggest to turn public sentiment earnestly against censorship.

Such a campaign costs money; and it is the motion picture men's money. But better spend some of it in a good cause, or presently, when the censors get a good hold on the business, there will be no money to spend.

Need Any Animals?

The Bechtels-William and Mrs. William, whose connection with the Edison company is of such long duration as to be almost coincident with the beginning of that concern, occupy a little house almost opposite the studio. Having no children of their own, they adopted a good many of the animals that were used, at one time or another, in Edison pictures. Now, however, that the grandchildren and great-grandchildren have begun to appear, this kind hearted couple are at their wits' end what to do with them all, and lately a sign has gone up at their home on Decatur Ave., Bronx, N. Y., offering to give away all but the original pairs of pets.

Just A Moment Please

As exclusively predicted in this Wastebasket of Wisdom the exhibitors of Chicago showed Carter H., conclusively at the primaries that they don't approve of his appointment of the esteemed (so to speak) Major Funkhouser. Perhaps the new mayor will take warning in time and handle the film men with gloves.

SE-EN S-FFER--G SIS-ERS

(Watch It Grow.)

Next week we'll reveal the secret, not only announcing the title of the new serial but also the names of the celebrated personages who have had a hand (in some cases two) in writing, producing or advertising it.

By an esteemed contemporary we lamp that Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation is going to pay Sarah Bernhardt $500 an hour for her work in front of the camera for his concern. Gosh, Lewis, we'd almost sacrifice a leg ourselves for that sum. Having two legs though, we really ought to be worth more dontcha think?

WE'LL HAVE TO ENLARGE THE CAMPUS.

From present indications the Caward Art Scollege is going to be one of the greatest institutions of learning on the planet. This past week no less a personage than Pete Schmid matriculated, and is even now we suspect conferring with Jake Wilk upon a suitable class yell. Lloyd you'll scarcely know your Alma Mater when next you visit the ivy-covered halls that dot the campus.

OUR BURG.

Bill Selig, chaperoning Kathlyn Williams, Colin Campbell and others of the Co., that was to the Panama Canal Zone, was in our Village for a few days this wk., before departing for that dear Loz Anglaize.

"Pop" Lubin of Phillydelphy lingered in our midst until Sat. of last wk., his visit being enjoyed by all.

Adolph Zukor hesitated long enough in Our Burg this wk., to pick up Aaron Jones, one of our prom. cits. and then flitted back to Noo Yawk.

Carl Laemmle and party is expected on Sat. of this wk. and the first part of next Carl's special private excursion starts West.

Harry Reichenbach and his Missus Tuesdayed in Our Village this wk. much to the enjoyment of several of our natives.

It ain't very often Jesse Goldberg slips up, but when he invites our Noo Yawk editor to review a picture on February 29th it is apt to be a bit confusing. In 1916 Charley Condon says you might get by with that date Jesse, but he can't permit you in 1915.

HOW CARELESS OF US.

We're just beginning to discover how much we missed at the Reel Fellows' Ball. Last week's issue of the esteemed, so to speak, Billboard arrived and in it we found this:

ley Holmes and Richard Travers.
Picture interests were represented to an overwhelming extent. Carl Laemmle was present with a full Universal company, including Harry Meyer and Hebe, Carl Lubin with a company, Francis Bushman and full company from the Essanay, and last, but not least, William Zukor, of the Famous Players.

Now ain't it funny we can't remember seeing Carl Lubin, William Zukor, Harry Meyer or Hebe, and certainly there were no full companies present.

Were you in a condition to see more than we, Hildreth?

Or is it us that's at fault?

Probably they were there.

But we didn't see 'em.

The Thanhousers Are Back on the Job

BY MABEL CONDON

Gertrude Thanhouser.

'TIS said that Thanhouser stock jumped six points the day Wall street received information of Edwin Thanhouser's resuming general charge of the Thanhouser company. Time turned back three pages, took the Thanhouser president of 1912, and earlier, and placed him in the 1915 setting afforded by the New Rochelle studio and offices. Time then mounted to the top of the Thanhouser mahogany roll top desk and Mr. Thanhouser states that it alone is to be judge of whatever the Thanhouser plans and management will mean to the company now under his jurisdiction.

Other things happened, in addition to the rise of the stock market. The studio scintillated in the bright sunshine which ushered in the returned general manager and three scenes were under way in the filming in less than record time. Gertrude Thanhouser—who is Mrs. Edwin Thanhouser and whose dramatic perception was greatly responsible for earlier Thanhouser successes—said a cheery "Good Morning" to everybody and slipped out of her motor coat and into a swivel chair to the pleasurable task of writing dramatic moments into film plots. Lloyd Lonergan, after a two months' absence, walked around the corner from his apartment and resumed the desk of scenario chief.

The combination is that of the days when Edwin Thanhouser marshalled the company bearing his name into incorporation. That was in 1908. For seven years prior, he had successfully operated a stock theater in Milwaukee, where every play produced had been read and approved by Gertrude Thanhouser, who previous to her marriage had been on the stage. So, on the formation of a motion picture company, Mrs. Thanhouser fitted quite naturally into the scenario department which consisted of herself and Lloyd Lonergan. This department was so brave as to adapt plays from Ibsen and Shakespeare, to which Edwin Thanhouser added, as a pioneer move, the 1,500-foot film. Both the adaptations and the odd-lengthed film proved successes and the Thanhousers, in their resumed positions of authority, express their faith in both.

"The natural length film" is the way Mr. Thanhouser expressed it, the other day, in his second-floor office which fronts on "Thanhouser Park."

"And by a natural length film I mean one that is only as long or as short as the interest of the story will allow. A maximum length combined with a minimum story is a great mistake. A film should have no barren spots; its story should run a natural course and then stop, instead of being padded out to make footage.

"I believe in feature pictures," went on Mr. Thanhouser. "I prophesied a long time ago that a motion picture would comprise an entire evening's entertainment. However, no one length of film is ever going to displace the popular usage of another length. There is a place for every length of film that is interesting; there is no place for any film that does not interest all the way.

Edwin Thanhouser.

"A feature film must not necessarily be a spectacle nor must it contain multitudes of people. It may contain only three or five, yet, if the story is there, and will carry it several reels, it will be a feature. We expect to make two feature films every five weeks in addition to our regular short releases. And these latter we may increase. There are several ideas I have in mind and hope to work out satisfactorily—but time will have to tell you about these." Mr. Thanhouser smiled. While it is inevitable that Time also shall smile, and pleasantly, it will not be until presently, which Mr. Thanhouser interprets as likely to be from four to six weeks. And that shall only be the beginning.

The Thanhouser smile is wide and cheery; it reveals good teeth and creeps up to the bright gray-green eyes which twinkle a swarm of laugh-wrinkles into the corners. The dark brown hair has a generous scattering of gray and the quick directness of his manner and speech accords well with the slender wiriness of his build.

His management of the Thanhouser interests from 1908 to 1912 was so successful a test of his business tact and his ability as a picture producer, that Mr. Thanhouser's vacation of three years in no way lessened the industry's remembrance of him. And three years of vacationing in Europe with his wife, his son Lloyd, thirteen years old and his daughter, Marie, eleven years old, heightened Mr. Thanhouser's interest in films and their making, brought him the realization that American films are better than those of the European market and inspired him to visit the studios of Europe, with the result that his knowledge of films and filming is particularly keen and progressive.

The ability of Gertrude Thanhouser will make itself felt in the work that will go out from the scenario department, of which Phil Lonergan is also a part. "A wonderfully clever woman," Mrs. Thanhouser is called. She also is a wonderfully pretty woman and she is as pleasant, too, as she is pretty and clever.

The Thanhousers, who have been married "fifteen short years" as Mr. Thanhouser puts it, have an apartment-home on Riverside Drive. They will motor out to New Rochelle every morning in a Winton Six which Mr. Thanhouser drives.

There is no doubt but that the coming six weeks will occasion another and a decided rise in the stock quotation on Thanhouser stock. And Time shall be the marker.

Wonderful Dallmeyer Lens

Without question the Dallmeyer cinematograph lens, working at the enormous speed of F 1.9, is the most marvelous lens ever produced for taking motion pictures. Some idea of the wonderful speed of the new lens can be obtained when it is stated that it is about four times as rapid as the lenses working at F 3.5, which are ordinarily considered as extremely rapid.

Telephoto lens taking war pictures.

With this great speed the operator is enabled to produce fully timed negatives under unfavorable light conditions, which would be absolutely prohibitive with the ordinary high speed motion picture lens. They find their greatest usefulness in photographing dimly lighted interiors, illuminated parades at night, fires, submarines and all other subjects which by their nature are poorly lighted.

Notwithstanding any extraordinary speed of this lens, the depth of focus is sufficient to obtain sharp images, at such distances as those at which pictures are ordinarily taken.

The Dallmeyer telephoto lens.

The mounting is very unique in its construction and design which permits its being fitted to almost every motion picture camera. The focusing device is built into the lens mounting so as to occupy the least possible space and incorporates the accurate micrometer movement. It is absolutely rigid and works with great ease and precision.

It is clearly apparent that the equipment of no producing company or industrial film manufacturer is complete without one of these lenses.

The Dallmeyer cinematograph telephoto lenses are an entirely new invention and enable the operator to secure large images without employing cumbersome long focus lenses which are impractical owing to the great danger of vibration, their bulk and the great length of the extension tube.

The Dallmeyer telephoto consists of a long focus positive element to produce a large image, to which is added a negative element, which in turn shortens the effective focal length, resulting in a high power telephoto combination which produces great magnification with only a short extension. Heretofore telephoto lenses have been impractical for motion picture work because of the slow speed at which they work. However, the Dallmeyer Company has been successful in combining great speed, perfect definition and wonderful covering power. One of this series has the extreme power of F 4.5.

The entire telephoto outfit is exceedingly compact and can be fitted to any motion picture camera. It is equipped with a "built in" focussing mount, which occupies no additional space. The focussing mount works on the spiral movement and is equipped with a scale for all practical distances. The mounts are constructed of aluminum, all the wearing parts being of brass, thus assuring the maximum wearing qualities.

This lens has been successfully used in photographing volcanos in action and in securing real war pictures on the firing line in the present European struggle, its wonderful magnifiying power being especially practical in photography in the danger zone, as it permits the operators taking a position from three to nine times as far from the scene as is required when using an ordinary lens to secure images of normal size.

Burke & James, Inc., of Chicago, probably the largest wholesale distributor, is the sole American wholesale representative of the Dallmeyer Company, maker of the two series of lenses described above. Burke & James, Inc., is also the sole wholesale agent for the Voigtlander lenses, among which are the Heliar F 4.5 and Helomar F 3.2, both rapid anastigmats of the highest quality, especially constructed for motion picture work.

Educators Visit Lubin Plant

In order that they might see at first hand the making of motion pictures, and incidentally, discuss with the men and women who write, make, and act them, the educational trend of the photoplay of today, a party of prominent Philadelphia educators visited the Lubin plant recently and spent an interesting day, during which they saw a half dozen different comedies and dramas being made in the studio.

In the party were Captain John B. Pepper; William T. Tilden, one of the most prominent educators in Philadelphia; William Shoemaker, a member of the Board of Viewers; J. Horace Cook, superintendent of school buildings; George Wheeler and Oliver P. Cornman, assistant superintendents of schools; John C. Frazer, director of vocational education; Louis Nusbaum, Charles H. Brelsford, Milton C. Cooper, Samuel L. Chew, district superintendents of schools; Henry J. Gideon, chief of the bureau of compulsory education; George D. Gideon, Wm. L. Sayre, late principal of manual training schools; Dr. E. S. Saylor, eye specialist; George Z. Long and William K. Gorham.

So interested were the educators in watching the inner workings of the big Lubin plant and discussing photoplays with the various Lubinites they met, that they unanimously accepted Mr. Lubin's invitation to visit his ranch at Betzwood, Pa., and inspect the studios and mechanical departments there and see the making of some big, spectacular out-of-doors scenes.

Kathlyn Williams Visits Chicago

Together with Director Colin Campbell and his wife, Miss Kathlyn Williams, the leading lady of the Selig Polyscope Company, stopped in Chicago this week on her way to Los Angeles from Panama, via New York, and though she had just completed one part of the tiresome journey across the continent and had the remainder directly before her, she was in the happiest of moods when seen by a MOTOGRAPHY interviewer. Of course, like the conventional interviewer always does, he asked her what role she liked best, expecting her to say "Kathlyn" without hesitation.

Kathlyn Williams.

"While I fully enjoyed my part in the 'Adventures of Kathlyn,'" she replied to the question, "I cannot in justice to my other roles say that I liked it best. Every play presents a new problem and I really think that I work just as hard and am just as dissatisfied with myself in every character for which I am cast. The part of Mrs. Van Courtland in 'The Ne'er Do Well,' which we filmed in Panama, suits me perfectly, for it gives me a chance to do a sort of character-heavy part, much like Cherry in 'The Spoilers.'"

Miss Williams' mail was delivered at this time and she paused a moment to sort it over. A number of letters from "fans" were forwarded by mistake and this caused the delightful "Diamond S" lead to remark that one of the pleasing trials of a screen actress' life was the receiving of many letters every day. "Some of the letters are really helpful," she said, "for the writers are earnest students of the screen, while others express admiration. They are all a source of great inspiration to me."

"Would you advise young women to study the art of silent rather than straight dramatic action," the interviewer queried, knowing that Miss Williams' advice on this question would interest thousands of girls who aspired to become actresses.

"Unless a girl has talent I would not advise her to enter dramatic work at all," she replied, "but if the talent is there and is backed by ambition and determination to succeed, plus personality, I certainly would not discourage her. I think that training in a dramatic school or in a stock company under a good director is really essential for success in pictures, though many have made good without it. So many young girls ask me that question and I tell them all of my own experience. I attended dramatic school and then toured with several dramatic companies. After that I worked in stock in Salt Lake City and Los Angeles and then entered pictures with the Selig Company, where I have been for six years." C. J. C.

Cowboy Poet Breaks Loose

Out of the bouyancy of his cow-puncher's heart, "Curly" Fletcher, champion broncho-buster and bull-rider with the California Motion Picture Corporation's company at Boulder Creek, California, has composed a song in praise of Beatriz Michelena, the beautiful star, whose next screen appearance will be in "The Lily of Poverty Flat," a Bret Harte photo-play.

"Curly," with the other cowboys and the actors and actresses in the company, celebrated Miss Michelena's birthday on February 12. The health of the petite little leading lady was toasted, and speeches were made in her honor, but the cow-puncher poet carried off the honors. Here is what he wrote but was too bashful to read:

Today is the day of days,
The anniversary of Lily's birth,
The Lily of Poverty Flat,
The best little Lily on earth.

May she prosper on for always,
May she live for many years,
And never be touched by sorrow
And never have cause for tears.

May she never give way to sadness,
But always be merry and glad.
May she laugh when she can and be happy,
For life is too short to be sad.

May her career be always successful,
From our midst may she never depart,
For this is the wish of her comrades,
Who hold her most dear to their heart.

Waterloo Manager Famous

Manager W. L. Myers of the Palace theater of Waterloo, Iowa, has won nation-wide prominence among newspapers and moving picture theater men by reason of his belief in using generous newspaper space in advertising feature films.

His recent placing of a page advertisement with the Waterloo Times-Tribune to advertise the film "Cabiria" has resulted in his receiving press notices from Maine to California.

Last week he received a clipping from the Evening Star, published at Newark, N. J., which declared in effect that he had established a new departure in photoplay advertising. In the same mail he also received a letter from the proprietor of a theater in Burlington, Vt., who wished further information regarding his advertising methods.

That it pays to use newspaper space liberally is well proven by the experience of Mr. Myers.

The Beaver Film Company

Announcement is made that the Beaver Film Company, of which W. Lindsay Gordon is president and manager, will erect a studio at Dongan Hills, Staten Island, immediately, and that the studio will probably be completed about the first of June. It is said to be the intention of the Beaver Film Company to produce one, two and three reel pictures, though no arrangement has yet been made for their release. President Gordon is already known in the industry, as the maker of lecture slides on such subjects as "Uncle Sam in Mexico," "The Slums of New York" and "The European War."

Kathryn Osterman

Kathryn Osterman, who is known in the theatrical world as the laughter-loving comedienne, has joined the World Comedy Stars Film Corporation and will be featured in a number of one-reel comedies.

Kathryn Osterman.

Miss Osterman's career on the stage has been a most interesting one. For several seasons she starred at the head of her own company in Mark Swan's clever comedy, "The Girl That Looks Like Me" and also "The Night of the Play," which afterwards became Lillian Russell's starring vehicle under the title of "The First Night." After this she played under A. H. Woods' management in "Modest Suzanne" and "The Girl in the Taxi." She was also an important vaudeville feature as the co-star with Louis Simon in "A Persian Garden," which was successfully presented for two years in all the principal vaudeville theaters of the country.

New Type of Home Projector

A home projector of motion pictures that is guaranteed to be both fool-proof and fire-proof, is the Cameoscope, manufactured by the Cameoscope Corporation, which has R. S. Baldwin as its president and its offices at 110 World's Tower Building.

It is so simple that anybody can operate it, yet nothing of value is sacrificed to its simplicity. It takes the standard 1,000-foot film and at a projecting distance of 35 feet throws a picture six feet high and eight feet wide. The machine is motor-driven and the arc lamp, with carbons and rheostat, is not used. Instead, a 100 watt tungsten lamp is used for home projection and a 250 watt lamp for lecture purposes. This allows of considerable illumination, which is of importance where a roomful of children is concerned. A lamp of so low a power develops a minimum of heat and a picture might be held on the screen for an hour or more without any danger of its being set on fire. Every imaginable test has been made and none of them has succeeded in causing the film to take fire. It is a tiny machine and when folded into its box, the entire weight is but twenty pounds and the size of the box, 16 by 12 inches. It can be set up in two minutes without the use of any tools, and adjustable legs make it convenient to set the projector either on the floor or on a table. The motor is clamped to one of the legs and is connected by a belt to the driving gear. By clamping the motor higher or lower on the stand the belt is tightened or slackened and thus is dispensed with a resistance for regulating the speed of operation.

So simple is the mechanism of the Cameoscope that a motor of only 1-100 of a h. p. is required to drive the mechanism. Yet the projection is well defined and may satisfactorily be thrown on either a dark or a light wall, in homes where no screen is provided. Power may be taken from any lamp socket of the ordinary 110-volt lighting circuit.

Unlike the vast majority of machines, there is no air space separating the lamp house from the projector proper, but the entire apparatus, including the lamp house and magazine, is housed in a single casing. The casing, however, is divided into compartments which separate the various parts of the apparatus. The driving gear is contained in a compartment on the left-hand side of the machine (see figure 2, in which the door of the compartment has been taken off its hinges). From the fly-wheel, driving pulley "A" (Fig. 2) belted to the motor, power is transmitted by a straight train of gears to the pinion "B," which is keyed to the shaft of the feed sprocket (Fig. 1). A step-down gear connects the pulley "A" with pulley "B," and this is belt-connected with the take-up pulley that turns the lower reel.

The great wheel "F" (Fig. 2) normally serves as an idler to transmit motion to the pinion at the top of the machine, but the shaft to which it is keyed projects through the opposite side of the machine and is adapted to receive a crank handle (at Fig. 1) for hand-power driving, where current is not available for the motor. Owing to the angle at which the film runs to the take-up sprocket "J," the roller "H" imparts a comparatively slow motion to it at first contact, with rapid acceleration that progresses the film smoothly until the roller swings out of engagement. There is a distinct advantage in employing the rolling mechanism in a light machine such as this, for all parts are moving constantly at fixed speed, and the jarring which is present in reciprocating motion is eliminated.

"Runaway June" in Beautiful Bermuda

Weather conditions proved pleasantly propitious for the "Runaway June" company upon their arrival at Bermuda recently. There had been a storm previous to their sailing which let up once they had boarded the steamer Bermudian, but as soon as they landed at Hamilton, rain, storm and wind set in again to such an extent that no liner has been able to leave port since the Bermudian's departure.

On the steamer, in addition to Norma Phillips, J. W. Johnstone, Arthur Donaldson, Marguerite Loveridge and other members of the "Runaway June" company, were a number of relatives and friends. The remaining episodes will all be taken in Bermuda.

Arthur Lee, special representative of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., is now in St. Louis, where he has opened the eleventh branch office of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., at 3431 Olive street, and has sent in some good contracts. Mr. Lee was formerly manager for the General Film Company at Toronto, Ontario, of the special feature department, resigning the latter part of July to accept his present position. Few young men in the film business have had the vast experience in booking that he has had, since he has visited nearly every city and town in the Dominion of Canada and most of the principal cities in the United States, always securing good business for his employers.

With a line of features such as he now has to offer prospective customers, Mr. Lee feels sure however, that he will be able to secure business from houses the company has never been able to book before.

Bill Barry, otherwise known as "6-A Bill," recently joined the "sprig is cubig" fraternity, and more recently denounced the organization for hygienic and other reasons. He finds that it interferes with his duties as medium of the Cameragraph and corresponding secretary of the Screen Club, not to mention the inconvenience of forever waving a handkerchief in one hand and fishing for a second with the other, so he is now negotiating with Recovery, a recognized antidote for colds.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, returned to New York the early part of last week from Los Angeles, where he went about a month ago to visit the western studios of the Famous Players. In California Mr. Zukor made many important plans for the forthcoming activities of the Famous Players' western organization, from which a series of important Mary Pickford productions are soon expected.

Roland Blaisdell who has been associated with the Kriterion home office in New York since the inception of that company has been appointed associate manager of the Empire Kriterion Corporation of Buffalo.

Many new styles in Easter bonnets are being introduced at the Reliance and Majestic studios in California, by Irene Hunt, the Gish sisters, Mae Marsh, Fay Tincher and Mary Alden.

Clay M. Greene, one of the widest known of the Lubin photoplay writers, has the honor of being the first man in Philadelphia to receive a business call on the long distance telephone from California. Clay's lawyer in Oakland called him and they talked four minutes during which they settled three important real estate matters. The conversation cost $26.25 but Clay says it was worth it to him.

The Universal's new $500,000 yacht, the Lasata, which recently traveled from New York to San Diego via the Panama Canal, makes its initial picture appearance in the Bison three-reel release, "Madonna of the Moon," in which Cleo Madison and Joe King enact the leading roles.

There was a time when Thomas Ricketts, the veteran director of the American Company had a desire to return to the East but that time has long passed for he is a confirmed Californian now and the owner of much fine real estate in and around Los Angeles.

William D. Taylor, the director, is taking a short rest "between pictures" as he has worked hard over the last two Favorite Players' productions, "The Last Chapter" and "The High Hand."

Little Billy Jacobs of Keystone and Sterling fame has had a seige with chicken pox, but is able now to put on a make-up and work in pictures again.

Jack Herman, who is directing the production of the Selig Physical Culture series soon to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company, formerly was manager of one of the exclusive athletic clubs in New York City.

Helen Badgley, the Kidlet of the Thanhouser forces at New Rochelle, N. Y., has discovered the exact use of a publicity department. Little Helen, has decided its principal value is to collect the funny sections of the Sunday newspapers and hold them for her. The "tiny lead" makes that department her first post of call Monday morning, and it is not until she has perused the antics of the funny ones, that she is ready to report "made up and ready."

Eleanor Woodruff, who lately joined the Vitagraph forces, and is now in Texas with a company, taking pictures under the direction of Lionel Belmore, is indulging to the full her one particular hobby—horseback riding. As all the pictures have a military setting, the vitagraphers are encamped at Fort Clark and access to the post horses has been granted all the players.

Marc MacDermott of Edison is receiving the congratulations of his fellow players because of his mother finally passing out of danger after a very serious and prolonged illness.

Mutual Film Corporation.—Both issues of this company continue to evidence the greatest strength in the film stocks. Preferred sold at 62 last week and the common at 82½. The amount of reserves that the company has established warrants the confidence of the public, and as long as the stock continues to be as scarce as it has proven in the last two months, with a persistent demand, the natural logic of the situation will be toward gradually higher prices.

Syndicate Film Corporation.—The dividend of 15 per cent was paid last week, so that the change in quotations simply represents the amount of cash dividend paid.

Thanhouser Film Corporation.—The holdings of the Hite estate were transferred to the new parties controlling the destiny of this company and are reported to have sold at 75.

North American Film Corporation.—Incorporated under the laws of Virginia; $150,000 7 per cent cumulative preferred, retirable at 110, and $350,000 of common authorized, but it is rather expected only $100,000 of preferred and $300,000 of common will be issued. All of this stock was quickly bought during the last week and some of the allotments, from different parts of the country, are now oversubscribed. From an unusual combination of very strong factors (which we are not permitted at this writing to report) and from the unusual demand for the stock, based on a very strong story, especially selected cast from many different companies in the United States, also especially selected directors and the distribution under J. R. Freuler of the American Film, who is generally conceded to have no peer in this particular line of work in this country, we feel it is safe to predict that both the serial and the stock of the company producing it will be the most sought after in the entire field of the film industry during the ensuing year. We will be at liberty to give more of the details next week.

New York Motion Corporation.—Sales have been reported at 79 and 80. Good things are promised the stockholders in March, and we hope this time they will be realized, as we understand practically all of the directors—whose sojourn in California precluded action on a very important matter—will have returned to New York in a few days.

Miss Marguerite Clayton has returned to work as one of the leading women with Essanay at the Niles, Cal., studio, after a month's absence.

Fred L. Wilson, formerly with Universal, has joined the Scene from Selig's "The Lady of the Cyclamen," released March 8.

Revier-Kalem company at Culver City, Calif., which was organized only a short time ago.

The next Lasky-Belasco offering will be the picturization of "The Governor's Lady," with Edith Wynne Mathison in the title role, making her debut as a screen star.

Thomas Jefferson, a former member of the Biograph Company has joined the Reliance and Majestic Hollywood, Calif., studios.

The last installment of "The Master Key," the Universal's serial, has been completed and Robert Leonard and his company of Rex players have left for a two weeks' vacation on full pay, which they will spend in rest after their strenuous efforts of the past several weeks.

With the list of actors and actresses employed at the Reliance and Majestic studios increasing daily, many bungalows are being "Mutualized" in the vicinity of the studio, which is located in Hollywood, Calif.

Four well known screen artists came near being killed the other day when their automobile skidded on the wet pavement and crashed into a street car. Harry Carter, the heavy in "The Master Key" serial, suffered bad cuts about his head. Lillian Peacocke of the "Joker" company, driving her car, is still nursing a dislocated shoulder. Ella Hall, "Master Key" heroine, escaped without a scratch, while her mother suffered only cuts and bruises. The machine was wrecked.

Harry S. Mathews, director of the C. K. Film Company of Santa Barbara, Calif., releasing though Kriterion, arrived from the East a few weeks ago and jumped right into harness. Elsie Albert, Alfred Swenson, R. D. Clifton and Baby Early are working under his direction.

Edison Director Charles Brabin is quietly crowing these days because he has discovered, within forty miles of New York City, a town with remarkably quaint facilities of getting an old village atmosphere.

With the completion of the electric light stages at the Reliance and Majestic studios, the Mutual directors are giving the rainy season in California the laugh.

The Victor company, with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips, were enroute to Norfolk, Va., by boat when it occurred to the director, C. H. Easton that some dandy exteriors might be taken on the floating palace which could be used in their next picture. It worked like a charm and many delightful scenes are the result.

Selig special productions to be released in the near future include "The Carpet From Bagdad," "A Texas Steer," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and "The Rosary."

"Dick" Tucker of Edison, has once more deserted the screen and joined the dramatic stock company at Worcester, Mass.

A recent acquisition to the Griffith-Mutual forces at their studio in Hollywood, California, is Alfred Paget, a former member of the Biograph Company. It was during the time that Mr. Griffith was affiliated with the Biograph Company that Mr. Paget became a member of that company.

Cleo Madison, heroine in so many screen plays, has proven that she is a brave lady in real life. Thomas Walsh, of the Bison Company, was burned so badly while preparing a cloud effect that the doctor at Universal City, Calif., expected it would be necessary to graft skin to save his life. Immediately Miss Madison offered six inches of her skin.

The reception given by Mrs. John Wanamaker recently was brought to a termination by a startling departure at such functions—a motion picture exhibition. For several weeks Mrs. Wanamaker was a daily attendant at the leading photoplay houses of Philadelphia and, after seeing Carlyle Blackwell in "The Last Chapter' at the Globe, she immediately made arrangements to have the picture shown.

Edward Peil, Betty Harte, Wm. Ryno and Lottie Case have been added to the roll of Alhambra Film Manufacturing Company, who are producing two-reel dramas for the Kriterion service. Lloyd B. Carleton, who recently arrived on the west coast, is directing the dramas for the same brand.

Samuel Goldfish, on behalf of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces the engagement of Miss Fannie Ward, the distinguished international star, who, by the permission of Marc Klaw, has entered into a contract which calls for her to make her screen debut in the immediate future under Lasky management.

Thomas Nelson Page, the novelist and Ambassador from the United States to Italy, is the latest distinguished writer to fashion a story for production in moving pictures. Mr. Nelson's conribution is called "The Outcast," and has been filmed by Majestic.

Edgar Lewis and the other members of the Fox Film Corporation received a hearty send-off from the citizens of Augusta, Ga., when they left for New York after the completion of "The New Governor."

In anticipation of putting on an additional company, Captain Wilbert Melville, manager of the Lubin western company at Los Angeles, has been gradually adding to his list of artists. Among the new ones who have joined are George Berrell and Jay Morley.

Hazel Dawn, who has just returned to New York from her successful starring tour in "The Debutante," will return immediately to the management of the Famous Players Film Company, who control her exclusive film services, to appear in the film version of the stage success, "Niobe."

Among the most recent additions to the directors' forces at the Reliance and Majestic (Hollywood, Calif.) studios are Baldy Belmont, Tod Browning, George Nichols and Lloyd Ingraham.

Lubin Hall, presented to the alumni of the Congregation Keneseth Israel in Philadelphia by Siegmund Lubin, was officially opened this week. On the opening night the first of a long program of talks on science began when Colonel Joseph Smiley, the Lubin director and leading man, lectured on the making of moving pictures.

Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, which handles the Alliance program in the New England territory, enjoyed a few days in New York recently.

Bennie Zeidman, formerly "Bennie of Lubinville," is now a member of the publicity department of the Majestic-Reliance studios in Los Angeles, Calif. Bennie writes that he likes his new place and that the sun shines every day without fail, etc., etc., but that some day he will again receive his mail at the Screen Club nevertheless.

Harry B. Eytinge, Edison comedian and big man, is a familiar figure evenings at the Grand Central Palace, where he is acquainting himself with the labyrinthal steps of the modern dances, and incidentally trying to bring his two hundred and some pounds down to convenient proportions.

The policy recently adopted by the Lubin Company of releasing each week, on alternating Wednesdays and Thursdays, on the regular program, a three-reel feature, is meeting with great success. Within the next few weeks the public will have an opportunity of witnessing some unusually good pictures of this length made by Directors George Terwilliger, Edgar Jones, Colonel Joe Smiley, Joseph Kaufman, Wilbert Melville and Arthur Johnson.

A. M. Kennedy, general manager of productions of Kriterion Service, has succeeded in obtaining the services of Rube Miller, who for the past year has been directing comedies for the Keystone company.

Fred S. Meyers, formerly of the Laemmle Film Service, has enrolled under the Kriterion banner and has opened his offices in the Palance Exchange building, Minneapolis, Minn., under the name of the Minnesota Kriterion Film Exchange.

Walter Hitchcock, who has been leading man for some of the best known stars in the country, joined the Lubin forces in Philadelphia this week and will play one of the principal parts in "The Climbers," Clyde Fitch's well known society drama, which Lubin is making into a feature photoplay under the direction of Barry O'Neil.

Ralph Lewis, the talented photoplayer who appears in features produced by D. W. Griffith, received word of his mother's death. He was immediately excused and boarded a train for Chicago, where the services will take place. It is with deep regret that his associates at the Reliance and Majestic studios learned of his misfortune.

Ira L. Cunningham, publicity man for the Kinetophote Corporation and better known to the trade as "Jack," was the hit of Sunday evening's smoking concert on the Strand roof in his solo rendition of "Invictus," by Bruno Huhn; "At Dawning," by C. W. Cadman; "Requiem," by Sidney Homes, and two encore numbers. Mr. Cunningham is the fortunate possessor of a rich baritone voice, and has several years of solo work to his credit. His accompanist Sunday evening was Miss Frances Foster.

NEW JERSEY.

Phillip Papier and Charles C. Hildinger, the well known moving picture men of Trenton, have taken an option on a centrally located property, and expect to erect a large theater, to seat upwards of one thousand people. It will be called the Strand, and will run the latest in pictures. The building, for which plans are now being prepared, will be one of the handsomest in the city.

NEW YORK.

Burt C. Ohman of Lyons has commissioned Edward A. Howard, architect of Syracuse, to prepare plans and specifications for a large motion picture house which he will erect in that place at a cost of about $10,000. The building will be 50x80 feet in dimensions and hollow tile and steel will be used in making it fireproof. The theater will seat 750 persons, having a gallery in addition to the spacious first floor arrangement. Work will shortly be started.

NEW YORK.

Ned Kornblite and David Cohen of the Star and Symphony theaters of Binghamton have taken over the Colonial theater, which is the leading motion picture house in Elmira, with a seating capacity of more than 1,500. Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 17—Selig—March 1.—Sacrifice day for aid of the poor, Philadelphia, Pa.; interesting scenes of Chicago mayoralty election; German refugees in New York; Canadian troops leaving Salisbury, England, for the front; Western ski jumpers hold meet at Steamboat Springs, Colo.; the opening of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, Calif.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 18—Selig—March 4.—Sailors sent to take charge of Argentine dreadnaught are guests at Philadelphia Navy Yard; Japanese student of geography arrives in Boston after eight-year bicycle tour of the world; Washington birthday celebration in New York City; American women nursing wounded soldiers in Paris; members of women's reserve volunteers march through London; petition from half a million school children for arbitration of international troubles presented to Secretary Bryan at Washington; trap shooters meet on roof of Grand Central Palace, New York City; Grace Darling continues her trip to Panama, stopping at Kingston, Jamaica; New York National Guardsmen in sham battle; members of exclusive Appalachian Mountain Club gather for mid-winter snowshoe hike, Jackson, N. H.

The Beautiful Lady — Biograph — March 8.— Pedro, a young pottery painter, rescues a child from drowning and meets Mrs. De Puyster, a society leader. He becomes infatuated with the beautiful lady, though she does not even notice him, and neglects his sweetheart, Maddalena. His stepfather, a man of evil character, plans to hold up the carriage of Mr. and Mrs. DePuyster, when they drive to attend a big social function and Pedro learning of the plan, determines to rescue them. He tells the other guests of their danger and all rush to the rescue of Mr. and Mrs. De Puyster. They are saved, but in the pistol battle which follows Pedro is killed. His last act is to gaze in at the face of the beautiful society leader, while his sweetheart, Maddalena, stands to one side sobbing bitterly.

The Mission of Mr. Foo—Edison—March 8.—Florence, a teacher in a Chinese mission, meets Mr. Foo who gives her an odd necklace as a remembrance. The girl's parents show it to Tu Sing, the Chinese ambassador. He expresses great surprise on seeing it, and interprets the inscription as being words of praise to a great warrior. Tu Sing suspects that Mr. Foo is instigating a revolution against the new empire in China, and has him watched. His fears confirmed, the ambassador calls on Mr. Foo, tells him what he has learned, and forces him to end his life with poison.

The films of all the companies are now being submitted to the National Board of Censorship and when approved by them bear official stamp which is shown above. Screen productions having been thus approved are certain to entertain an audience of any kind without offending even the most sensitive person present.

Father's New Maid—Essanay—March 8.—Wallace Beery is seen in the dual role of "Jack" and "Sweedie" in this one-reel comedy. Jack, who is in love with Mr. Grouch's daughter, is forbidden the house, as are a number of other suitors. He finally conceives the idea of applying for a job as a Swedish maid after making up with grease paint and a wig. He secures the job and later makes himself known to his sweetheart. Mr. Grouch is pleased with the new maid because she keeps other suitors away from his daughter and eventually he, himself, proposes to her. Sweedie consents to marry him providing he will consent to Jack marrying his daughter. When he consents Sweedie removes her wig and discloses herself as Jack. N. G. C.

The White Goddess—Kalem—(Three Reels)—March 8.—Elsie Farnim's past life is a mystery to herself and to all those about her. Once a year she is visited by Khanda, a Hindu, who pays her expenses. On one of his visits he tells her that she must return to India with him and, despite the objections of Elwin Gordon, her sweetheart, he forces her to agree by telling her she is to visit her parents. They leave by steamer and Gordon follows on the same boat at the request of Elsie. He attempts to effect her rescue, but is thrown overboard by Khanda's accomplices and Elsie, who has been forced to don native attire, is taken to the temple of Larmar. There she learns that when she was a child her parents were murdered by the Hindus and she was christened the "White Goddess." She also learns that she is now expected to become their ruler. All are forbidden to gaze upon her and when Khanda attempts to make love to her his eyes are put out. Time passes and Gordon, who has escaped alive, continues his search for the girl. When the Hindus' prayers are unanswered, they determine to destroy the "White Goddess" and are about to do this when Gordon, with the assistance of Khanda, reaches the temple. While the sightless Hindu struggles with the high priest who is responsible for depriving him of his sight, Gordon hurries Elsie away to the docks where they board a vessel bound for America. Alice Joyce featured.

Patsy in the City—(Eleventh of the Patsy Bolivar Series)—Lubin—March 8.—Patsy arrives in the city on the farmer's wagon and, having some money with him, had no trouble paying his way for a while, but when Bunco Bill and his gang of crooks find the farmer lad, they immediately fleece him. Jane inserts a personal in the paper, asking Patsy to come home and when Patsy answers

Jane persuades Jack and his wife to take her to the city, intending to locate the boy she loves. Discouraged, Patsy is about to commit suicide by leaping into the river when Officer Flinn, a policeman who has been friendly to him, is attacked by Bunco Bill and his crooks and thrown into the water. Patsy saves him and is given a position on the force. Jane falls into the hands of Bill and his co-workers, but is rescued by Patsy and as the picture ends he takes Jane in his arms for the first time.

The Lady of the Cyclamen—Selig—(Two Reels)—March 8.—A dramatic, but rather gloomy two-reel subject which, through the acting of Stella Razeto and Lamar Johnstone, is made a picture which will probably be popular. Maibelle Heikes Justice wrote the scenario and Edward J. LeSaint directed the production. The atmosphere of the artists' colony is splendidly preserved and realism is the keynote throughout. There are many touches of heart interest, which centers the sympathy upon the leads. The plot tells of how David Hoyt, a rich American patron of art and his daughter discover a young artist named Barton. The girl falls in love with Barton and at the salon his portrait is one of the two which receives prizes, the other being one entitled "The Lady of the Cyclamen," painted by an artist named Willard. Miss Hoyt recognizes in the subject of the picture her former schoolmate Ulrica Lord. Barton then tells her of the tragic love affair which existed between Miss Lord and Willard and which came to an end only at the girl's death. As the sympathy of the three are with Willard he is taken to Hoyt's summer home, where continuous brooding over the death of his sweetheart breaks his health and one day his spirit leaves his body and joins that of Miss Lord. C. J. C.

The Jarr Family Discovers Harlem—(First of the Jarr Family Series)—Vitagraph—March 8.—Because of innumerable difficulties experienced during their stay in the two-family house, the Jarrs leave Brooklyn and invade Harlem. They give a house-warming, to which Jarr's boss and an old maid are invited among many others. Comical incidents follow in rapid succession during the party and, when the racket becomes too much for the neighbors to stand, the police are called in. The newspapers carry a story about it the next day and also announces the engagement of Jarr's boss and the old maid.

Aurora Floyd—Biograph—March 9.—James Conyers, a horse trainer, wins the love of his employer's daughter, Aurora, and she elopes with him. When she learns his true nature she returns to her father, Mathew Floyd and he buys Conyers promise to leave the country forever. John Mellish, a wealthy squire, meets Aurora and they fall in love, but she does not encourage him until she learns that her husband is dead. She then marries Mellish. Later Conyers returns, as the report that he was dead was, false and blackmails his wife. A half-wit stable boy determines to take Aurora's life, because of some trifling matter, and follows her. She has just paid Conyers to go away again when the half-wit arrives and the sight of money causes him to kill Conyers and take it. All evidence points to Aurora being guilty of the crime, but eventually Mellish finds the half-wit chuckling over the money and this, together with other evidence proves the girl's innocence. Aurora then finds happiness with her wealthy husband.

Rooney, the Bride—Edison—March 9.—William Wadsworth, Arthur Housman, and Sally Crute are the principal fun-makers in this picture. Artie Boon and Marion Bruce are engaged. Artie notifies his rich uncle that he is going to be married, and receives a wire stating that if his choice meets with uncle's approval he will give him $10,000 for a wedding present. Marion's trousseau is made by Mrs. Rooney who uses her husband as a model. Marion calls for a final fitting on the day of the wedding. Rooney, who is all decked out in the bridal gown, recognizes her as the girl on whom he dumped a hod full of bricks the day before, and makes his escape through the window. Mrs. Rooney and Marion give chase. Artie, in the meantime, gets restless, fearing that his uncle will withdraw his generous offer. He sees Rooney in the gown, bribes him to act as his bride for ten minutes, and presents him to his uncle, who surrenders the check for $10,000. Mrs. Rooney and Marion enter as the ceremoney is being performed and Marion replaces Rooney who is soundly whipped by his enraged better half. C. R. C.

Mr. Buttles—Essanay—(Three Reels)—March 9.—Buttles, a servant of the Earl of Everdun, a man with a title but without money, persuades his lordship to work for a servant syndicate for a salary. The earl is simply to play host and the servants plan to become rich through the tips of the guests. The earl accepts the offer, but forces Huggins, his chauffeur and double to impersonate him while he goes to Paris. Huggins falls in love with an American girl who is among the guests and, for a time, it looks as though Buttles' plan would fall through. By clever scheming, however, he manages to arrange all matters so that the syndicate works undisturbed until the end of the social season. A review appears on page 395 of this issue.

Winning Winsome Winnie—Lubin—March 9.—Sam Burroughs, the entire Jenksville police force, is turned down by Winnie, the queen of the village lunch stand, upon the arrival of Diamond Dan Hicks, a city crook who plans to sell the natives glass diamonds. The wedding day of Hicks and Winnie is set, but the lunch queen walking in her sleep allows Sam to learn that she still loves him. He determines to stop the wedding and gets in touch with the city police. When he has "the goods on" his rival he immediately rushes to the church, places him under arrest and then he takes his place in the wedding procession, all of which pleases Winnie.

The Stage Coach Driver and the Girl—Selig—March 9.—A Tom Mix picture with an exciting fight between the men in charge of a stage coach and an outlaw band. The Western atmosphere is splendidly preserved and thrills are numerous. Goldie Colwell and Louella Maxam have the woman leads. The eastern girl plans to visit her school chum in the West, being anxious to meet her chum's brother whose picture she has received. The brother is a stage coach driver and upon the girl's arrival in the West meets her. The stage coach is also carrying a shipment of money and a band of outlaws hold it up. After an exciting gun battle in which the stage coach driver protects the girl from harm, though he is in danger of losing his life, the outlaws are captured and, though they have only met, the driver and the girl realize they are in love. Wooed by a Wild Man—Vitagraph—March 9.—Chief Fearless saves all the grape juice he can secure in skin pouches and hides it in his cave. Years later when the chief dies his son, Strengthless, is deprived of the throne by Rock Face. Strengthless is in love with Blue Eyes, daughter of Rock Face and when the latter says that the strongest man of the tribe shall marry her, he fears he has lost her forever. He accidentally discovers the grape juice which is in the cave and drinks all of it. The result is that he goes on a spree and tosses all the "strong men" of the tribe about as though they were mere feathers. He not only wins Blue Eyes, but also assumes his father's seat on the throne.

Snatched From a Burning Death—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—March 9.—Le Grande, an old trapper, and Sampson quarrel over hunting grounds and Joan, Le Grande's daughter, settles the affair by her control over Sampson, who fears and admires her. Sampson is in love with a Mexican girl, but plans to marry Joan. Chandler, a man from the East, arrives and entrusts to Le Grande a large sum of money for safekeeping. Joan and Chandler fall in love and Sampson plans to do away with the easterner and secure the money at the same time, by burning the cabin to the ground. The Mexican girl plans to kill Joan and the two evil-doers arrive at the cabin on the same evening. Sampson imprisons the Mexican girl in the cabin, thinking her to be Joan and later, when he has started he fire, he meets Joan and also makes her a prisoner. He, himself, is caught in one of Le Grande's bear traps and all are slowly being burned to death when Le Grande and Chandler arrive. They manage to rescue Joan, but the other pair die in the flames. The death of their two enemies leave Joan and Chandler free to marry.

A Pipe Dream—Edison—March 10.—Meerschaum Bowles, a confirmed bachelor, visits his friend, Mr. Benedict, and becomes so popular with the latter's children that he begins to regret that he has not married. On returning to his apartments Bowles sits down in his easy chair musing on the advantages and disadvantages of being single, and falls asleep. He dreams that he is captured by a woman who has a score of visiting relatives, and in later years is forced to do the housework and mind the children, while his wife goes out shopping or calling on friends. Bowles is delighted, on being awakened by the sun's rays, to find that his marriage was only a nightmare. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Divine Spark That Had a Short Circuit—Essanay—March 10.—An uproarious funny George Ade comedy in which Ruth Stonehouse is the featured player. When Lila, who plays the heroine in an amateur production, gets a boost in the local weekly she turns down Albert, who loves her, and goes to the big city to enter a dramatic school. She leaves with a diploma and then only needs a company, a play, some scenery, a manager and a theater in order to be a hit on Broadway. After many tribulations she is engaged to play the part of a deaf and dumb lady in a No. 4 road company. They hit towns that the Rand-McNally atlas never heard of. When the show goes bump the great actress returns to her Ohio home to exchange her diploma for a marriage license bought by Albert. N. G. C.

Following a Clue — Kalem — (Two Reels)—March 10.—To gain entrance to a band of river crooks the girl detective and her partner, Warrington, stage a pocket picking act in their presence and the girl, disguised as a boy, is made a member of the gang because of her cleverness. The gang take her to a ship, whose cargo they plan to rifle and just as the police are about to trap them they learn of her identity. Most of the gang escape and carry the girl with them to their rendezvous. They tie her to a chair and place a can of dynamite beneath her. The fuse is lit and they leave her to her fate. The police, however, have traced the crooks to their den and led by Warrington they arrive in time to save the girl sleuth from death and the entire band is captured. Ruth Roland featured.

A Siren of Corsica—Lubin—(Three Reels)—March 10.—John Selden, an American visting Nice, carries on a flirtation with Carola de Lisle, a wealthy Corsican woman. Morse, a supposed friend of Selden's, returns to America and tells the latter's wife, Lenore, of his conduct while abroad. She wires Selden to return at once and he does this, telling Carola that he was merely amusing himself with her. Morse is forced to face Seldon and whis wife upon his return to America and Carola, who has followed Selden, fires a bullet at him, intending to kill him, but it strikes Morse, killing him instead. Selden is sentenced to ten years in prison as the murderer of Morse, but by means of a letter which Carola had written to Selden in Nice telling him that she intended to kill him, he is freed and the Corsican woman is punished for the crime.

The Eagle and the Sparrow—Selig—March 10.—Pictures of this kind will always be popular in the majority of houses. It contrasts the difference between a man who is a crook on a big scale and the one who is forced to steal in order to live. The acting of E. J. Brady, Robyn Adair and Eugenie Forde pleases and the photography and settings are adequate. The plot tells how the "Sparrow," driven to desperation because he can get no money to give his sick wife and little boy the necessities of life, enters the home of the "Eagle," who has just returned from making a rich haul. The "Eagle" catches him and when he hears his story, is touched by its tragic note. He supplies the "Sparrow" with money and sends him back to his wife, promising to get him a position the next day. Later, when the "Eagle" sees the "Sparrow," who has gone straight, happy with his wife and son, he too determines to give up the old life. C. J. C.

A Study in Tramps — Vitagraph — March 10. —Pa and Ma Stretch forbid their daughter, Mary, to accept, the attentions of Bobby Scrawn. Ma gives a lecture on tramps before her club, telling how they can be saved and announces that it will be continued at the meeting in her home the following week. The time passes and during her second lecture a tramp pleads for food at the door and is taken in and he tells of his downfall because he was separated from the girl he loved. A moment later a girl tramp arrives and is also led before the audience. The two tramps fly into each others' arms and both request that a minister be called at once. This is done and they are married and at once unmask, disclosing themselves to be Bobby and Mary. Pa and Ma Stretch are forced to admit that the young people are too clever for them and give them their blessing.

His Own Hero—Biograph—March 11. —The boob, a picture patron, arrives too early for the show and when he cannot get in falls asleep on the steps. He dreams that he himself is a hero of the screen, riding the plains, rescuing fair ladies, killing Indians and doing numerous other brave deeds. While he is struggling with a desperado on the edge of a cliff he is aroused by a heavy slap on the shoulder and awakes to learn that the theater is now open. He, however, decides that he has had enough excitement for one evening and returns home. On the same reel is:

Mud and Matrimony — Biograph — March 11.—The bride, her maid, the grom and his best man start for the parsonage in an automobile, but the heavy muds cause them to get into innumerable difficulties and the incidents which follow are real laugh producers. Eventually the heroes manage to drag the women from the auto and carry them through the mire in time for the wedding.

Mustang Pete's Pressing Engagement —Essanay—March 11.—Another of the popular "Snakeville" series in which Victor Potel is featured. Both Mustang Pete and Slippery Slim, who is the village tailor, love Sophie, though her father objects. Mustang makes a date with her outside the tailor shop and while waiting gets his trousers pressed. Later Sophie arrives, but Slim has not finished with the trousers and Mustang cannot appear. For revenge Slim leaves a hot iron on Pete's trousers and escorts Sophie home. Pete secures a pair of Slim's trousers, which are much too tight for him, and eventually manages to escape to his own home. N. G. C.

In the Dragon's Claws—Lubin—(Two Reels)—March 11.—A ball is given by the white colony at Pekin at which Crawford, an American powder king, and his daughter are guests. Wong Fu, a Manchu prince, who, though he poses as a friend of the Americans, is really behind a Boxer uprising. During the ball the Boxers swarm in and the guests are forced to flee for their lives. Grant Gordon, a soldier of fortune, rescues Crawford and Helen and they make their escape. Gordon parts from the Crawfords to return to the fight. Five years later Crawford receives a telegram asking him to attend a mysterious conference about a new Chinese revolution. This he does and goes to Catalina, where he again encounters Wong Fu, who asks his assistance in a royalist rebellion he is planning. Gordon, who is also in Catalina, is employed as a practical fighting man. Wong Fu becomes infatuated with Helen and attempts to capture her but Gordon saves her. A fight takes place on the top of the cliff between the Chinaman and the adventurer, in which the former is killed. Gordon then asks Helen to become his wife.

The Black Wallet—Vitagraph—March 11.—Ford and Strong, rival ranch owners, both attempt to buy a valuable water right and Ford, whose daughter, Mabel, is ill and unable to ride fast, sends his foreman, Stuart, ahead. Strong secures the right, but is killed by Stuart and the papers taken from him and given to Ford, Stuart keeping the money to pay his gambling debts. Hal, Strong's son, swears vengeance on his father's murderer. Later he meets Mabel and falls in love with her. Stuart steals money from Strong and then blames Hal for it and rides out to kill him before Ford or Mabel can protest. He finds Hal on the edge of a cliff and in the struggle which follows Hal is thrown over. Mabel, by a heroic act, rescues him and Stuart is found to be not only guilty of the theft, but also the murderer of Hal's father and is punished for his misdeeds.

Where Enmity Dies — Biograph — March 12.—Tom King and Benson are enemies and rivals for the hand of Grace, the daughter of the foreman of the construction camp. Tom is a great friend of Bill Thorpe. Thorpe is sent on a trip to the settlement and Benson takes his place at work and is wounded by an explosion which occurs. His face is entirely wrapped in bandages, when Tom arrives at the scene of the accident and, believing him to be Thorpe he offers to take Benson to the doctor in a distant town. Tom sets out in a wagon with Benson and, when in the desert he learns his mistake a battle takes place within him in which his evil desires are conquered and when Thorpe and Grace, who have feared that Tom's discovery of his mistake would result seriously, arrive in town they find that Tom has all but given up his life to save that of his enemy and that ill feeling no longer exists between the men.

On the Stroke of Twelve—Edison—(Three Reels)—March 12—Irene Bromley's guardian, Sydney Villon, a lawyer, wishes her to marry him and, on her refusal, threatens to reduce her to poverty. Arthur Colby, another admirer, calls that night by previous appointment with Irene and overhears Villon's threat. He ejects the lawyer from the room. Colby proposes to Irene. She accepts, and they plan for the future until the clock strikes twelve. Still angry about Villon's attitude towards Irene, Colby goes to the lawyer's apartment to chastise him. The next morning he is found lying stunned beside Villon's dead body, and is arrested for the crime. The hands of the dead man's watch, which was struck by the fatal bullet, point to twelve o'clock. When Irene learns this she realizes that Colby is innocent, and determines to find the real murderer. Her efforts are successful, and she vindicates her fiance. Reviewed on page 361 of the March 6 issue.

Later he learns she is engaged to George Vandeveer, a young millionaire, and so the poet takes his aching heart away with him to the woods, where he writes a novel in which he reveals his love for Meta. Later the manuscript, together with the typewritten copy of the novel is lost, and George who fears his rival, so arranges things that new copies cannot be made. Eventually, however, the poet regains his original manuscript, George's treachery is exposed, and the poet is free to marry his wood nymph. See review on page 357, issue of March 6, in which the release date was given as March 19. During the past week it has been changed.

Desperate Dud, the Plumber—Kalem—March 12.—Philander and Dud both love Lizzie, and this leads to a fight in which paint is used freely. Lizzie gets the worst of it and hurries home to clean up, but finds that the water has been shut off and sends for a plumber. Handsome Dick answers the call, but makes such a mess of things that Dud, who arrives in the midst of the mix-up, decides to take things in his own hands and easily fixes the water pipe. Dick, however, decides to prove his skill and experiments with one of the faucets with the result that it breaks. The stream of water hurls him to the ceiling and pins him there, while Dud and Lizzie continue their spooning.

The Winthrop Diamonds—Lubin—March 12.—John Winthrop, his wife and daughter are social climbers, while his son, Dick, is of an opposite nature. To add social prestige to her household Mrs. Winthrop invites Countess Dacre to visit her. Marjorie Moore is employed by Mrs. Winthrop as her social secretary and Dick falls in love with her. A ball is given, at which Mrs. Winthrop's diamonds are stolen and circumstantial evidence strongly points to Marjorie's guilt. Dick himself fears that she is the one who stole the jewels. The next night he cannot sleep, because of the anxiety his suspicions have caused him and goes down to the library, where he sees a woman, though Dick wishes to warn her who has been hired, pounces upon the woman, though Dick wishes to wran her and let her escape as he believes it is Marjorie. The woman, however, proves to be the countess and upon her arrest Dick announces his intention of marrying Marjorie and this time his family do not object.

And Then It Happened—Selig—March 12.—A farce comedy featuring John Lancaster and Lee Morris. The incidents are many and humorous, perhaps the most noticeable bit of by-play being the constant appearance of the cuckoo bird, who jumps out of the clock every time anything of importance happens. Like most farce comedies this picture depends upon its incidental action rather than its plot for success. The outline of the story is very simple. It deals with the purchase of a restaurant by Lee and John and their attempt to make a living by operating it. A gang of rough-neck workmen bother them considerably by smashing up everything in the place and finally they punch a great many sales in the cash register, this enabling them to sell the place back to its original owner at a large profit. C. J. C.

Cupid's Column—Vitagraph — March 12.—The old maid, who has conducted "Cupid's Column" in the daily paper, resigns and a young reporter succeeds her. He celebrates the promotion with his friends on so many evenings that his wife begins to get discouraged and, not knowing just exactly what work her husband is doing, writes in to "Cupid's Column" for advice. The reporter takes advantage of his position and tells his wife to give her husband every attention possible. This works fine for awhile, but when she finds out that it is he who is giving her advice, she writes in and says that she believes that by giving her love to another man she would make no mistake. The reporter suggests a personal interview with the "other" man and this is agreed upon. The wife, masked as a man, and the reporter, masked as an old maid, meet and, after many amusing complications, discover each other's identity and after she has given him a thorough tongue thrashing he agrees to be more considerate of her in the future.

The Bandit and the Baby—Biograph—March 13.—Tom Gordon, a bandit fleeing from a pursuing posse, enters a cabin and meets a woman who years before he had loved, but who had married the sheriff of the posse who are now pursuing him in preference to himself. Her baby is dead and her mind is affected by its loss. As he can do nothing for her, Tom again flees. In the desert he finds a little baby amid the ruins of a wagon train, which had been attacked by Indians. He takes the little child back to the cabin, places it by the woman's side and takes the dead baby away. The delay results in the sheriff capturing him, but when the officer of the law learns of the danger he took in order to bring happiness to the woman he formerly loved he bids him go, as he feels that it is a case in which the law should play no part.

The Family Bible—Edison—March 13.—Henry Gersen, a widower, loses his fortune in a business deal, and, refusing

Mrs. Colby's offer of money with which to start over again, goes West and obtains a position in the office of Jason Flint. Years afterwards Bruce Colby, the widow's son, buys an interest in Flint's firm and goes West. He falls in love with Gersen's daughter, Alice, and wants to marry her, but his mother objects because of the difference in their stations. Gersen enters the office one day to find Flint looting the safe. In the struggle that follows Flint is killed. Bruce is accused of the crime, but, at the last moment, is proven innocent. Gersen is struck by an automobile, and dies from his injuries. While visiting Alice, Mrs. Colby discovers an old Bible that she presented to Gersen years before. When she learns that Alice is the daughter of the man she loved Mrs. Colby gladly consents to her marriage to Bruce.

The Night Operator at Buxton—Kalem—March 13.—Knowing of the illness of the express messenger's child, Helen volunteers to take his place for the run and leaves on the train which a band of outlaws have marked for a holdup. One of the band, disgruntled at the treatment he has received from the others, betrays them to the express messenger. The messenger dashes after the train in an automobile and Helen, discovering one of the gang in the car, holds him at bay by seizing a keg which she says contains dynamite and threatening to blow up the car. After an exciting chase the auto overtakes the train at Dark Hollow station and, when the crook attempts to escape from the express car, he is captured. The other members are easily made prisoners by a posse.

Mazie Puts One Over—Lubin—March 13.—John Van Zant marries Mazie, a chorus girl, but his father drives him from home. Father, however, is more or less of a sport himself and when he sees Mazie on the stage becomes infatuated with her, without recognizing her. John is "tipped off" by Mazie and he tells his mother of his father's adventures. She announces her intention of taking the life of the woman who has won her husband's affections and John is forced to make a mad dash to arrive at the cafe in time to quiet the family trouble.

Come 'Round and Take That Elephant Away—Selig—March 13.—An elephant is the chief actor in this production, which deals with the troubles of a western mine owner, who buys the beast from a troop of stranded vaudeville artists. The elephant, who is named "Pills," immediately sets out to see how much damage he can do and his actions will draw many laughs. The limit is reached when he picks up a basket containing dynamite sticks with his trunk and insists on following his owner and his owner's friends about carelessly swinging the basket to and fro. At last he drops it on the ground and the immense explosion, which occurs uncovers a gold vein. Though it was the owner's intention to do away with "Pills," this last act redeems him and his owner orders him to be fed on cream puffs.

The Radium Thieves — Vitagraph—(Three Reels)—March 13.—Dr. Samuel Rayner, superintendent of a cancer hospital, leaves for Europe to secure a shipment of radium, taking Betty Weston, a nurse with him to dress the radium burns on his hands. His principal object in taking Betty, though, is to break up the love affair between his son, Robert and her. A band of crooks learn of the amount of radium he is to secure and, after he has purchased it in Berlin, they attempt to secure it but through Betty's bravery the plan is foiled. On shipboard, however, the crooks secure the radium but, being careless with it, one of them loses his sight. Betty secures the precious mineral again and all is well until they land in New York, where Dr. Rayner and the nurse are kidnapped. Hoping to restore their pal's sight, the crooks call on a specialist who proves to be Robert, the son of their prisoner. Robert attempts to effect the rescue of the girl he loves and his father, and a terrific fight takes place between Robert and the crooks. Betty is instrumental in saving Robert's life and causing the arrest of the gang; Dr. Rayner at last agrees to his son marrying her.

Mutual Program

Checked Through—Royal—March 6.—Kitty, an actress stranded in a small town, receives a wire urging her to come home for her sister's wedding. She gets into her trunk, and bribes the porter to take it to the station. The bridegroom is leaving from the same station, and has a trunk like Kitty's. She changes the tags on the trunks, and is shipped home. The ceremony takes place, and Kitty, from her hiding place, plays innumerable pranks on the unhappy couple, almost alienating their affections—until she is discovered.

The Green Idol — Reliance — (Two Reels)—March 6.—Dorothy Blake becomes fascinated with Ahmed Akbar, the founder of a new cult, and buys from him an idol which, she later discovers, is a fake. Angered, she demands the return of her money. The Hindoo, knowing that the police are on his trail, places Dorothy under the influence of an Indian narcotic, and prepares to leave the country. Bowden, Dorothy's fiance, chances to learn of it, and confronts the rogue just as he and his servants are about to leave with the unconscious girl. He is overpowered and bound. The police arrive shortly afterward, and the Orientals are forced to make a hasty exit. The doctor, who is called in to resuscitate Dorothy, tells Bowden that only the Hindoo will know the antidote for the narcotic. He joins the police in the hunt. The Hindoo's automobile plunges down a steep embankment, seriously injuring Akbar. Bowden rushes him back barely in time to produce the antidote before he dies.

ley's watch, and takes it to a jeweler to be repaired. The boss misses his watch and some of the cigarettes, and tips off the police. Bill slips his remaining cigarettes into Ethel's purse. Later her fellow is found with monogrammed cigarettes on his person and is arrested on suspicion. The stenographer is taken as his accomplice. Bill gives a smoker to his young pals. Mr. Hadley happens in on it, and the mystery of the cigarettes and watch is explained.

Minerva's Mission — Majestic — (Two Reels) — March 7.—Minerva, fresh from college, starts in to reform society. She tries to persuade Mr. Grant, who has charge of her fortune, to give up smoking, and then attempts to break a laboring man of the habit of drinking beer with his lunch. Her next work is trying to educate the laborer's family. The workman misconstrues her interest, and makes advances to her. Failing in this, he resorts to force. Minerva gets word to Mr. Grant in time for him to come with the police to her rescue.

The Truth of Fiction—American—(Two Reels)—March 8.—The woman novelist visits a western ranch owned by a friend and is attracted by one of the cowboys. He neglects his sweetheart and the girl, in turn, agrees to elope with another cowboy, who has been making love to her for some time. The man with whom the girl is to elope is arrested for wife desertion before they leave, however, and the novelist, realizing she is keeping the lovers apart, returns to the city. There she writes a book about what has happened and when the lovers read this they understand her hidden meaning and are reconciled. A review appears on page 399 of this issue. C. J. C.

The Hen's Duckling — Reliance — March 8.—Vivienne, the little daughter of Philip Charleroi, the district attorney, is neglected by her busy father and her mother, a society leader. She makes a friend and confidante of Marcelle, her mother's maid, and learns that the girl's uncle is out of work and that his wife is lying sick in bed. Vivienne takes it on herself to relieve their wants, and does so with her mother's money. The loss is discovered, detectives employed, and Marcelle and her uncle, arrested for the theft. Vivienne throws herself on her father's mercy and confesses. To her great surprise he is gentle and forgiving instead of angry. The incident awakens Vivienne's parents to their duty towards their child, and the family is drawn together by a new bond of love.

The Doctor's Strategy — Beauty — March 9.—A humorous picture in which Irving Cummings, Joe Harris, Virginia Kirtley and Fred Gamble are the chief fun-makers. The comedy element is well handled and the acting is excellently suited for the vehicle with which the players have been supplied. Lucy's father objects to Jack as a suitor and Dr. Clow, Jack's friend, suggests a plan by which father's objections may be overcome. With the assistance of numerous friends and acquaintances of Lucy's father, Jack manages to force the old man into believing that he is very ill and when Dr. Clow is consulted he says that he is suffering from alopecia, an incurable disease. Later, however, the doctor suggests that he send for Jack, as he has a secret cure for the disease. Jack is sent for, but refuses to disclose his cure until father agrees to his marrying Lucy. He then gives father a drink and tells him that he is all right and that the incurable disease is nothing more than dandruff. Father proves a sport, however, by not throwing Jack from the house. C. J. C.

A Temperance Lesson — Majestic — March 9.—John Hammond, a wealthy old gentleman but recently married, receives two bottles from an old friend. Opening one of them he finds it to contain a very choice liquor. As the other bottle is identical in size and wrapper he does not open it. While Hammond is at the office the servants drink the contents of the opened bottle. To save the other he places it in the safe in the office. His young bride becomes ill, and the doctor prescribes a dose of this choice brand of wine. Hammond hurries to the office for the bottle, is mistaken for a thief and is chased by the night watchman. Arriving at home he finds that his wife has recovered. He then explains his conduct to the officer who has followed him, and presents him with the prized bottle. Outside, the policeman and his friends unwrap it and find—a bottle of grape juice.

The Final Reckoning—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—March 9.—Florence Granger's father, Judge Granger, incurs the enmity of Pietro, and when the judge is found mysteriously murdered, the foreigner is arrested on suspicion. Nothing being proved against him, the Italian is released. Florence, the police captain's fiancee, is so chagrined at his failure to discover her father's slayer that she breaks her engagement with him, and, disguised as an Italian girl, does some sleuthing herself. She is discovered by Pietro and his band, and captured. The shack in which she is imprisoned gets afire, and Florence is rescued by Captain Ross. The following day Ross traps the Italian at the top of an aqueduct, and during the fight which ensues, Pietro makes a mis-step, and plunges to his death one hundred and seventy-five feet below.

The Echo—American—March 10.—This single-reel picture contains a delightful little love story and tells of a young man and a young woman who, when they were children, used to follow their echo in an attempt to find it and who, later, are again thrown together, and recalling their childhood follow the echo once more. The girl is a native of the city and her rich father wishes her to marry a count, but she clings to the young man whom she really loves and her father disowns her. The country life and happiness with her true lover more than makes up for her lost home, however. David Lythgol, Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich and Harry Von Meter have the leading roles and the acting of all is pleasing. The scenic effects and photography also add much to the film. C. J. C.

The Wells of Paradise — Broncho — (Two Reels)—March 10.—The widow Dolan and her son, Tom, trade their homestead for some California land, upon the advice of John Marley, and later find it to be barren ground. Luckily, oil is found upon the grounds and they become rich. In revenge, the widow Dolan dams up the creek, and Marley's cattle on the adjoining section die of thirst. There is a desperate fight between the two factions, and Tom Dolan is injured. Alice Marley, returning home from boarding school, rescues Tom, and they fall in love. In spite of the old folks' opposition they become married. Some years pass. Tom, Jr., is beloved by the grandparents, and through this bond of affection a general reconciliation is brought about.

The Lucky Transfer — Reliance — March 10.—Ford and Ranson, two crooks, rob a store, and among the loot is a quantity of stamped envelopes with the name of the firm printed thereon. Helen, of the Herald, tries to ferret out the robbery, but is unsuccessful. Short of envelopes one day, Ford uses one of the stolen ones, first scratching out the firm's name on it. Helen accidentally bumps into the little girl whom Ford asks to take the letter to a mailbox. In picking up the envelope for her she sees the crossed-out name, and follows the girl back to the crooks' rendezvous. She is captured by them and securely bound. Ford goes downtown to meet his pal, and on the car they plan their getaway. Ford diagrams it on a transfer. In getting off of the car he drops the transfer, and Jim Dodson, a poor workman, who is in the habit of begging transfers on which to ride home at night, picks it up and jumps on the car. The conductor shows the transfer to Field, a detective, and the latter raids the crooks' den and rescues Helen.

Satan McAllister's Heir — Domino — (Two Reels)—March 11.—Satan McAllister, a wealthy ranchman, objects to Bob Ellis' taking up a claim next to his, and orders him to move. Ellis refuses, and McAllister, while theatening them, is confronted by Bob's little girl, Dolly. It is the first time that the bully has ever met anyone with courage enough to denounce him, and he takes a liking to her. A dry spell falls over the section and Bob and his wife go out in search of their cattle, which have wandered away, crazed by thirst. During their absence Dolly becomes lost. McAllister joins in the search, and finds the child. On the way back they are attacked by a small band of Indians. The ranchman sacrifices his chances for the girl, and remains behind to fight the Indians while she, tied on the saddle, rides home. The rescuing party finds McAllister dead. On the wall, traced in rough characters, is his will, in which he leaves everything to Dolly, his friend.

The Girl Who Might Have Been—Kay-Bee—March 12.—Daisy Wellington loses her health and her position as a dance-hall girl. George Fowler, a prospector, gives her a chance to recover by taking her west. Fowler's aim is to collect enough money to send for his wife. He finally succeeds, but the stage carrying the money is robbed. Daisy, recovered in health, returns to the dance halls, where she earns the required sum and sends it to Fowler's wife. On her arrival, Fowler is overjoyed and both he and his wife insist that Daisy make her home with them. But Daisy's liking for Fowler has grown into love and, realizing it would not be possible for her to stay, she slips away and the Fowlers do no know of her going until too late.

Universal Program

Wheels Within Wheels—Big U—March 2.—As Von Ludwig, a spy, enters the darkened library in his house, a man who has been searching the room by the light of a bulls-eye, grasps a chair, breaks the glass in the window, and then hides behind the curtains. The broken window leads Von Ludwig to believe that the thief has escaped. Vere de Lancy, another spy, calls and the two talk over their scheme for obtaining the plans. The man behind the curtains knocks over a pedestal, and a second later is gazing into the muzzle of a revolver in the spy's hands. They promise him his life if he will secure the plans from Hartzburg. He consents, and is successful. The stranger then reveals himself as Matthews of the Secret Service. Matthews has the spies taken into custody until he secures all of the papers and plans, and then, with an elaborate bow, bids them adieu. Vere, amazed, turns to Hartzburg and he informs her that Matthews is none other than the feared Ravall, the French spy.

Animated Weekly No. 156—Universal —March 3.—Jitney buses make their appearance in New York City; President Wilson pressing the button which opened the Panama-Pacific Exposition; arrival of a pack burrow in San Francisco after making the trip in 105 days; Caruso leaves for his native land; scenes of the Mardi Gras, New Orleans, La.; last maneuvers of the Canadian troops before leaving Canada for Europe; ships leaving for war zone have names painted in huge letters to avoid being torpedoed; panoramic view of Berlin shows few signs of war; numerous views of troops leaving for the front and of others on the firing line; cartoons by Hy. Mayer.

The Destroyer—Imp—March 8.—Willard Foster, a prominent clubman, meets unsophisticated Dorothy Trask in the country, secures her confidence, and then betrays her. To hide her shame Dorothy runs away to the city. Edgar Trask, Dorothy's brother, is a successful business man in the city. His wife, Helen, a thoughtless butterfly, devotes her time to society. One day she meets Foster, and they are attracted to each other. Mrs. Trask notifies Edgar of Dorothy's disappearance and the cause, and he employs a detective to find the girl. Returning home one day he finds Foster in his home. A wordy battle ensues. Trask receives a note from his detective telling him that he has located Dorothy. Mrs. Trask finds the note and, thinking that her husband is infatuated with some other woman, flies into a rage of jealousy. Foster calls at this time, and has little trouble in inducing her to elope with him. While she is packing her bag, Trask enters accompanied by Dorothy. She recognizes Foster as the man who betrayed her, and a desperate fight follows between him and Trask. Ashamed of her past conduct, Mrs. Trask unpacks her bag and joins her husband and his sister in the beautiful scene of reconciliation which closes the picture. Violet Merserau and William Garwood featured.

School Days—Joker—March 8.—The sprightly widow and her daughter, Betty, are boarders on the old farm. The schoolmaster loses his heart to the widow, but she spurns him. Betty and Tom, a dapper city chap, fall in love, but their path is anything but an easy one, as the widow has fallen in love with Tom herself. She dresses Betty up like a ten-year-old and sends her off to the village school. Tom, learning of it, puts on boy's clothes and attends school. On arriving at the school the widow finds the pupils playing outlandish pranks on the school-master. Trained bears belonging to an old Italian wander into the school-room, putting the pupils to flight. Tom and Betty meet a parson who consents to marry them. The widow discovers them from the school house window, and faints into the school-master's arms. His proposal is accepted.

The Unhidden Treasure — Victor — (Two Reels)—March 8.—Thomas Bacon and Jefferson Ingle try to arrange a match between their children, but the young people will not agree to marrying some one whom they have never seen. The men resort to a clever ruse to bring them together, and it succeeds wonderfully. Phylis Bacon is informed that her guardian has been drowned, though the body is not recovered, and that the will states that the fortune left her is hidden somewhere on the "Bacon Cables" homestead. She gathers up a few effects, and leaves to hunt the treasure. In the meantime Billie Ingle, whose father has also been reported drowned, finds among his father's effects a will almost identical to the one left by Bacon. He, too, sets out for "Bacon Cables" to find the fortune. Their mutual interests bring Phylis and young Ingle together, and the happiness of their love is climaxed in the end by the "resurrection" of Thomas Bacon and Jefferson Ingle. Mary Fuller featured.

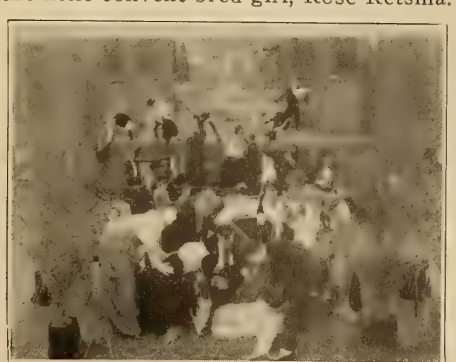
Her Adopted Mother—Big U—March 9.—Characters taken from life and convincingly portrayed are seen in this appealing drama. Edna Maison plays the principal part, and her pleasing personality and versatility contribute greatly to the success of the excellent theme.

The Phantom of the Violin—Gold Seal — (Three Reels) — March 9. — Ellis Zehring, the violinist, through the magic of his marvelous music wins the love of the little convent-bred girl, Rose Retsina.



After their marriage he continues his work as orchestra leader which leaves her alone throughout the long evenings. It is at this time that she is approached by her husband's best friend and told of the gay life she is missing. She becomes infatuated with him, and accepts his attentions. Her husband arranges for her appearance on the stage, he having trained her until she has become a wonderful artist on the violin. After the performance the husband enters his wife's dressing room and finds her in the arms of his treacherous friend. Rose returns home. Shortly afterwards her husband arrives, but his mind has been turned and he is a raving maniac. Francis Ford and Grace Cunard featured.

Valor's Reward—Eclair—(Two Reels) —March 10.—Dolly Grey, an heiress, is saved from injury one day by a handsome young mounted policeman, Hurley. She invites him to a lawn party, and her ill-concealed affection for him angers Kley, an ardent suitor for her hand, and Miss Pierce, her guardian, who also admires Hurley. Kley and Miss Pierce scheme to abduct Dolly, and succeed. But Hurley learns of it, and rescues her at great risk to himself. Meanwhile Kley and the guardian have been drinking heavily. They drive off in an automobile to visit Dolly. On the road they meet and almost collide with the machine in which the girl and her hero are riding. In swerving out of the way Kley's machine goes over the embankment, and Hurley later finds the bodies under the overturned machine.

Easy Money—L-Ko—March 10.—The man, disporting himself about the lobby and ball room of a fashionable hotel, attempts to charm a beautiful woman, but does not, in the course of their conversation, ascertain whether or not she has a husband. Accordingly when the woman loans him a pair of trousers he gets in wrong with her husband, and is divested of them right in the ball room. In trying to escape he unintentionally gets into the husband's bedroom, and seeks safety in the disappearing bed. But the enraged husband discovers him, and then begins a merry chase.

The Truth About Dan Deering—Big U—(Two Reels)—March 11.—Roger Lee falls in with a decoy while on his way West to work a mining claim left him in his father's will, and is lured by him to "The Miner's Rest," a gambling house run by Dan Deering. The gambler has long been suspected of being crooked, but no one has been able to prove their assertions. As a last resort the sheriff offers a reward of $500 to the person who can prove Deering to be a cheat. Roger, fleeced of his money, attempts to shoot Deering, and the latter, to save himself, is forced to kill him. Mary Lee becomes anxious at not hearing from her brother, and goes West in search of him. She, too, stops at "The Miner's Rest," and meets Deering. The latter wins her admiration by saving her from "Poker" Brown and his gang who attempt to rob her. Brown threatens to tell Mary all about Roger's death unless Deering pays him for his silence. The gambler complies, and then leaves, telling Mary in a note that he is going on an extended trip. Believing that Roger has been killed accidentally, she leaves for home on the next stage. Later Deering is found lying across Roger's grave, dead. Murdock MacQuarrie and Agnes Vernon featured.

Six or Nine—Rex—March 11.—The evidence secured against Jack Darcy was considered conclusive. A shot had been heard in room 310 in the Hotel Magnificent and a few moments later Darcy had been captured at the foot of the fire escape. The occupant of the room, Henry Grayson, a wealthy Westerner, was found lying dead in his bed. His daughter who occupied another room in the same suite broke down on learning of the murder and the police had no chance to question her. The commissioner of police who was intimately acquainted with Grayson and engaged to his daughter, takes a personal interest in the affair, and, after some clever detective work, proves to the satisfaction of all that the case is not one that the law could take cognizance of. The starting point was a card carried by Darcy with the figure 6 printed on it. Turned the other way, the figure looked like a 9. Did it mean six or nine? When this was established the rest was easy for the young commissioner of police.

The Knockout Wallop — Sterling — March 11.—Louie, the candy puller, gets into an argument with his helper, and the affair gets so serious that they decide to settle it in a prize-ring. Each goes through an ordeal of training before the fight. On the night of the battle Louie bests his opponent until one of the latter's seconds injects some tobasco sauce into the helper's arm. He is unmanageable after that and, after cleaning out the room, rushes out and pushes down several buildings, finally being buried in the ruins of one of them.

The Five Pound Note—Imp—(Two Reels) — March 12. — Avon Ledgard makes a bet with a fellow clubman that he can earn five pounds in ten days, and sets out as a costermonger to do it. He meets Nell Faddon, the pretty daughter of "Jock" Faddon, another costermonger, and is attracted to her. Haggard, a brutal sailor on the "Nancy Day," falls in love with Nell, and determines that she will accompany him on his next voyage. Ledgard's friends visit him at his stand, and begin to have some fun with him. Faddon comes to his rescue, and later takes him to his home to live. There Nell and Ledgard continue their friendship. Haggard succeeds in making prisoners of Nell, her father and Ledgard but shortly before the ship sails they escape. Ledgard makes his way to his club, and admits defeat, but boasts of winning something of far greater value than the wager. Dressed in fashionable attire he returns to look for his donkey. Nell is dumfounded at meeting such a "fine gentleman," but Ledgard seizes her in his arms and kisses her. He establishes old "Jock" in a good business, and later educates Nell to his high station in life. King Baggot featured.

His Wife's Husband—Nestor—March 12.—Jack and Billie are secretly married and start housekeeping. Word is received from Jack's parents that they are coming for a visit and bringing with them the girl that Jack is to marry. He persuades his college chum to pose as his wife's husband. Many amusing complications follow. The college chum secretly weds the girl whom Jack's parents have brought with them. The dilemma is finally straightened out and the two married couples receive Jack's parents' blessing.

A Romance of the Backwoods—Victor —March 12.—Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby, and Brinsley Shaw featured. Rosemary, a city girl, in wandering through the woods meets Harry, a hunter, and flirts with him to the great displeasure of Shaw, her companion, who is in love with her. Later Harry overhears the girl assuring Shaw that he need have no fears of her falling in love with a rough-looking, unshaven individual like Harry. She says she was only having a little fun with "the poor jay." As a matter of fact, Harry is a wealthy sportsman from New York. The next day when Rosemary visits him in his cabin she finds him clean-shaven and dressed in the latest style, but embarrassingly reserved in his manner. Shaw, in a jealous rage, starts to strangle Rosemary. Harry hears the struggle, and saves her. On returning to his cabin the hunter finds a note asking him to return home. Rosemary accompanies him.

Diana of Eagle Mountain—Bison—(Two Reels)—March 13.—Cleo Madison and Joe King featured. By saving Moran's life Doc Goring wins the gratitude and love of his daughter, Kate, and later marries her. They take up residence at the doctor's home in the city, and for a time Kate is charmed by the novelty of society life, but tires of it in time and longs to be back home in the Kentucky mountains. The barn dances, the helter-skelter rides, and the frequent brushes with the revenue officers all take on a new and joyous aspect now. One night, as though in answer to her musings, her old lover, Bill Driver, appears in the garden, and she promises to return with him to her old home. Goring overhears her, and is overcome by the knowledge that his wife has tired of him. Kate arrives home in time to ease her father's last hours. Goring follows to Kentucky, and at first is overcome with rage on finding Kate and Driver together. When he learns that her father is dead a reconciliation takes place over the old man's grave.

Shultz's Lady Friend—Joker—March 13.—Shultz invests in a barber shop in Cow Flat, but owing to the fact that the citizens grow long whiskers and long hair, business is very dull. In despair he attempts to commit suicide, but is prevented by Gail, the leading lady in "The Dancing Girl" company. The manager of the troupe elopes with the money and Gail is left without a cent. Shultz sees the advantage of having the pretty and popular leading lady for manicurist, and she readily consents to going into partnership with him. A couple of French barbers happen into town, see the enormous trade of Shultz, and buy the shop for five thousand dollars. Shultz and Gail leave town with the money, and trade again goes back to nil in the barber shop.

The Fate of Persistent Pete—Powers—March 13.—Count Peterhof is attracted to Daisy, Duke Delinquent's daughter, on board ship, and takes every opportunity to show his great love for her. Nothing daunts him. He cleans the deck beneath her feet, dives overboard for her handkerchief, and follows her around like a pet poodle. The duke does not like the count, and shows him so when they reach San Francisco by throwing him off of the running board of his car. The count meets his Waterloo at the Sutro Baths. He kisses everybody in sight, and finally is forced to flee for his life. Daisy enjoys the first good laugh she has had in months, and even the duke appreciates the humor of the situation. Marie Walcamp and Rex De Roselli featured.

Martin Lowe, Financier—Laemmle—March 14.—Mother Benson tries to raise $2,000 for her son-in-law, and appeals to old Martin Lowe, a bachelor. Lowe has but $500, but, seeing a get-quick-rich ad in the paper, he mails the money to Elder, a Wall Street broker, requesting that he turn it into $2,000 within a month if possible. Elder has landed another victim. It happens that the broker's daughter while out joy-riding meets with an accident on the country road, and is carried into old Martin Lowe's house. He and Mother Benson summon a doctor, and nurse the girl until his arrival. Elder arrives on the scene and presents his card to Lowe. He recognizes the name, and shows the other the worthless bonds which he has just received from him. The realization that he was about to swindle the man who saved his daughter's life shames Elder, and he takes the bonds back to the city with him, sending Lowe a check for $2,000 for them the next day. Mother Benson is unrestrained in her praise of old Martin's financial prowess.

Outside the Gates—Rex—(Two Reels)—March 14.—Pauline Bush featured. Sister Ursula is a novice in a convent in southern Spain. Being sent to open the door to Perez, a pedler who comes with materials for the new altar cloth the nuns are embroidering, she sees Manuel, a young cavalier, ride by, and is struck by his youth, beauty, and air of romance. She struggles against the longing to be out in the world and to wear nice clothes, but the temptation remains with her. She indulges in her vanity by wrapping the beautiful, newly purchased altar cloth about her like a gown, and is surprised and pleased to see how well it becomes her. Regret overtakes her and she confesses her act to the Abbess who tells her to kneel in vigil before the altar all night. She falls asleep, and dreams of wild, romantic pranks and chivalrous deeds in which Manuel figures strongly. While tormented with a vision of herself scorned by all as a renegade nun, she awakens to find the Abbess shaking her. She clings to her in relief, and together they kneel before the altar in prayer.

Feature Programs

Fox

A Celebrated Scandal — Fox — (Five Reels)—Betty Nanson here appears in her first "Made in America" picture and proves herself able to duplicate her world renowned performances on the other side of the big pond. As the story opens we see Don Julian living in Spain. The don is about to be made Ambassador to England, but after he has consented to accept the appointment, the son of an old friend appeals to him for help, and is invited to make his home with Don Julian. Elverez, who secretly dislikes the young man, spreads the story that Ernesto and Don Julian's wife are carrying on a disgraceful flirtation unknown to the husband. At last things reach such a state that Ernesto challenges Elverez and a duel is arranged for. Don Julian takes things into his own hands and in the combat is mortally wounded. Ernesto avenges himself in a like manner and after suffering the insults of Don Julian, who is in a delirious state, he and Donna Fedora receive the dying man's apologies. Miss Nanson is seen as Donna Fedora, while Don Julian is played by Edward Jose. The rest of the cast is well chosen and thoroughly adequate.

Paramount

The Country Boy — Lasky — (Five Reels).—A successful stage version of the Broadway production brought into pictures with Marshall Neilan in the leading role. In films the country boy proves as likeable a fellow as he did on the stage, and is seen going to the city to accept a position, as a clerk in an office. Though he leaves a girl behind him in the country, he falls in love with a chorus girl after his arrival in the city, neglects his work and is discharged. Two fellow boarders with whom he is friendly, win a small fortune at roulette, and accompanied by his two friends, one a newspaper man and the other a ticket speculator, the country boy returns to his home town and launches a newspaper. The boarding house scenes, those dealing with the romance with the chorus girl and the cafe scene are remarkably true to life and splendidly enacted.

Sunshine Molly—Bosworth—A story of the oil fields which is splendidly photographed and unique in many respects. The story opens with the arrival of Molly in the oil town, and we see her securing a job at the boarding house of Mrs. O'Brien, where she shares her drudgery with Patsy, the daughter. "Bull" Forrest attempts to become familiar with her, and when Molly breaks a plate over his head he leaves in a rage. "Bull" attempts afterwards to avoid Molly, but she calls on him to help "Old Pete," who is near death and ere Pete dies, he makes a will leaving Molly all his land. Pat O'Brien, father of Patsy suddenly becomes rich when his well is found to be a gusher, and with his wife and daughter sets out for town and tries to enter society. The husband spoils a reception given in Patsy's honor when he brings in a party of his rough friends, and later all return to the oil fields. When a city chap speaks slurringly of Molly, who has been one of the party, Bull resents the insults and after licking the city chap, the latter retaliates by setting the oil wells afire. Bull sets out to capture him, but is knocked unconscious when one of the oil derricks fall. Later Molly overrules his objections and becomes his nurse. The result is, of course, a match between the two.

Caprices of Kitty—Bosworth—(Five Reels)—Those who have seen Elsie Janis in "The Hoyden" will find she has written much the same sort of a part for herself in this Bosworth picture in which she stars. As Kitty, she goes out in a high powered machine one day and meets a handsome stranger, who helps her repair a puncture. Later she assures her chaperon that she and the man are engaged and her guardian is satisfied, for he knows the man to be a successful artist. A clause in her father's will, however, stipulates that on becoming engaged, Kitty must not see her sweetheart for six months. During this period she pays her lover many stolen visits and eventually is discovered by the guardian, who informs her that the clause in the will was really to test her true love, which would disregard the value of the money left in the will, as compared with her lover's company. Besides Miss Janis, such players as Courtenay Foote and Herbert Standing are seen in the production.

A Gentleman of Leisure — Lasky — (Five Reels)—Many laughable situations serve to make this comedy in which Wallace Eddinger, supported by Carol Hollaway, is featured, a really enjoyable one. Eddinger appears as Robert Edgar Willoughby Pitt, who arrives at the dock too late to secure a first class stateroom and is herded in with the emigrants. There he meets pretty Mary Creedon, daughter of the chief of police, though he fails to learn her name. On arriving home Pitt visits his club and bets his fellow club members the cost of a dinner that he can successfully rob a house within a week. His meeting with a crook who has just given some hush money to the chief of police, and is even then on his way to rob the home of that officer, is but one of the comedy situations that follow, and the action all the way through the picture is brisk and the stage settings thoroughly adequate.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 15—Pathe.—This issue of the topical shows the results of an explosion at Toledo, Ohio in the business section of the city; the captain and crew of the American liner, Philadelphia, rewarded for rescuing the crew of the wrecked steamer, Chester; close-up views of the White Sox baseball team leaving Chicago for California; also close-up views of an odd counterfeiting machine confiscated by the Chicago police; glimpses of the Gasparilla Carnival at Tampa, Florida; and in the war section views taken in the Ung Valley, Austria, and near Carency, France.

Pathe News No. 16—Pathe.—Views of the Washington Birthday celebration, New York City; of President Wilson opening the Panama-Pacific Exposition by pressing a button at Washington; the sailing of several liners for the European war zone; a stubborn fire near the city hall in New York City; Enrico Caruso sailing for Europe; the arrival of King Rex at the New Orleans Mardi Gras Carnival and, in the war section, views taken near Bergues, France, Leytonstone, England and in Borati, British East Africa.

The Pardon—Pathe—(Three Reels)—Produced by Donald McKenzie, this picture introduces an excellent cast, and some of the members for the first time. Thais Lawton and Percy Standing play the principal parts, and are surrounded by a highly artistic group of players. The picture is well staged and photographed, and is a strong plea for the Widowed Mothers' Pension Bill now before the legislature. The death of her husband leaves Mrs. Edwards in straitened circumstances, and though she manages to support herself and her daughter, Marie, by working day and night she cannot give the little girl the attention due her. In time the court becomes acquainted with her circumstances, takes the child away from her, and places it in an institution where its physical and intellectual wants are cared for, but the spiritual influence of a mother is sadly lacking in the daily routine. Marie grows up head-strong and wild, and soon gets into bad company. One night her mother follows her to the apartments of Arthur Trowbridge, who hounded her years before, and shoots the man. She is sentenced for life for the crime. At Marie's request a lawyer lays the case before Governor Weldon, who is in a quandary as to whether or not to sign the Widowed Mothers' Pension Bill. He hears the whole story, and grants Mrs. Edwards a pardon. The tragic story affects him strangely. Will he sign the bill? C. R. C.

Wild Wales—Pathe.—A beautifully colored subject, giving views of wild Wales. One of the features is Conway Castle dating back to 1284, and often termed "a feudal relic." On the same reel with views of Buddha's temple in Pekin. C. R. C.

The Troubles of Rufus—Pathe.—Rufus and his friend, Sam, are led into all kinds of trouble by their love of poultry. Rufus' last difficulty is his marriage to the cook. On the same reel with an educational subject treating on Japanese workmen, the things they accomplish, and the odd methods they use. C. R. C.

The Champeen Detective—Superba.—When Vincenzo Nicholini, an Italian barber, who poses as a count, makes love to the wealthy Mrs. Frizzle, the husband interrupts and chases Vincenzo from the house. For revenge, Vincenzo sends Frizzle a note demanding that $10,000 be put in a certain place or the house would be dynamited. In despair Frizzle employs Sherlock Holmes, who dresses as Mrs. Frizzle and goes to deliver the money. He is captured by the bandits and taken to their den, and there it is discovered that she is a he, and the champeen detective is put in a box and loaded in an automobile to be hauled to the river. But the box falls off and he escapes. Later he secures a cigar butt which he believes belongs to Vincenzo, though it is really Frizzle's, and with this as a clue again sets out to capture the bandits. After arresting a bunch of harmless Italians he discovers he has "pulled a boner." Meanwhile Mrs. Frizzle has been captured by the bandits, and later escapes, but having seen Sherlocko in a woman's costume embracing her husband, demands to know who the lady is. Sherlocko then discloses his real identity and all are happy.

The Masqueraders—Superba.—Harry calls on Lillie. Later the two visit Mae and Joe ,two friends. Lillie and Joe become friendly, much to Harry and Mae's anger. Later Lillie and Joe go to a masquerade ball, and Harry accompanies Mae. They meet on the floor and, after a fight, Joe, dressed in a convict's suit, runs down the street, followed by Harry. In the meantime a real convict has escaped and is being followed by the guards. All sorts of complications follow, until eventually the real convict is captured and Harry and Joe, who have been injured in the battle, return to their girls and both are given the cold shoulder, though meeting later both drown their sorrow in drink.

Universal Special

The Black Box—(Two Reels)—(Episode One)—March 8.—The initial release of this new series is called "An Apartment House Case." Lord and Lady Ashleigh send their daughter, Ella, to New York for the season. Chaperoned by the Raleighs, the girl attends the opera every night. One morning the hotel is awakened by Ella's maid's loud shrieks of alarm. The hallmen, rushing in, find Ella's body lying on the floor, and the famous Ashleigh diamonds, given to her by her father, missing. Sanford Quest, the famous Scientist and criminologist is called in on the case. He suspects Leonora, and, through hypnotism, draws from her the confession that her husband, MacDougal, the butler, committed the crime and took the jewels and that she was to meet him and escape with him to South America. Quest then releases the maid, telling her to return at 7 o'clock with the jewels. He tracks her to MacDougal's hiding place. The latter sees him and drops him, by means of a trap, into the cellar. He then turns on a poisonous gas, but Quest meets it with science, and easily makes his escape unharmed. At 7 o'clock Leonora returns with the jewels, and Quest tries upon her one of his new discoveries. It is an instrument by means of which electro-thought transference is possible. He commands the maid to send out her mind to find MacDougal, and the reflection of her thoughts is visible in a highly sensitized mirror. A week later MacDougal attempts to revenge himself upon his wife, and falls into a carefully laid trap of Quests. Lord Ashleigh arrives to find his daughter's slayer in the law's hands. At Quest's request he withdraws his demand for Leonora's arrest. Down in South America Professor Edgar Ashleigh, anthropologist, a twin brother of Lord John, is caring for John Craig, a fever-stricken servant. While his back is turned Craig reaches under the pillow and brings out a small black box. He fondles it for a time, gazing at it greedily, and then hides it again.

World

The Fairy and the Waif—Frohman—(Five Reels)—Such well known child players, as May Miles Minter, Percy Helton and Will Archie are featured in this first production of the Frohman Amusement Corporation released on the World Film program, and judged by its initial release, some big things are in store for the picture going public. The fairy, who is the little daughter of Major Grayton, is desirous of being a real fairy, and when her father goes to England on business leaving her in the care of Nevinson, a business associate, he is compelled to join his regiment upon the declaration of war and sends $30,000 to Nevinson to invest for the little girl. Grayton is reported killed and Nevinson later, pressed for money, spends the funds entrusted to him. Later the Nevinson's take in boarders and the fairy is forced to humble drudgery in the kitchen. She runs away and becomes a member in the chorus of a musical comedy. During a rehearsal she is lifted upon a cloud belonging to the company, becomes frightened and runs out in the street in the fairy costume and takes refuge with a waif, who saves her from freezing to death before they are both found by a policeman and returned to the Nevinson's. Meanwhile Grayton is able to return and when the Nevinsons discover he is coming, they scrape together enough money to pay him and start life anew in an humble flat. The waif reaps the reward of his kindness by winning the friendship of the fairy and on Grayton's return is taken under his protecting wing.

Salambo—World—(Six Reels)—One of the biggest features yet produced, based on the celebrated novel of the same name by Gustave Flaubert. The story tells how Salambo, daughter of Amilcar, ruler of Carthage and Priestess of Tanit, is the keeper of the sacred veil on which human eyes must not gaze. She falls in love with Matho, a slave, who becomes the leader of a mercenary band fighting for Carthage against Rome. Matho steals the veil and Salambo is ordered by the priests to reclaim it. The lovers meet in Matho's tent and Salambo succeeds in her mission. Through the treachery of Narr Havas, Matho is made a prisoner by the Carthaginians and Havas is rewarded by Amilcar by being given the hand of his daughter, Salambo. Matho escapes from prison and the Oracle of Tanit is made to declare, through the instrumentality of Spendius, Matho's slave, that Matho is acceptable to the God and one day will be governor of Carthage. Salambo, who has protested against her marriage to Havas, is thereupon given by Amilcar to Matho and the marriage ceremony is celebrated with much pomp.

Miscellaneous

A Deal with the Devil—Great Northern—(Three Reels)—Walter Fabre, a medical student who is studying hard that he may become rich, falls asleep one evening and dreams that the devil appears, and tells him that he can win both fame and fortune by being able to foretell the death or recovery of a patient. In the event of death the devil is to appear at the patient's head and in a case of recovery, he will appear at the feet of the patient. To prove his power, the devil tells Walter that he will be able to save the life of the king, who has been given up by all other physicians. Walter succeeds as prophesied and becomes famous. Later when a baroness is injured in an accident, Walter is summoned and the devil appears at the head of the patient. Walter pleads with the devil to spare the life of the baroness, but he warns Walter that in return he will some day take from him his dearest possession. Ida and Walter are married and five years later when their little daughter is ill, and the devil appears at her head, Walter tries to foil him by turning the child around, but she dies, and Walter is later himself taken sick and discovers Mephisto standing at his head. At that moment he awakes, realizes that fame and wealth are not the only things in life, and sets out to join his merry comrades.

A Life at Stake—Apex—(Three Reels).—Sybil, daughter of Silas Armstrong, finds her father murdered, and in the room with him, Meredith, her lover, while in a cupboard in the same room is George Fielding, her cousin, who appears to be overcome with grief. Sybil believes Meredith innocent, though he is accused of the crime, and seeks the aid of Detective Kees. After Meredith is sentenced to death, Kees discovers that a pedestal which had stood in the room contains a camera and, the plate in this camera being developed, it is discovered that Fielding is the murderer. With this as evidence, Kees has a motion picture made of the murder as he understands it to have occurred, and this is shown in a performance to which Fielding is invited. Frightened by the pictured story, he attempts to escape, but is shot, and ere dying confesses all. Meredith is pardoned at the last hour and eventually marries Sybil.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. The Vultures of the Coast—Apex—(Three Reels).—Robert Green, son of a poor fisherman, loves Eleanor, daughter of the owner of the ship Venus, and the father, desiring to marry his daughter to another, persuades Robert to sign for a six months' cruise aboard the Venus. Some weeks later news is brought that the vessel has been lost with all hands, and at the same time Mr. Johnstone, pressing a bill for $10,000 against Eleanor's father, offers to cancel the debt if Eleanor will marry his son. Believing Robert dead, she consents. Meanwhile, Robert, the only survivor of the Venus, is discovered by some smugglers and taken to their cave on a desolate island. One day when the yacht of a millionaire visits the place, and his child is kidnapped by the smugglers, Robert rescues the child and receives a reward of $10,000. He arrives at home the day Eleanor is to be married, and at the sight of him the girl refuses to proceed with the wedding. Robert produces his check for $10,000, which he gives to Eleanor's father, thereby enabling the latter to cancel his indebtedness to Johnstone, when Robert and Eleanor are happily married.

For King or Kaiser—Apex—(Three Reels).—Adolph Schultz, a German widower, marries Lily Steele, an English girl. Jack, their son, when of age joins the British navy, while his half-brother, Gustave, is educated in Germany. When war breaks out, Jack joins the British fleet, while Gustave returns to his regiment. One day Jack is sent ashore, and while there is captured by Gustave. Gustave and Jack are both in love with Lucy, Jack's cousin, and believing Jack has the inside track, offers to set him free if he will promise not to propose to Lucy. Having important papers in his possession, Jack promises in order to be freed. When the war is over, Jack and Gustave return home, and there Lucy discovers by Jack's diary his promise made to Gustave, and when the latter asks her to marry him, she refuses, declaring she is engaged to Jack, and when Gustave attacks Jack for breaking his promise, Lucy explains about the diary, thus clearing Jack's honor.

When London Sleeps—Apex—(Three Reels).—Hilda Corrode, a circus rider, leaves her husband to return to the circus with her child. She meets and loves David Engleheart, who loves Queenie Caruthers, a wire walker. Meanwhile Hilda's husband learns his uncle has died leaving his fortune to Queenie, who is his granddaughter. Captain Haynes, who desires the money, plans to marry the girl and offers to help Hilda with her lover if she will help him to marry Queenie. Through Hilda, Queenie is lured to a certain night club by a forged telegram, supposedly from David. The latter learns of the false message and arrives in time to rescue Queenie. Hilda returns home and finds her child sick. When Queenie calls, Hilda leaves the baby with her and flees. The captain, grown desperate, and believing he can only secure the fortune by causing Queenie's death, sets fire to the building, but Queenie ties the baby on her back, climbs to the roof and walks along a telegraph wire to a neighboring house. The two criminals fall into the hands of the police, and the lovers are finally reunited.

Jack Chanty — Masterpiece — (Five Reels)—Malcolm Piers after losing his wealth as a stock broker turns over his valuable securities to Garrod, his secretary, and sets out for northwest Canada. The secretary proves false to his trust, gambles and allows his departed employer to be thought an absconder. Piers arrives in Canada, drops his old name and is dubbed Jack Chanty, because of his good fellowship, wit and honesty. Years later Jack is seen floating down the river to Fort Cheecer to visit his sweetheart, Mary Cranston. At the Fort Jack sees Sir Bryson Trangmar, the new lieutenant governor, with his daughter and in the party notes his old secretary, Garrod, who is in the service of Bryson. The sight stirs up old memories and Jack flirts with Luedd, the lieutenant governor's daughter. Later he is engaged by Sir Bryson to guide him to some worthless placer claims he has purchased, and Ascota, a halfbreed is chosen camp manager. Ascota hates Jack for loving Mary, and Garrod plots with him to get the best of Chanty. When the claims are found to be worthless, Garrod makes known Chanty's reputation and the governor jumps Chanty's rich claims, as fugitives of the law are barred from holding gold claims. Defying the governor, Chanty sets out to prove his innocence, and after a series of thrilling escapes he exonerates himself. Garrod meets his death from exhaustion, while Ascota jumps from a mountain peak to escape Chanty. Jack returns to civilization with the governor's daughter, but later goes back to marry Mary Cranston.

DE LUXE TRIP BEGINS

THEY'RE off!

The long heralded and de luxe trip given by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to its exchange managers, leading exhibitors, members of the trade press and friends in general, is on its way to Universal City, the first and only moving picture municipality in the United States.

The great tour began in New York City March 6 and will end at Universal City in time for the formal opening of that hive of industry on Monday, March 15. Such an undertaking is absolutely new in filmdom, nothing like it ever having been staged before, and on account of the publicity it has received the country over, manufacturers, publicity men, exchange men, exhibitors and film fans by the thousand are watching its progress and reading the reams of press matter it is receiving in the columns of the daily newspapers all over the United States.

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Company long ago became enthusiastic over such a plant as Universal City has now become. At that time it was only a dream, but a dream that he hoped to make a reality. When the plans for its building began to materialize and the work of actual construction was commenced Mr. Laemmle decided to take with him for the opening of this city a whole train load of his friends. That intention he now sees realized, for an entire special train was necessary to convey the party from New York to Los Angeles and not contented with showing them Universal City, Mr. Laemmle is generously including side trips to Denver, the Grand Canyon and a visit to the Panama-Pacific Exposition all at his expense.

All aboard for Los Angeles at Chicago Santa Fe station.

City for the Pacific coast brass bands were playing, moving picture stars were on hand bidding farewell to their employer and several thousand fans joined in the hilarious send-off that equaled those given to presidents of the United States, when they visit Manhattan.

On the way to the station a long line of decorated automobiles, filled with stars and near-stars, attracted as much attention as would a circus. The parade started from in front of the Universal offices, Forty-eighth street and Broadway, proceeded down Broadway to Forty-second street, and thence to the station. After both stills and motion pictures had been taken of the paraders and the tourists, the band rendered another selection, the guests of Mr. Laemmle were ushered into their luxurious quarters aboard the special train, the conductor waved "all aboard" and the tour began. A brief stop was made in Chicago to pick up another throng of guests specially invited by Mr. Laemmle and then the special pulled out over the Santa Fe for the West, the only stops en route to Universal City to be made at Kansas City, Denver and in the Grand Canyon.

Entertainment of a de luxe nature has been provided for every waking hour and at Universal City exercises of a dedicatory nature will be held as befits the opening of the first moving picture city in the world. Great spectacles will be staged for picture purposes and the spectators will be shown how the sensational Universal product is made, will be taken through all quarters of the wonderful plant but just completed, shown the wonderful developing and printing facilities, the enormous stages, and the actual taking of gigantic outdoor scenes in which hundreds of supernumeraries will participate.

Among those on the special train when it pulled out of Chicago were the following:

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Laemmle; Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Fleckles of Chicago; Mr. Louis Laemmle; Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Bryson of Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. Hermen Fichtenberg of New Orleans, La.; William Oldknow of Atlanta, Ga.; C. R. Plough of Chicago; F. J. Flaherty of Chicago; J. I. The New "American" Serial

The $20,000 prize photoplay, which the American Film Manufacturing Company is producing for the North American Film Corporation, will have its first release on May 3. The writer of the scenario from which the new serial is being made was successful in a field of more than 9,000 contenders. This lucky person will receive $10,000 for the winning scenario.

Another $10,000 prize will be awarded to the person who successfully evolves a solution, which will be presented later. This is the largest amount ever offered to motion picture fans for a test of skill. The winning of the $10,000 prize offered for a solution of "The Million Dollar Mystery" by Miss Ida Damon, an unknown St. Louis amateur, has demonstrated that the most inexperienced writers may try for the prize and have a chance of success.

The big serial will be produced in California, under the personal direction of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company. The North American Film Corporation, 222 South State street, Chicago, will have the booking arrangements, which J. R. Freuler will supervise. The newspaper novelization, which will run in more than 300 daily newspapers throughout the country, will be written by one of the country's best known authors.

The "Flying A" brand has never been seen on a serial although many have been offered Messrs. Hutchinson and Freuler. Letters from exhibitors have time and again been received urging the American to make a serial. It has always been the intention for the American to make a serial when the right scenario was obtained, but it required the $10,000 prize offer to bring forth such a scenario, and now that it is in hand no effort will be spared to make the new serial a standard for other producing companies to attain in years to come.

"The Birth of a Nation" a Masterpiece

BY MABEL CONDON

WHEN David W. Griffith produced "The Birth of a Nation," he not only engaged in the telling of history but in the making of it. For his thirteen-reel film adaptation of Thomas Dixon's story "The Clansman," is abundant in spectacle, rich in story and human in the telling. It grips with its strength and its heart-breaks, it awes with its overwhelming bigness and with the subtle appeal of just the little things which, because they are so little yet so finished, are remembered with the big. The "little Colonel" making his last charge, and the little sister who in honor of her brother's home-coming dots with coal soot the cotton trimming of her shabby and only gown and names the result "southern ermine," are received, one with applause, the other with a silence that bespeaks a heart-sympathy with the South in the days of its pathetic poverty. And the applause and the silence are equally forceful.

The film is divided into two acts. The battles comprise the strength of the first while the storyinterest and the spectacle furnished by the work of the Ku Klux Klan carries the second act to a big climax. But praiseworthy to the point of being a foremost feature of the film, is the impersonation of President Lincoln, his attitude of love and mercy toward the seceded states, and afterward, when the tired North and exhausted South have met in peace, and the big-hearted President has stated that his treatment of the Southern states shall be "as though they had never been away," then comes the fatal night at the Ford Theater. And the assassination of Lincoln is portrayed according to history and the say-so of eye-witnesses.

It is as impressive a scene as play or story has ever accomplished. The setting is exactly that of the Ford theater, the play is on, the hour about 10:13. A sudden chilliness in the theater is bespoken when the President draws a cape about his shoulders. His body-guard, to get a view of the stage, leaves unguarded the door to the President's box. John Wilkes Booth slips into the vacated place of guard, opens the door into the box, aims at the President who is stooping forward watching the stage, and fires. As those of his box reach the President, Booth rushes past them, leaps to the rail and jumps to the stage, escaping by the rear.

The father of the "little Colonel" reading the fatal news the following morning, voices the sentiment of the South in the words, "Our best friend is dead—what will become of us now?" The up-rising of the negroes, and the depredations resulting which inspire the formation of the Ku Klux Klan, is the answer as given in scenes of power and action.

The film tells the story of the South as the South would tell it, so the sub-titles, at the beginning of the picture, inform us. They state that northern men sold the negroes into the South, then, when the South had taking over the selling as well as the buying, the North, after a lapse of two centuries, decried slavery. Throughout the film, the histories used as reference during the picture's making are named.

The southern scenes could be taken for no others. The atmosphere is realistically southern and especially fine are the street scenes. The home of the Camerons, the eldest son of which becomes the "little Colonel," is pillared and large. It suggests the hospitality of the dwellers, which is instanced in the visit of the sons of the Hon. Austin Stoneman, a northern statesman who is credited with exceptional power in the Capitol. He is a heavy-faced, club-footed personage whom men fear and obey and whom his daughter loves, though there is a part of his life in which she does not share; that part devoted to his mulatto house-keeper. And into the house where the mulatto rules, the daughter is never allowed to venture.

The Stoneman boys, visiting the Camerons, bring with them a photograph of their sister, Lillian. With it the eldest Cameron falls in love and Phil Stoneman learns to love Margaret Cameron. Their visit has scarcely terminated, when the negro question precipitates war.

The three Cameron boys and two Stoneman boys, enlist on respective sides. Ben, the eldest Cameron is named the "little Colonel." He alone is left of the three Camerons, and Phil, of the Stonemans. Four years of fighting is depicted in the various battles, fought in valley and on mountain-sides. Never before have such battles been waged in front of a motion picture camera. They cover miles of distance and the action in the back-ground is as apparent, though of necessity less distinct, as that at closer range.

The close of the war brings the "little Colonel" back to a home where poverty has made for shabbiness and scant food. He has spent some weeks in a northern hospital where he met Elsie Stoneman, the girl of his dreams. His little pet sister, in her southern-ermine trimmed and much-worn frock is a sad contrast to the girl of northern means. The north meanwhile has become dangerous to the health of Austin Stoneman and he comes south with his daughter, choosing the city in which the Camerons live.

Stoneman has urged the doctrine that the negro is equal in all ways to the white man and has made a protege of Silas Lynch, a mulatto. Lynch has already incensed the negroes against the white people and many of the homes and women of the latter race have been desecrated by them. The "little Colonel" groups some men about him and they form the Ku Klux Klan for the defense of their homes and their women. The Klansmen's garb is a white flowing garment embellished with the emblem of the order and having a white head-dress. By working on the superstition of the negro, the band becomes a power and metes out punishment by night to negro offenders.

One day the little sister goes alone to the spring. She is followed by Gus, a negro. Terrorized, she runs from him, finds herself on the edge of a high cliff and threatens to jump if he follows. He follows and the "little Colonel," making a frantic search for his little sister, finds her bruised body on the rocks below the cliff. She dies and the Ku Klux Klan deals out punishment to Gus that night.

Raiding is begun by the negroes, and intense suspense is sustained as the colored mobs are shown in their work of destruction while the Ku Klux Klan grows, group by group and finally sweeps down upon the raiders, a spectacle inspiring and over-mastering.

Stoneman experiences the result of his teaching in Lynch's decision to marry Elsie. It is only the triumph of the Ku Klux Klan that effects her liberation from the negro. Happier days follow when Elsie and the "little Colonel" see, in contrast to the allegory of war, that of peace, when the negro has been relegated to Liberia, which solution to the race question is said to have been that of President Lincoln.

All the fine, though minor things, which went into the making of "The Birth of a Nation," are too numerous for mention. They deserve tribute, nevertheless. And of the cast, Henry Walthall as the "little Colonel" and Mae Marsh as the little sister, will be remembered for their splendid playing. G. W. Bitzer, cameraman, had a large share in the success of this big Griffith film, which had its opening at the Liberty theater, New York, March 3, before an attendance representative of many of the biggest interests of the film industry.

At the close of part one, Thomas Dixon appeared on the stage and in his introduction of David W. Griffith, stated that the film told the story better than either his book or the play. Mr. Griffith's few words were modestly expressive of his aim in adapting "The Clansman" and of his great thanks to his audience for their reception of his film.

Woman Organizes Film Company

When a woman decides to do anything she goes ahead and does it. Ouida Bergere is a woman, and she decided to organize a producing company. She knew that she could produce pictures, for she had had a long training on the speaking stage as well as in picture producing, having appeared for several years with Wilton Lackaye in such plays as "The Pit," "Via Wireless" and "The Brute," in which she created three parts and spent two years with Pathe, writing photo-plays and playing leads in them. With this confidence in herself she proceeded to Wall street, where she interested one of the big banking houses in her plans. "Go ahead," they told her. "We will furnish the money." With the finances assured, she next interested one of our best known authors and added to her staff Walter Edwin as director. Miss Bergere is not yet ready to announce all her plans further than that a play which had a run of several years in New York will be produced with a well known star in the leading part, and that the product will be released through one of the well known companies.

Director H. C. Matthews, Elsie Albert and Baby Early are now working at the Santa Barbara, Calif., Kriterion studios under the direction of A. M. Kennedy.

American Distinctive Creations Make Debut

Nai, the "dream girl."

IT'S a winner! That three-word sentence describes, fully as well as all that follows in this review, what the five-part production entitled "The Quest," made by the American Film Manufacturing Company and to be released under the "American Distinctive Creations" brand, is like. It has been chosen by the Mutual Film Corporation to lead off their new special feature department on March 22 and the choice has certainly been an excellent one.

All of the skill used in securing the photographic effects that have made the American and Beauty films popular the world over has been employed in this production to furnish a beautiful background for the acting of ever-pleasing Margarita Fischer. We have seen lightning on the screen before but it seldom made us feel as though we wished to dodge. This is not an exaggeration, for the particular scene in which a man is killed by a lightning stroke is a masterpiece of motion photography.

The picture does not depend upon one big scene for its success, however, or upon any one of its composite parts, but is perfectly balanced throughout. The scenes showing the wonderful rugged hills of the Santa Cruz Islands and the rock-strewn shore with the waves dashing angrily against it contrast strongly the pomp and grandeur of a society fete on the estate of one of the many California millionaires to whose homes the American directors have access.

The story is one which lends itself admirably to the artistic treatment given it by Director Harry Pollard. It deals with the adventures of a society man in quest of love and tells how, after finding all the women of his own class too worldly to become his "dream girl," he gives up all the luxuries of life to cruise on a ship owned by a friend. When the ship is burned at sea he is separated from the crew and washed upon an island, where he meets Nai, the daughter of the chief of a lost tribe. In her he sees all the ideals of his dream girl, but her father bids her to marry one of her own tribe. Refusing to leave his "dream girl" now that he has found her, the millionaire persuades her to marry him and flee to the hills. The disappointed lover leads the tribesmen who pursue them and, just as he is about to effect their capture, he is struck by lightning and killed.

John and Nai in the mountains.

The clever manner in which the storm is seen to rise as they make their escape and the depiction of its increasing fury, leads to this minor climax naturally and produces a splendid dramatic effect. The couple flee into the hills and are later visited by the priest of the tribe, who asks them to return. At the same time Harry's friends sight the island while cruising in their yacht and cast anchor for the night. Harry sees them, but is unable to attract their attention because of the darkness. He tells the priest, however, that he and Nai will leave the next morning for civilization.

A scene from the millionaire's dream.

The return of the millionaire and Nai to the tribe.

That night he has a dream in which he goes back to the social world with his wife. She is not happy at first, as she cannot get used to the conventions of society, but finally she becomes content. A man about town attracts her attention and this eventually leads to a tragedy. The milllionaire awakens and feels that the dream was a warning. As the yacht sails away he and Nai watch it disappear. Then he turns toward the priest and tells him that he will never return to civilization and that he is ready to go back to the tribe.

The dream is very cleverly "put over," as it appears to be part of the story proper until the surprise is sprung. The acting and costuming, as well as the general atmosphere, both social and primitive, is commendable. Miss Fischer deserves much credit for her work, for she makes a real character out of Nai. Harry Pollard plays the millionaire in a pleasing manner. Lucille Ward, Joseph Singleton, Nan Christy and Robyn Adair have the other important parts.

Graham Heads United

Rapidly developing business has compelled a change in the administrative affairs of the United Film Service, which enters on its current week with J. C. Graham, until recently general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in complete control of its affairs. Mr. Graham relinquishes his position with the Universal to accept the new position in compliance to an arrangement which P. A. Powers made with him, and at the same time becomes president of the United Film Service, Mr. Powers retiring from that position and Joseph A. McKinney turning over the general management to Mr. Graham, in order that he may have the complete authority necessary to conduct the business along the lines of highest efficiency.

"Appreciating that the growth of the United Film Service required the unhampered and undivided attention of a single head capable of fully controlling its destinies," said Mr. Powers, "I sought an arrangement with a man who possesses peculiar qualifications in this direction and was fortunate in enlisting the interest of Mr. Graham, who now becomes president and general manager of the United Film Service."

The retirement of Mr. Powers as president does by no means betoken a lessening of his interest in the affairs of the United, of which he remains a director, while Joseph A. McKinney, the retiring general manager, also retains his seat as a director.

The directorate of the United Film Service will remain as constituted at the time of the change of administration. The board is comprised of P. A. Powers, W. D. Campbell, Joseph A. McKinney, H. M. Warner, J. E. Baum, Leo Stern and Ludwig G. B. Erb.

J. C. Graham assumes his new position fortified with a fund of experience and endowed with a natural business ability which few men possess. Mr. Graham, previous to his affiliation with the Universal, was manager of exchanges for the Mutual Film Corporation. He has also been connected with the General Film Company, and back of his experience in the film business are many years of sound business experience with large manufacturing interests.

The reorganization of the United Film Service is to be complete and sweeping. O. S. Goan, who was in charge of the sales department under the Powers' regime, has been elected vice-president and treasurer of the corporation, while P. A. Chase becomes secretary. Mr. Goan, who is one of the directors of the National Biscuit Company, was a factor in developing that organization in its present state of world-wide activity. He was one of the moving spirits in the amalgamation of the great biscuit making concerns, which formed the original units of the great trust now in control of the field.

Mr. Chase, who was in charge of the accounting department and now becomes secretary, is the oldest official, in point of continued service, now with the United Film Service, having entered the film business with Abe Warner when the latter organized the Warner's Feature Film Company more than two and a half years ago. For years Mr. Chase was active as an expert in the accounting divisions of several great railroads. He, like Mr. Graham and Mr. Goan, is a western-born man who has come east to utilize his superabundant energy to good account in his specialized field.

Hearst-Selig Girl in Chicago

Grace Darling, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial girl, spent the greater part of this week in Chicago while returning from San Francisco. She was kept busy filling the many engagements which had been made for her. Among the places she visited were the Selig Polyscope Company's studio, where she saw the production of a dramatic photoplay being made, and the Court of Domestic Relations.

She declared herself delighted with the Windy City and said that in many ways it reminded her of New York. One of her most novel experiences was turning the crank of a camera while at the Selig studio. William N. Selig, who was present while she watched the players at work, suggested that she try to operate the camera herself, so she took the place of the camera man. The director said she managed it like a veteran.

William N. Selig and Grace Darling, snapped during the latter's visit to the Selig studios.

Lee Arthur, the noted dramatist who has been engaged to write exclusively for the Edison Company, has contributed his first three-reeler, "The Greater Love," which will be one of the features which Edison is now releasing every week on its regular program.

Carlyle Blackwell in Splendid Role

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

A SIX-REEL adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's novel, "The High Hand," is the latest Favorite Players release on the Alliance Program, and a story with more opportunities for startling photographic effects and dramatic, gripping situations would be difficult to find. The theme differs a bit from the style in the majority of Futrelle's works, but the part of Jim Warren, skilled workman and incorruptible politician, suits Carlyle Blackwell perfectly.

It contains a coarser grain of strength than the last few roles in which he has been seen, and still brings in the clean-cut, intelligent business man in which characterization Mr. Blackwell appears to such good advantage. The picture is a little longer than the average, but the action does not drag in the least. The developments mount steadily to the big climax in the last reel, and are set off and supported by unique light effects and beautiful photography. The firelight effects and dissolves are most commendable.

The fact that at one time Director William D. Taylor had the interior decorating art at his finger tips may account for the masterly and artistic manner in which the settings are constructed and furnished. The home scenes suggest the desired atmosphere so well that one has but to see them to know exactly the occupants' circumstances and many of their habits. A few scenes such as the hotel lobby, the interior of a safe deposit vault, and the machine shop were taken in the actual locations to assure correct detail.

The manner in which Carlyle Blackwell portrays the part of Jim Warren explains his universal popularity with picture followers. He is as much at ease when dressed in coarse attire and attending to his duties in the shop filled with whirring belts, blacksmiths' fires, punches and drills, as he is later on, when dressed as befitting a newly-elected member of the legislature. Mr. Blackwell is surrounded by a capable cast composed of Douglas Gerrard as Francis Everard Lewis; William Brunton as Big Tom Simmonds; John Sheehan as Franques; Neva Gerber as Edna Tillinghast; Henry Kernan as her father, Dwight Tillinghast; and Richard Willis as the shop foreman.

The story begins with the first meeting between Edna Tillinghast and Jim Warren in the machine shop in which the latter is employed. Their next meeting is on a road near the outskirts of the city. Jim, taking recreation, comes upon an apparently deserted automobile. Investigation discloses a pair of Cinderella-like feet sticking out from beneath the machine. Jim climbs under, and assists Edna in repairing the break. She thanks him for his help, but adds that she doesn't like him because he is running against her fiance, Francis E. Lewis, for a political office.

Some time previous to this Warren was approached by his fellow-workers and induced to accept the nomination for the political office held by Lewis. He prepares to fight his opponent with his own weapons—but remain honest. With the help of Franques, Lewis' secretary, Jim picks up no end of evidence proving that Lewis is a grafter. His opponent realizes that his past conduct will act as a boomerang, and withdraws from the race, giving Edna to believe that Jim has beaten him by unfair tactics.

After his election Jim draws concession-seekers into his net, depositing the graft obtained in the bank. Lewis thinks that the young politician has fallen for his bait, and gives the reporters a story of Honest Jim Warren's "downfall." Jim's supporters demand an explanation, and Lewis demands his arrest. Jim leads the whole party, detective included, down to the bank, and there takes from one of the safe deposit boxes a number of letters sealed and dated in the presence of the bank officials. The detective opens them, and astonishes Lewis and the others with their contents. They give a detailed story of each graft deal and the names of the conspirators. The newspaper story sets the city afire with excitement.

Edna happens upon a scrap-book of political write-ups, and finds in it a complete account of how Warren forced Lewis out of the race with graft evidence. Regretting the injustice she has done him, she writes Jim, asking him to call on her. He does so, and they become engaged. As soon as the next election day approaches, Jim is heralded by all as the next governor. He has played the game honestly, and won out with a high hand.

An All Star Lubin Cast

"Road O' Strife," the new fifteen-part serial by Emmett Campbell Hall, which the Lubin Company will shortly release, will have the strongest all star cast of any series of dramas ever made by the Lubin Company. Over 500 players will be used in the production and the important parts will be played by men and women who have been starred in some of the biggest Lubin productions.

When John Ince began making "Road O' Strife," he was given carte blanche by Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, to select any of the prominent Lubin players and cast them for parts. Ince did so and as a result the various characters in the dramas will be interpreted by players whose names are known wherever pictures are shown.

The three main leading roles throughout the series will be played by Mary Charleson, one of the most vivacious little leading women in the world of photoplayers and Crane Wilbur and Jack Standing, two of the best known and most popular of the Lubin leading men. Among the other well known Lubin players who will play important roles are Rosetta Brice, John Ince, George Soule Spencer, Mrs. Daly, Percy Winter, Bernard Seigel, Florence Hackett, George Clark, James Cassady, Frank Smiley, Bart McCullum, Francis Joyner, Walter Law, John Smiley, William Turner, Ferdinand Tidmarsh, William Cohill, Charles Brandt, Clarence Jay Elmer, Flora Lea, Howard Mitchell, George Trimble, Gilbert Ely, Mrs. Sterling, Peter Lang, Douglas Sibole, Frankie Mann, Jack Delson, Jack McDonald, James Daly, Eleanor Blanchard and Josephine Longworth.

Free Trips to California

"Runaway June," the George Randolph Chester photoplay serial, will take the most popular woman in each state in the Union to the Panama-Pacific Exposition and the San Diego Exposition and on a trip de luxe through picturesque California with all expenses paid. The women will be chosen by their friends who patronize the moving picture theaters where "Runaway June" is being shown.

The fortunate women selected will have no expense at all and will travel in the best possible manner, not only the necessities but the luxuries of the trip being paid by "Runaway June." Millionaires could travel no better than will they. The rules of the contest will be issued in pamphlet form by the theaters where "Runaway June" is being played.

Each theater will have three votes for each installment of the picture and the smallest theater will thus swing as much influence as the largest. The contest will close at midnight, September 30, 1915, and the votes will be counted by Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery of New York City, certified accountants. The decision will be announced through the theaters and newspapers and in this publication by October 10. The forty-eight lucky women will start immediately thereafter for beautiful California with "Runaway June" as their hostess.

"The Scarlet Runner"

The Vitagraph Company has purchased "The Scarlet Runner," or the "Twelve Adventures of Christopher Race," from C. N. and A. M. Williamson, the well known authors of "The Lightning Conductor" and other popular books. "The Scarlet Runner" will be released in weekly installments in the regular service of the General Film Company, in serial form. Each installment, or adventure, will comprise three parts, or reels. Those who are familiar with the writings of Messrs. Williamson, can readily form conclusions as to the virility and intensity with which "The Scarlet Runner" will be studded, and the interest and enthusiasm they will create. Each adventure appears with more thrilling fervor and stronger dramatic action than its predecessor, working up to a tremendous and most satisfactory climax.

Another "Cabiria Stars" Production

The second "Cabiria Stars" production is now ready for shipment by the Itala Film Company of America. It is called "The Serpent" and was written specially for the screen by Dante Testa, the prominent Italian author and dramatist.

"Archimedes," the grand old man of "Cabiria" is the principal character in the new offering. Two new juvenile stars are also introduced. "The Incendiary," whose wonderful acting in "The Palace of Flames," one of the past releases so well remembered, is seen in "The Serpent" as the wine-bibbling accomplice of the title character.

Will Jess Willard Try Chaplin's System?

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

IF JESS WILLARD ever sees Charlie Chaplin in the two-reel Essanay release of Thursday, March 11, entitled "The Champion," and decides to adopt his methods of fighting, it's all off with Jack Johnson.

The inimitable Charlie, who has been everything from a detective to a waiter, from a millionaire to a tramp, in this picture tries his hand at being a pugilist, and the screams of laughter that will shake the houses in which the picture is run will testify as to his prowess in his new vocation.

If all this doesn't sound inviting, imagine G. M. Anderson — the celebrated "Broncho Billy" — as a "supe," and you will begin to understand that "The Champion" is an unusual film.

Added to the attractions of Chaplin and Anderson one must have one other element to make the Essanay trade-mark, the "A. B. C.'s of filmdom" proper, and the "B" in the case of this film will have to stand for "bulldog," as the prize Boston bull who decides the contest for the championship of North and South America is unquestionably as real a star as either Mr. Chaplin or Mr. Anderson.

The new champion

As the picture opens, one beholds Chaplin in a most gloomy mood, for luck has been against him, and he is, to use the slang expression, "all in, down and out." Sitting in a narrow doorway with his pet bulldog and with nothing standing between them and starvation but one lonely bun and a weinerwurst, Chaplin slips the weinerwurst to the dog and swallows the bun himself, and then sets out to secure employment.

Noting a sign on a nearby door, which leads into the training quarters of the world's champion pugilist, Chaplin discovers that boxing partners are wanted, and finding a horseshoe on the sidewalk and knowing it means good luck, he slips it into his pocket, enters and applies for the job.

One after another he beholds the various boxing partners of the champion knocked out and lugged away on stretchers. Though each successive "pug" that appears frightens him the more, he dons the boxing gloves, slips the horseshoe inside of one and goes in to face the champion.

While the "bruiser's" attention is momentarily attracted elsewhere, Charlie takes careful aim with that horseshoe-padded glove and it's all over. The champion is so surprised that he dazedly arises, thereby permitting Charlie to land another wallop that proves a real "twilight sleep" prescription. The champion, on regaining consciousness, decides he is the champion no longer and boards the first outgoing freight train for points unknown, while Charlie is hailed as the new champion.

He is instantly booked to fight the match which the former champion had been billed to appear in, and as the eventful day approaches rejects numerous bribes made by the opposition.

The fatal night at last arrives and Champion Charlie enters the ring prepared to do or die. At the ringside, as one of the spectators, sits his pet bulldog, and surely no human being could watch a fight more closely. That dog actually smiles when Charlie registers a knockout. Its face is fierce and gloomy when its master goes to the mat. Time after time Charlie knocks out his opponent, and time after time the opponent arises to knock him out. When both have become so exhausted that they can scarcely stand and the battle looks like a draw, Chaplin sends his opponent against the ropes and the bulldog, unable to restrain his enthusiasm, leaps from the ringside to enter the contest himself. Seizing the opponent of his master by the seat of the trousers, he hangs on like grim death, while "Battling Charlie" takes advantage of the opportunity given and proceeds to land uppercuts, left hooks and solar plexuses until his rival leaps clear over the ropes and rushes madly from the ring, while the spectators proclaim "Battling Charlie" the champion of the world.

Worried About His Pets

Howard Estabrook, who has been in Florida for the past six weeks making pictures for the World Film Corporation, is back in town with a cute little pair of murderers called Dido and Dodo, four year old alligators. In filming "The Butterfly," one of the pictures made during the southern tour, an alligator scene was required and was taken at an alligator farm. Afterward the proprietor was displaying a capture of three and four year olds just received from his agents, and offered to give a pair to anyone who would pick them up with bare hands. Several attempts were made and several hands narrowly escaped annihilation, when one of the attendants tipped Estabrook that while an alligator has powerful crushing muscles to close his jaws he has almost no power to open them. Acting in this theory, Estabrook grabbed a pair just back of and at the base of the jaws and managed to hold them long enough to win the bet. But "now that you've got 'em, what are you going to do with 'em" was the next question, which has not yet been solved. Estabrook states that any one looking for a pair of guaranteed healthy alligators would do well to apply at the Lambs Club at once. He says they are pleasant companions, and not at all difficult to feed, as they will dine on anybody's fingers, although Dodo is said to exhibit a preference for lady fingers.

Bray Cartoons in Pathe News

The Pathe News has just started an innovation in animated cartoons that has aroused the greatest interest. Several years ago the old Pathe Weekly had a newspaper artist draw for it a series of humorous pictures but the only motion in the pictures was that of the hand drawing them. In these cartoons the well known artist, J. R. Bray (author and originator of the famous "Colonel Heeza Liar" series) takes as a subject some live topic of the day and treats it in an amazingly humorous way. First the hand and the pencil are shown making the sketch until it stands completed on the screen. Then suddenly the quaint figures begin to move in the most lifelike way—the lesson of the cartoon is forcibly carried home and the result is a much deeper impression upon the mind than if the cartoon were the ordinary inanimate kind.

Dorothy Gish in Three Reeler

Dorothy Gish charmingly impersonates the part of Mercy, the beautiful foundling taken in by a well-to-do Quaker family, in "Bred in the Bone," a three-reel Mutual drama produced by Majestic. The story of this play was written by Frank Kinsella. The argument tends to show that the hereditary trait or atavism generally runs its course, with more or less severity, before early environment and education can assert their influence in a corrective and salutary way. In this drama Mercy is the daughter of theatrical parents. When eighteen she runs away with a theatrical company, but in the end returns to her foster parents. Others in the cast are Mary Alden, Eleanor Washington, W. E. Lawrence, Al Fillson and William Hinckley.

North American's Home Office in Chicago

The North American Film Corporation, whose new serial will begin early in May, opened their home office at 1608 Consumers building, Chicago, the early part of this week and the men at the head of the concern are now busily engaged in caring for the details of the venture.

The Chicago office will be the one from which all the business will be directed, though a branch may be opened in New York. J. R. Freuler, one of the founders of the concern, is spending much of his time in this city as the serial will be distributed under his direction.

Edmund Hayes Heads Own Company

Edmund Hayes, the vaudeville star, is soon to head a feature company which will produce five-part comedy subjects featuring himself in his stage successes.

The pictures will be booked direct by Mr. Hayes, from offices which he intends to establish in the leading cities of the country. They will be advertised extensively in both the trade and daily papers. Frank P. Donovan, the well known publicity and trade paper man is to conduct the campaign, offices having been temporarily secured at 1431 Broadway, New York City.

Francis X. Bushman, the Essanay star, has been a proficient wrestler for years.

"Salambo" a Massive Spectacle

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

SECOND only to Cabiria. That seemed to be the verdict of those who were privileged to attend the advance showing of the World Film Corporation's special release entitled "Salambo," which has been picturized from the novel of Gustave Flaubert.

Nowhere else but in the great Itala masterpiece mentioned above have such huge interiors and such stunning exteriors been revealed. The temple scenes are nothing short of wonderful, and their massiveness well nigh dwarfs the human beings who appear in them as backgrounds.

Though the picture is six reels in length, action aplenty is to be found in each of the six reels, and one watches the activities of Matho, a slave, who becomes leader of a band of mercenaries and who falls in love with Salambo, daughter of Amilcar, ruler of Carthage, with bated breath. Matho has in Spendius, his faithful slave, a follower who is prepared to do or die for his master, and in several of the scenes Spendius really holds our interest as much or more than does Matho.

Thousands of supernumeraries are used in the battle scenes, and one particularly effective scene that utilizes hundreds and hundreds of minor characters is that in which Matho appears on the hillside, and at a given signal summons his forces to appear. They rise literally from the ground and one is truly amazed by the multitude of waving spears and upthrust weapons, as they cheer their leader and pay tribute to his greatness.

Another scene that is wonderfully effective is that in which Spendius climbs the aqueduct and after loosening one of the huge stones that form its' structure releases the water imprisoned within it. Many producers would have been satisfied to cause a single massive stream of water to emerge from the opening made, but the director of Salambo has staged a perfect torrent, like a miniature Niagara, which comes foaming out of the aqueduct and pours down upon the plains beneath. One cannot but marvel at the stupendousness of this torrent, for it literally seems to be a river in itself, let loose, that Carthage may be destroyed.

The story, which may be considered by some a little slow in getting under way, more than makes up for this delay in the closing reels, which are crammed with action and contain innumerable sets of the gigantic kind already referred to.

Salambo, daughter of Amilcar, ruler of Carthage and Princess of Tanit is the keeper of a sacred veil on which human eyes must not gaze, and one day while visiting the slave quarter of the city, she meets and falls in love with Matho, who is so charmed by her beauty that he escapes from slavery and later on becomes leader of a band of mercenaries.

Later, when Carthage is attacked by the Romans, the senators go forth to procure the assistance of Matho and his warrior band, and the former slave now finds himself hailed as a real hero, when he consents to aid Carthage for the sake of Salambo. When, however, he has saved the city and the senators endeavor to pay him in spurious gold, the counterfeit is discovered, and Matho, for revenge, steals the sacred veil from the temple of Tanit, assisted in this undertaking by Spendius, his slave. They enter the city by way of the aqueduct and manage to make way with the veil ere they can be captured.

The priests order Salambo to reclaim the veil, and for this purpose she visits the tent of Matho, and while there sees her lover made prisoner by the Carthaginians through the treachery of Narr Havas, who is rewarded for his treachery by Amilcar, being promised the hand of Salambo in marriage.

Spendius boldly enters the city of Carthage and rescues his master from prison, while at the same time advising Salambo what he is about to do. Spendius, who has discovered that the Oracle of Tanit is hollow, creeps into the gigantic figure of the god, and makes known to the faithful gathered in the temple that it is the god's wish that Matho be freed that he may marry Salambo.

Having accomplished his mission, Spendius emerges from the figure of the god, and once more joins Matho. When the populace prepare to stop their escape from the city, the faithful make known the decree of God, and Matho is asked to remain for the purpose of marrying Salambo and becoming the ruler of Carthage.

Horsley's Big Plans

David Horsley, film manufacturer and inventor, left New York last week for Los Angeles, where he will personally direct the work of laying out new studios for his production.

When interviewed by a representative of Motography Mr. Horsley said: "I have some wonderful advantages on my side now, and I'm going to put everyone of them to work with a view to making my films the most unusual and desirable pictures on the market. In the first place, I have a long lease on a plot of ground nearly six blocks square right in the heart of Los Angeles. Properties of all sorts, and city scenes of most any description are right outside my gates. Next I have the world famous Bostock animals, unquestionably the most highly trained and select specimens in captivity. The twelve original trainers whom Bostock acquired in various corners of the earth, including Captain Bonavita, the king of all lion tamers, and Harry E. Tudor who has managed the wonderful outfit for the last twelve years, are all under contract to me. Then comes my new duplex double exposure camera which permits of trick work and double exposure photography such as have never before been possible with other cameras invented up to this time. I can put over some performances between animals and human actors that will cause an audience to sit up and gasp. And all this highly mystifying and seemingly perilous action, through the use of the trick camera, becomes a hundred times more safe and simple than picture making under the methods now necessarily practiced by the producers of animal films. In addition to that my camera saves no end of time for the director. The possibilities for comedy production along brand new lines are almost beyond calculation.

"The plans which I have just perfected call for an arrangement totally different from any now in use. My long association with the producing side of motion pictures has taught me the weaknesses and drawbacks of the average studio, and I have been able to overcome these in my new layout and to effect a great economy of time and space."

Mr. Horsley expects to have his new studio finished and to start his new productions in them within six weeks from date. His plans call for an outdoor jungle allowing seven different sets and including an artificial brook, waterfall and lake. The interior studio is to be so arranged that six duplex sets can be set up in rotation, with the camera mounted in the center on a rock steady, automatically adjusted pedestal, with the foregrounds, lense angles, focal depths, etc., all diagramed and laid out. The director is thus enabled to work in rotation without the loss of a moment for the setting or resetting of scenes. Clever mechanical traps permit the entrance of any kind of animal at any part of a scene at the required instant, both in the jungle and interior sets, with covered passage ways connecting the arena and the dens of the animals. Elaborate scene docks, dressing rooms, laboratories and office buildings will form the boundaries of the court.

Mrs. Horsley and their two children, Stanley and John, accompanied Mr. Horsley to California. They expect to be away about two months.

Chaplin Statuette

One of the most recent novelties in the way of a statuette is the small figure of Charlie Chaplin, the Essanay comedian, which has been modeled by Cyrus Le Roy Baldridge of 19 So. La Salle street, Chicago. The little figure is remarkably life-like and stands twelve inches high. Mr. Baldridge, who is an artist by profession, rather than a sculptor has only recently returned from the European war zone where he was sketching battle scenes for a syndicate of newspapers. Just by way of announcement, he one day tried his hand at modeling, choosing for his first subject the popular Essanay comedian, Mr. Chaplin. So life-like and laugh provoking was the result, that Mr. Baldridge's friends urged him to prepare more of these little statuettes for the purpose of selling them to Chaplin admirers. After giving the matter some consideration, Mr. Baldridge determined to at least try it out, and reports that though he has only advertised his statuette in one magazine, he is already in receipt of several hundred orders. Exhibitors who are running the Chaplin pictures may find the Chaplin statuettes a valuable premium to offer on nights when those Essanay comedies in which Mr. Chaplin appears are to be run.

Still Owns Thanhouser Stock

On reliable information, Motography announced in its issue of March 6 that Dr. Shallenberger had disposed of his stock in the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Since the publication of that item, Motography is in receipt of the following letter from Dr. Shallenberger and wishes to give it equal prominence with the original statement.

I am enclosing herewith clipping from your issue of March 6, in which you state that the writer has disposed of his interest in the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Wish to advise you that you have been misinformed in this connection as the writer has sold no part of his interest in the above company. Will you kindly make a correction to that effect, and by so doing greatly oblige.

(Signed) Wilbert Shallenberger.

Alliance Features Fictionized

Crossett & Dunlap, the well known New York publishers are the first concern in the book business to reissue the novels from which successful photoplays have been made.

The first of these, "The Carlyle Blackwell" edition, of "The Key to Yesterday" is already upon the booksellers' shelves, and the Blackwell edition of "The High Hand," is now on the press and will shortly be placed before the public.

"Jack Chanty" another feature on the Alliance program will be reissued in book form.

Becomes Governor to Free Convict

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

THE struggle of a judge between his desire to exactly carry out the word of the law and his desire to favor the husband of a former sweetheart, who is brought before him, forms the theme of the American two-reel release of Monday, March 15, entitled "The Two Sentences."

Harry Van Meter, as Jim Rodgers, a young law student, later a judge, has a splendid opportunity for emotional acting, and he makes the best of it. Perhaps his most convincing scene is the one in which he determines to run for governor that he may pardon a man he sentenced to the penitentiary for twenty years, and in this scene and the following one, in which Vivian Rich, who enacts the role of his sweetheart, comes to him at that crucial moment in his life to declare that it is she and she alone who is going to be responsible for his defeat in the campaign.

It is needless to comment upon American photography, for exhibitors well know its excellent quality. The settings in this production are satisfactory in every particular, and the bigger scenes, such as the courtroom and the campaign headquarters, are convincing in every way, a great number of supernumeraries being used.

Carter commits murder

As the story runs, Jim Rodgers, a young law student in love with Helen Wade, has an opportunity offered him to go to the city and practice law, after he wins a damage suit against the traction company and defeats a learned city lawyer who represents the traction company.

The governor returns Carter to his wife

Jim jumps at the chance offered him, after Helen agrees to wait for his return to marry him.

After his city career opens up fame and fortune for him, Jim receives what he terms a "life sentence" when he opens a letter from Helen to find she has engaged herself to Tom Carter, a city man spending a holiday in the country, and though Jim leaves everything in the city and returns at once to his former home, he arrives just as the wedding ceremony is concluded.

The murder trial

Brokenhearted, he returns to the city and plunges into his law work with such vigor that within a year he is inaugurated as judge of the criminal court Shortly afterwards, Tom Carter quarrels with a clubman over a card game and in his anger strikes the man with a heavy chair, instantly killing him. Carter is arraigned before Judge Rodgers, and Jim finds himself compelled to act as judge for his rival. When the jury convicts Carter, the judge has the option of fixing a sentence of anywhere from one to twenty years in the penitentiary, and when Helen appeals to him to be merciful Jim replies that she had not hesitated to give him a life sentence, and he sees no reason why he should treat her husband with leniency. Next day Carter is sentenced to the maximum penalty of twenty years.

His decision preys on his mind and with the vision of Tom in prison always before him, Jim begins to pray for a way to undo what he has done. When he is urged by some of his friends to become a candidate for governor, he at first frowns upon the scheme, but later sees in it a way of freeing Carter, and so consents to run.

Helen, meanwhile, thinking he is striving for the governorship only, vows he shall not be elected and works night and day in opposition to his candidacy. On election day she visits him and boasts that she personally has brought about his defeat, but Jim informs her that his one object in wishing to be governor is to free her husband, and in the closing hours of the election Helen succeeds in retracting enough of her statements to insure Jim's winning.

As governor, Jim's first act is to pardon Carter, and, after returning the husband to his sorrowful wife, he goes to his bachelor apartments and burns the last memento of his boyish romance.

Is the World Film Mad?

By Thomas H. Ince.

There are various methods of testing the public pulse in regard to motion pictures but the surest method of finding out exactly what the people want is through the medium of Uncle Sam's mail-bag.

Of late the correspondence of the larger motion picture corporations established in the East and in Southern California has reached such huge dimensions that the officials of the various companies concluded it was better to apply to the government for a post-office at each plant than go to the expense of having all matter carted several times daily from the nearest post-office.

In several instances post-office privileges have been granted the more isolated companies and they are now in full enjoyment of all the postal advantages of any large city.

Although some of the companies have sought post-offices because of the attending free advertising the larger companies have been absolutely in need of post-offices because of the huge amount of mail matter received daily from all parts of the world.

And with the post-office has come the regularly appointed postmaster, together with his corps of assistants—all of which calls for a pretty neat sum in the yearly budgets of the companies but which, to them, are worth tenfold the expense.

A glimpse of one day's mail received by any one of the better known companies will impress the most optimistic person with the idea that the world is unquestionably in the grip of motion pictures.

Thousands of letters are received daily, in fifty different languages, from places never dreamed of as being on the map. The predominating letters are those applying for work. Everybody on earth seems to be peculiarly adapted as a coming motion picture star, according to these letters. Second in point of numbers are letters from aspiring mothers, inquiring into the moral atmosphere surrounding a picture-producing plant, and wishing to know if it is a fit place for their daughters. Then come hundreds of letters from ambitious would-be scenario writers, the majority of whom have not yet written a script but who desire a few pointers before embarking.

Pouches of letters come daily from the general public who offer good, bad and indifferent advice in regard to past, present and future productions. Others send in epistolary eulogiums on plays they have viewed and hope to see more of the same kind produced in the future.

One would think that most of these epistles are consigned to the waste basket after a single reading but such is not the case. Each letter is carefully read and its contents noted by some one in authority in the plant. Then they are sent to the various departments with which they particularly deal with a view of perfecting film-production, for after all it is the public who is the real critic of the films and if the wishes of the public are carried out we know that the film-service is being improved.

First Four Metro Releases

The directors of the Metro Pictures Corporation, among whom are numbered many of the foremost exchange men and branch owners of the country, decided this week upon the first four releases of that concern. March 29 was set upon as the initial release date and B. A. Rolfe, whose production of "The Three of Us" created so favorable an impression on the trade, was honored as the first releasing company to be represented on the Metro program.

Among the first four releases, "Satan Sanderson," from the Rolfe studios, with Orrin Johnson in the titular role, comes first and will first be screened on March 29. "Satan Sanderson," before being absorbed by the camera, enjoyed wide popularity as a spoken drama and as a novel sold into the second million. Today, "Satan Sanderson" is still one of the "best sellers."

It will be released throughout American by Metro, to be followed by the Popular Plays and Players Company's melodramatic version of the former great stage classic, "The Shadows of a Great City," with Adelaide Thurston, perhaps one of the best known touring stars, and Thomas Jefferson, the prominent legitimate actor, in the two foremost roles.

In the production of "The Shadows of a Great City" which will be released by Metro, April 5, the Popular Plays and Players Company have utilized many of New York's characteristic natural settings. "Five Points" Tammany Hall, Rector's, Grand Central station, City Hall, Bowling Green, Times Square Subway station, Woolworth building, the Tombs and other famous spots were used as the background for the dramatic action of the piece with the result that the picture is almost as valuable from an historic standpoint as from the entertainment angle.

"The Shadows of a Great City" will be followed on the Metro program by Mme. Olga Petrova, in "The Heart of a Painted Woman," a gripping dramatic concoction wherein the famous star has full opportunity to give way to her unlimited emotional powers. "The Heart of a Painted Woman" will be the April 12 unit on the Metro program to be followed by the next B. A. Rolfe production of a former stage success "The Cowboy and the Lady" with S. Miller Kent, famous for his "Raffles," etc. and Helen Case. In "The Cowboy and the Lady" director Noble of the Rolfe organization, more than took advantage of a liberal policy, with the result that a most attractively sumptuous production resulted. It will be released by Metro, April 19.

New Studio Defies Weatherman

The electric light Reliance and Majestic studio, on which work was started a while ago, has been completed and is the busiest section of the Mutual outfit in Hollywood, due to the fact that Mr. Weatherman has been unkind to the picture folks in Southern California for the past month or so.

The dimensions of this new studio are 60x68 and 20 feet in height. The walls are covered with white paint and the big switchboards make picturesque studio equipment. There are a sufficient number of Cooper Hewitts and flaming arcs to enable five producers to operate at the same time.

The completion of the electric light studio has caused the Mutual directors to cease worrying when they awake in the morning and heavy clouds and rain are visible. The studio lies adjacent to one of the large open air stages.

"Runaway June" Off for Bermuda

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

EPISODE nine of the big Reliance serial, "Runaway June," marks the beginning of a new series of events in Bermuda. June has at last consented to join Blye's party, and the close of the second reel sees her safely on her way—if the term "safely" be proper, considering that Blye is at the head of the expedition, and as much infatuated with June as ever.

A new character introduced in this chapter is Bert Villard, a repulsive individual impersonated by Frank Holland. The reception with which Villard meets is not one to bring him back a second time, unless he has an object to accomplish. The women, his wife, Tommy Thomas, and June, greet him icily, and June's dog, Bouncer, tears his clothes to tatters in an effort to show his feelings for the man.

If Villard's intention to be one of the party survives his first welcome he surely has a desperate object in mind. The introduction of this character and the new turn which affairs have taken broaden the scope and action of the plot considerably, and we look forward with interest to June's further adventures in sunny Bermuda.

June consents to go to Bermuda.

While out joy riding with the Villard chauffeur, Marie, June's maid, spies Bouncer, her mistress' collie, and decides to take it back with her to surprise June. The dog discovers Ned hiding in the shrubbery near the gate, and Henri and the gardener seize him just as he is about to jump out to stop Blye's automobile. The unhappy young husband is bound and gagged, and imprisoned in the loft of the garage where Marie hovers over him, fearful lest harm come to him at the men's hands, and even more fearful lest he should escape and perhaps succeed in finding his June.

The dog resents advances toward June.

Tommy Thomas tells her sister's suitor what she thinks of him.

Mrs. Villard's husband, Bert, arrives home unexpectedly, and is treated very coldly by his wife and Tommy Thomas. This puzzles June, and, in answer to her query, Tommy tell her all about the man. He is entertaining and has a way of securing one's confidence, but his love is not sincere. Some years before he was engaged to Tommy's sister, Nell, but, fortunately, the girl found him out in time to break off the engagement.

Later in the evening Villard finds June alone in the conservatory, and attempts to kiss her. Bouncer, her collie, comes to the rescue, and it takes the combined efforts of June and one of the servants to drag the dog away from the tattered, cringing figure on the floor. While at the dinner table June consents to join Blye's party on the trip to Bermuda. She now forces Villard to recall his acceptance of the invitation, threatening to make his conduct known if he goes.

Marie, thinking Ned asleep, leaves him in care of Henri and the gardener, and returns to her mistress. She is stricken with remorse over Ned's predicament, but feels that she has done her duty. Nevertheless, she cannot bring herself to tell June of his capture.

When his captors have fallen asleep, Ned unties his bonds, and escapes. He trace's Blye's party to a restaurant, but arrives there too late to overtake them. Just as the Bermudian, which has been chartered for the trip, casts off, June, standing at the rail, perceives Ned hurrying to catch the boat. Blye and Mrs. Villard lead her gently but firmly to a seat out of sight of the dock where she sits, brooding, as the picture ends.

Girl Crook Leads Band of Thieves

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

THE story of a district attorney who disregards sentiment and confidences in his scramble for prominence, and later realizes that the person whom he has betrayed is dearer to him than either wealth or position is strikingly pictured in the Edison three-reel drama, "Killed Against Orders," to be released on March 29. It might almost be said that the story is told by reflection, as the greater part of the action deals with a girl's attempt to save her father from prison, and her fight against the law after failing. In both cases the crises resolve themselves down to the points mentioned above.

What little adverse criticism the production deserves falls upon the construction of the first part of the theme. It would seem that inasmuch as the developments in a large part of the first one and one-half reels are merely a prelude to what follows, the real story beginning with Durand's last "job" and his arrest, the first part is emphasized too strongly. The action sustains interest throughout, warding off dullness; but in retrospect the picture appears to be divided, rather than as one story with a big climax. Were a state mentioned in the sub-titles the striped convict garb might come under the ban, as it is gradually being discarded in prisons throughout the country.

Directed by Langdon West, Miriam Nesbitt is seen as Odanah Durand, later known as Ellen King; Bigelow Cooper, as the district attorney, Wallace Maynard; Robert Brower, as Odanah's father, Findlay Durand; Warren Cook, as the department store owner, Henry Wayne; Charles Stone; Ethel Lawrence, as Mrs. Stone; Robert Kergerris, as Ellen's lawyer, Jerome Marsh; and Frank Tenor, as Slim Harris. The photography is good which, unfortunately, cannot be said of the thieves' den setting. It is conventional in its arrangement, and is in direct contrast to the rest of the interior settings which evidence much care and no little taste.

Findlay Durand leads a double life. At home he is a devoted father to his daughter, Odanah, is prominent in society, and is supposed to be living upon the income of his investments. In reality, he is the leader of a band of thieves. Odanah discovers his true position one day, and begs him to give up the life and live honestly. Durand consents, and tells his confederates that he is through but they induce him to help them in turning one more "trick."

The police are tipped off, and prepare to capture the whole band. Odanah learns of it, and hastens to warn her father. Before leaving the den the master criminal warns his men not to bring guns with them. Coone is awakened by a noise downstairs, and investigates. One of the thieves who has disobeyed orders draws a gun and shoots him. Odanah and the others make their escape, but Durand is captured.

The district attorney, who has been courting

The trial in Edison's "Killed Against Orders."

Odanah, advises her to testify at the trial, telling her that it is her father's only chance for acquittal. She believes him, and is innocently the means of sending her father to prison. Then she realizes that Maynard has tricked her. Discouraged and disgusted with the recognized laws of justice and honor, Odanah undergoes a revulsion of feelings and takes her father's place at the head of the band of crooks.

Some time later, Odanah again meets the district attorney. By a clever ruse she has caused a department store detective to arrest her for shop-lifting. She proves to the superintendent's satisfaction that she bought the muff in question, and then threatens to sue. He falls ino the trap, and settles for a large sum. It is outright blackmail, and the detective suspects it. He brings in the district attorney, but the superintenden, fearing further trouble, will not allow the case to be investigated.

Maynard, the district attorney, calls on Odanah, whom he has come to realize he loves desperately. Naturally, she thinks him pretending, but takes the opportunity to test him by charging him to free her father. Maynard takes the case before the governor, and obtains a pardon for Durand. Odanah accepts this as sufficient proof of his sincerity, and consents to marry him.

New Edison Leading Lady

From the staid dignity of the acting of the old English plays of college dramatics to the dare-devil "stunts" of motion picture actress is a big leap—but one that Miss Margaret Prussing, the latest selection for leading roles in the Edison stock company, has successfully made with characteristic energy. Her career is unique inasmuch as, after making a successful debut on the legitimate stage while still a college girl, she left the stage to go back to complete her course of two years more at Bryn Mawr. Eight or nine old English dramas are staged by the Bryn Mawr students, for which they painstakingly prepare during a whole year. The plays are given at the famous May Day spectacle which is an annual event at that institution. In these her talent was uncovered.

Margaret Prussing.

Thomas Jefferson Joins Mutual

Thomas Jefferson, the well known forceful dramatic actor, who, as everyone knows, is the son of the well known Joseph Jefferson, of "Rip Van Winkle" fame, is to appear in Reliance and Majestic photoplays. Thomas followed his father, Joseph, on the legitimate stage in "Rip Van Winkle," and scored tremendously.

The first appearance of this splendid actor will be in the title role of a Reliance drama, "The Tramp," from the pen of Russell E. Smith. Supporting Jefferson in this single-reel drama are Miriam Cooper and Elmer Clifton, who were so excellent in D. W. Griffith's picturization of "The Clansman."

The title "The Tramp" suggests the main theme of this strong sympathetic Reliance release. He is the good old gentleman of the road—who is kicked around by the inhabitants of a country town. He overhears one night, in the tavern, a "fly" traveling salesman, who boasts of winning one of the girls of the town with false promises of marriage and flattery, with whom he is planning to elope that night. The tramp's better nature asserts itself and he resolves to save the girl—which he does, after going through a number of thrilling scenes. However, no one knows of his good deed—and he is only a tramp, who disappears down the road.

R. A. Walsh, who as a Reliance director is gaining quite a good bit of prominence, produced "The Tramp."

Middleton Estate Being Filmed

For temporary use of the California Motion Picture Corporation's big company, engaged in filming Bret Harte's story, "The Lily of Poverty Flat," for the screen, the magnificent 35,000 acre estate of H. L. Middleton at Boulder Creek has been turned over,—mountain ridges, redwood forests, wooded canyons, tumbling creeks and all.

In this vast theater, situated next to the famous State Redwood Park in the Big Basin, the episodes of the photo-play are being enacted. It is an ideal setting for the California film drama. The scenery is rated as unexcelled in the Coast Range. It is rugged, densely wooded, marked by lofty crags, precipitous gorges, gulches of Arcadian beauty, meadows and glades rarely visited by man, and giant timber which is as yet untouched by the hand of the woodsman.

Middleton formerly owned the Big Basin redwood forest, but, in recent years, has transferred title to this noble grove of sequoias to the State of California to be a permanent playground for the people of the Golden State. The Middleton properties, however, adjoin the Redwood Park, and, during the filming of "The Lily of Poverty Flat," with Beatriz Michelena in the title role, both the Big Basin and the 35,000 acres of Middleton's private holdings will be used to furnish the background for the screen-play.

It is on the Middleton holdings that "Poverty Flat" has been built in substantial style,—a whole village, lining a straggling street up a hillside. Twenty-five log cabins and frame dwellings have been erected just for this one production, and thousands of dollars' worth of timber have been used in constructing a piece of motion picture scenery which, for solid realism and heavy expense, has never been duplicated in the history of photo-plays. Pioneer residents of California, who knew the crude mining camps of the sierras and who have inspected the modern "Poverty Flat," have marveled at this extraordinary replica of a typical '49 gold-seekers' settlement.

Alliance Special Department

The latest development at the Alliance Films Corporation is the new special department. For some time Andrew J. Cobe, the head of the Alliance, has been making arrangements for the release of several special features in addition to the offerings on the regular program.

H. G. Kosch will be in charge of the new department. The first release is scheduled for March 15, when "The Pageant of San Francisco" will be offered.

Kennedy Faces Clutching Hand at Last

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

IN THE eleventh episode of the "Exploits of Elaine" entitled "The Hour of Three," the film patron will indeed find himself puzzled, for instead of one, there are two Clutching Hands in several of the scenes. One of them, the spectator quickly discovers is Craig Kennedy in disguise, while the other is the real Clutching Hand, the master criminal of the twentieth century, but so identical are they in every particular that for a time everyone will be puzzled as to which is which.

The scientific apparatus demonstrated in this episode is the famous telegraphone, an electrical device for recording a telephone conversation on a phonograph record when the party 'phoned to is absent from his office. Upon returning, he has only to start the phonograph, when he may be enabled to hear the exact words spoken over the 'phone by the party who called in his absence.

Another scientific instrument demonstrated in this episode is the selenium cell, an electrical contrivance that allows electricity to pass through it only when it is exposed to light. This contrivance is used by Kennedy to summon his followers when he wishes to call them without the Clutching Hand learning that assistance is being summoned.

As the story begins we learn that Perry Bennett, Elaine's lawyer friend, has decided upon a wrist watch as a suitable birthday gift for her. After purchasing the watch, Bennett leaves the timepiece to be regulated and a few minutes later we see another caller order a wrist watch identical with the one sold to Bennett.

The scene shifts to Craig Kennedy's laboratory where the scientific detective is demonstrating to his newspaper friend, Jameson, the purpose of the telegraphone, and learning that one of the female accomplices of the Clutching Hand resides in a certain apartment house, Kennedy tells Jameson he has arranged to install the telegraphone there, in the hope that through this means he will be able to learn what the Clutching Hand is doing, since he considers it likely the Clutching Hand will communicate some information of value to his female accomplice.

In the Clutching Hand's quarters, the purchaser of the wrist watch turns over his purchase to the master criminal, and that subtle scoundrel immediately affixes a small needle, smeared with a virulent poison, inside the watch in such a way that the revolving wheels of the tiny watch will thrust the needle forth at any designated time, and prick the wearer, thereby causing death. After setting the watch to project the needle at 3 o'clock, the Clutching Hand wraps it carefully in tissue paper and sends it to Elaine Dodge by mail.

Upon again visiting Craig Kennedy's laboratory we learn that Kennedy has secured a record made in the apartment where the telegraphone was installed and upon placing it on a phonograph, he is surprised to discover that the Clutching Hand has informed his accomplice that "the trick will be pulled off at 3 o'clock." Instantly Kennedy is aroused, as he feels that this means peril to Elaine.

By tracing the telephone number he finds the lair of the Clutching Hand, and, disguised as that criminal, Kennedy enters the rooms, after arranging with Jameson and a squad of police to raid the place when a signal is given on an electric bell which will be rung by means of the selenium cell that Kennedy carries in his pocket, and places near a window in the Clutching Hand's quarters.

When the Clutching Hand himself appears in the rooms, he is amazed to find another like himself already there. Kennedy removes the handkerchief that masks his face, and the Clutching Hand calls the game up. Kennedy's triumph is short lived, however, for the Clutching Hand then informs him that within twenty minutes Elaine Dodge will be dead.

The master criminal suggests to Kennedy that if the latter will permit him to escape he will reveal the method to be used in killing Elaine. Kennedy reluctantly consents, and as a reward learns of the ingenious mechanism in the wrist watch that has been sent to Elaine.

As he rushes from the quarters of the Clutching Hand, Kennedy raises the curtain at the window, exposing the selenium cell to the light and ringing the bell, which will summon the police. Ere Jameson and his squad of policemen can raid the headquarters of the crook the latter has discovered the wires leading from the selenium cell and vanished through a secret passageway that opens in the middle of his desk. Kennedy rushes out to Elaine's home and arrives there in time to snatch the watch from her wrist, ere the poison needle can perform its work, while the Clutching Hand, escaping to another room in the lair occupied by him, dons an elaborate disguise and saunters forth onto the street under the very noses of the police, who are vainly seeking him.

A Misleading Article

Editors of Motography: Will you permit me space in the valuable columns of your publication to call attention to a new annoyance that must be borne by the long suffering manufacturers of motion pictures? Not only are the business men, engaged in a great and important industry, badgered by special taxes, state and local censors, reformers, so-called, etc., but great injury is also given to their business by the misleading articles and stories that are appearing more and more frequently in the magazines and other publications.

It seems that the higher classed the publication the more ready and willing is the editor thereof to accept and pay for at highest rates the work of some writer, who, with superficial knowledge of the film game, nevertheless takes his pen in hand and dashes off a page or two of the "inside history" of the motion picture art.

The American people have been given the false conception by such articles that every motion picture manufacturer is rolling in wealth; and "millionaires made over night" is a most common and favorite expression. It should be stated here that motion picture manufacturers of the better class are business men who worked onward and upward and builded their industries after the manner followed by any other line of trade. Few of them are millionaires and one manufacturer, reputed to have made a million dollars in eight years, has been in the motion picture game for nearly twenty years.

Articles purporting to present facts as to the wonderful prosperity to be uncovered in the motion picture industry are not only misleading, but they tempt the unwary to invest in stock promotion schemes. Many have invested their savings in some "wild cat" concern only to lose their money.

A recent article in the Saturday Evening Post has created amusement among those who have long been affiliated in the motion picture industry. Here are a few pearls:

". . . One can do in pantomine in a foot or so of film more than he could do in ten minutes if his characters talked." (That is to say, allowing 150 minutes of actual open stage to an average play, all the business of that play could be put over in fifteen or thirty feet of film!)

To quote again: "Until then (eighteen months ago) none of the stars of the American stage, no good writers, and not any of the better plays had been exploited." . . . "The one-reel comedies and two-reel plays of the professional moving picture playwrights have small vogue today, though some of the smaller houses still stick to them."

Another statement: . . . "Apart from the aforesaid feature companies there are . . . and the Lubin Company. These companies have ceased producing short films and are now doing features."

Again . . . "The General and Universal Film Companies have also dropped the shorter film and entered the feature field."

And finally . . . "The vogue of the old moving picture actor has gone. His place has been taken by such favorites as Ethel Barrymore. . . ."

In view of the wide circulation of the Post, we think such statements are injurious to the film companies. The General Film Company has not dropped the short film. The Selig Company not only produces special features, known throughout the civilized world, but we also specialize in one and two-reel pictureplays. There will always be a demand for the shorter length releases of worth, for they add variety to the programs. Eighteen months ago many elaborate productions had been produced, including stage plays. The professional writer of motion pictures never enjoyed the prosperity that he does today. When the playwrights of the legitimate stage, the novelists, and the short fiction writers submit work, in nine times out of ten it must be put in shape by the "professional moving picture playwriter," so-called. There is also a great demand for his original work.

The vogue for the "old" moving picture actor is decidedly not gone. What actor or actress who today enters the motion picture work can claim popularity with Kathlyn Williams, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Stella Razeto, Maurice Costello, Crane Wilbur, Arthur Johnson, Francis Bushman and half a hundred other motion picture players?

The Lubin Company and the Universal Company have not dropped shorter films, but rather specialize in releases of one and two reels.

There are many axes to grind in any profession, but it ill behooves editors of standard publications to be deceived by the incorrect, misleading and frequently unjust statements of those writers who are in no position to speak authoritatively of the great profession of motion pictures.

The Selig Polyscope Company,

New Smallwood Lead

Miss Ruth Blair has been selected from among over a thousand applicants as leading woman of Smallwood brand of comedies, shortly to be released through the United Film Service. When the Smallwood Film Corporation decided that it was ready to secure a feature lead for its new brand, a contest was conducted with the idea of getting the typical American girl. The requirements demanded were that she be beautiful, have ability as an actress and screen well. Of over thirteen hundred photographs secured from all parts of the country, a selection of eight girls was made who were called to New York City for the final test. A well known artist, a sculptor and a representative of the Smallwood Film Corporation made the final selection. After all points were carefully weighed, Miss Blair was offered a contract for a period of three years which she accepted.

Misleading Literature

THE issue of February 20 of the Saturday Evening Post has now gone the way of all ephemeral literature; and doubtless even its editors would have difficulty in recalling its contents since other issues have superseded it. That particular number, however, contained one feature that gave it a more lasting notoriety in the picture business. We refer, of course, to William A. Brady's story of "Why I Went Into Pictures."

To have a story in the Post is quite a literary feat, and one usually coveted by those who write. Mr. Brady is not a professional writing man, but his article is interestingly written—as indeed it must be to make the Post. That, as it happens, is one of its objectionable features; for with the tremendous distribution that paper was able to give it, its mis-statements have become widely disseminated. A letter from a manufacturer's representative, which we print elsewhere, quotes some of the inaccuracies for which the article in question is responsible, and we need not repeat them here.

Mr. Brady, as a theatrical authority, is widely known—at least among those who take the problem of entertainment seriously. His utterances through any medium are bound to have great weight. The Saturday Evening Post is popularly regarded as one of the greatest of American periodicals. Its position makes its print responsible. With that combination, "Why I Went Into Pictures" has already done harm to the picture industry by firmly establishing a false impression, or several of them, in the minds of the public.

Editors of large, rich and influential publications get big salaries, not only for their ability to select interesting material, but for their responsibility in verifying the statements of contributors before their work is published. But even so, we must carry the burden back to Mr. Brady; for had he been less well known, or had his reputation been made by authorship along general lines instead of in theatrical circles, the editor would undoubtedly have exercised his censorial function. The fame of the writer in his art gave him the right of way in what the editor wrongly conceived to be merely a branch of that art.

Promiscuous writing on motion picture subjects, by those who either lack information or deliberately distort facts for their own ends, has already reached distressing proportions; and there is no apparent means of stopping it. The only suggestion we can make is that the motion picture interests do not neglect to send their emphatic protests to all publishers using that kind of material every time such articles appear. We cannot doubt that editors of responsible publications want only authentic "copy"; and a series of such protests should have the effect of putting them on their guard and induce them to check up more carefully the statements of even well known contributors.

The Too-Realistic Pictures

OUR neighbor to the north, that alien but sisterly dominion separated from us by four thousand miles of unfortified, ungarrisoned boundary, is the one representative of the New World that is called upon to furnish men for the great war. Canada's recruiting offices are busy places these days; and the task of getting men is not always easy, for the New World man is constructive by nature, and war is destructive.

The business of recruiting volunteers depends very largely upon the "glory and panoply of war." It is necessary to make men see the glamour, not the grewsomeness; the patriotism, not the pain; the heroism, not the horror of war. And so Canada has written "forbidden" across all motion pictures from the seat of war; the real pictures, that show conditions as they are. No exhibitor in all the dominion must show these films, lest men be overcome by horror and refuse to take up arms against their fellows.

The Chicago Tribune, in its intellectual way, thinks the Canadian Parliament has made an error in its psychological reckoning; that the picture-going populace would never patronize an honest and consequently terrible war picture while a neighboring house was showing one of the glamourous, glorious, panoplied kind. The point may be well taken; no doubt people prefer the pleasanter picture, and select it when they have a choice. Perhaps Canada was over-zealous; but we are not so sure.

Realism is the one abiding virtue of motion pictures. It has made for them their most enthusiastic friends and their most bitter enemies. They are the great impartial recorders of truth; whatever is set before the camera must appear upon the screen. That the dominion parliament recognizes that fact is a tribute, a compliment. It is not, unfortunately, the kind of recognition that brings shekels to the coffers of the exhibitor.

There is, however, a cheerful side to the situation. The order is censorship, pure and simple; and as such, it is not nearly so arbitrary and unreasonable as some of the censorship orders enjoyed by exhibitors in our own dear U. S. The Canadian exhibitor can still show anything except the too-realistic war pictures; while in some parts of this country he is hard put to it to find anything of any nature that does not offend the dignity of our solemn censor boards.

Take it all in all, if the exhibitor across the border is forbidden nothing but war pictures, he is lucky.

The Illegitimate Child as a Subject

IT IS a peculiarity of picture subjects that what is widely in vogue today will probably fall into absolute disuse tomorrow. Therefore to condemn any special momentary predilection of the producers is largely a waste of time, since their favor is apt to change while the ink is wet—which is, incidentally, why the pictures are always new and never pall on the public. But we cannot refrain from brief comment on the present unnecessary number of illegitimate children used to build dramatic scenarios.

The theme is old to literature—very old. It was old to pictures five years ago. Just why it was revived on so large a scale is a mystery. It is good enough in its way, but a little of it is enough.

Of course there is plenty of excuse for almost any motif that is taken from real life. Complex as we believe our existence to be, there are surprisingly few possible combinations that will make a plot. The eternal triangle has only two variations, and the maiden's betrayal must form a recognized plot basis. Properly done, it is perfectly acceptable to a high class audience; but when everybody uses it, and uses it repeatedly, it becomes objectionable.

We hope the subject will soon run out its popularity with the producers and be succeeded by a pleasanter, even if by a no less hackneyed, form of life portrayal.

Another Boost

Dr. Schurman, of Cornell, has a good word to say for the movies. In his opinion they help "make manly fellows of the students" who now pass their spare hours gazing at thrilling films instead of loafing in poolrooms. This is excellent news. By and by some great social authority will speak out and tell us what a world of good the movies are doing for the young people in country villages. They solve better than anything ever has before the problem of a wholesome and happy evening resort.

The five-part feature, "The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde," by Victor Mapes, is nearing completion at the studios of the Life Photo Film Corporation.

Just A Moment Please

Yep, the boss is gone.

By this time he's rambling through Universal City with Carl's party, giving things the O. O. and probably both eyes are bulging with wonder.

Thought we'd better explain lest you wonder at some of the stuff that may get into the book during the next few weeks. You know, Mawress, that old one about "when the cat's away, etc."

ANY CONNECTION, WE WONDER?

An ad in front of the Star Theater in La Crosse, Wisconsin, we are told, reads: "All children under 12 admitted for one fresh egg." And inside Muriel Ostrich is to be seen.

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

The World's Greatest Yarn.

By U. N. Derwood,
The World's Greatest Writer.
In collaboration with
R. E. Mington,
Another Famous Writer.

To the left appears the only picture in existence of the beautiful Sue Brett, who is even more talented than she is beautiful and who will appear in one of the important roles in "The Seven Suffering Sisters," the great serial now about to commence. Sue Brett was secured at enormous expense for this production only and will positively never again appear in motion pictures, on the legitimate stage, or as the heroine of another story. This will be your only opportunity to see or read of the talented Sue. When the last episode of "The Seven Suffering Sisters" is complete she will retire into the obscurity from which she has emerged, and no sum, however fabulous, will induce her to reappear. The great serial will be put on by "Di" Rector, the World's Greatest Producer, and will be photographed throughout by that wizard of the studio, C. A. Meraman. The storyization of the fascinating serial appears only in this column and in the sporting extras of The War Cry, so order your copy now in order not to miss a single episode of the adventures of "The Seven Suffering Sisters."

CAN YOU BEAT IT?

Friend Hildreth, of the invaluable Billboard, to whom we called attention last week on account of his story on the Reel Fellows' ball, tries to "come back" in the following issue of his sheet with another story on the same ball. This time we note he refers to Rapley Holmes, the three-hundred-pound star of the Essanay forces, as "Ralphey Holmes," so we guess Hildreth is still slightly dazed as a result of the festivities.

A Splendid Two-Part Selig Drama

BY CLARENCE J. CAINE

"RETRIBUTION," the two-part drama to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, March 22, grips one's interest mightily from start to finish and contains three or four well developed "punches" of the human interest variety. The appeal throughout is to the higher senses and never once is sensationalism allowed to dominate the life-like action, though in the hands of a less skilled director than Edward J. Le Saint this might have been the case.

Stella Razeto as Mary.

The cast is headed by Stella Razeto and her acting is a real delight, for she draws her character, that of a typical American young woman, true to life. Guy Oliver, as her reporter-sweetheart, Fred Huntly as Senator Collum, George Herandez as Governor Rann and Scott Dunlap as Waldo, give excellent support. The scenario was written in such a way that the situations give an almost unlimited opportunity for strong acting. For this reason the success of the photo-drama rested greatly with the players—and they made good. we believe this is a good example of the successful motion picture production of the future for it has the essential elements — a strong scenario, capable and understanding director and intelligent sympathetic players.

As the picture begins Senator Cullom faces not only political and financial ruin, but it is in the power of Governor Rann to send him to prison. The governor demands Mary, the beautiful daughter of the senator, as the price of his assistance. In despair Mary's father tells her that he is ruined unless she marries the governor. Mary says that she hates Rann and will never marry him.

Jim, Mary's lover, has called and, while Mary is telling him about her father, the governor is in his office with Waldo, a mysterious young hunchback, of whom the governor seems to be afraid. He gives Waldo money and the hunchback leaves sneeringly, showing that he is conscious of his power over the chief executive of the state.

Mary saves her father from suicide.

Mary returns to her father just in time to prevent him from shooting himself. She compels him to tell her the whole story and then says she will marry the governor in order to save him. Enroute to the governor to make a personal appeal to him, her automobile strikes down Waldo. She cares for him. Later she learns from the governor that she must pay the price for her father's salvation.

Returning home, she tells Jim that she cannot marry him. The governor, while on his way to Mary's home is spied upon by Waldo and followed. Jim, Mary's lover, is persistent, and has called to plead with Mary and the two men meet, while the hunchback witnesses Mary's illy-hidden despair.

Mary is sobbing in her grief when Waldo shyly approaches. He touches her shoulder, and his dog-like devotion comforts her. Touched by his sympathy, Mary tells him the cause of her unwilling engagement.

The wedding of Mary and the governor about to take place.

Waldo calls again at the governor's office and tells him that he shall not marry Mary. Waldo is offered money, but will not accept it. The governor's hired assassins follow Waldo and shoot him down at the door of his garret. He is not killed but remains in hiding until the day of the wedding. Just as Mary and the governor are to be wedded, Waldo followed by Jim, appears and cries, "He ruined my mother and then killed her and I have kept his secret—because I am his son." The governor slips away, and in his private office takes his own life.

Life of Baird Imperiled in Wreck

"THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY"

THE wrecking of an ore train furnishes a thrill in the seventeenth episode of "The $20,000,000 Mystery," the Thanhouser serial. The wreck is realistic and occurs at a moment when the interest is at its highest pitch, giving a splendid climax to the incidents which have preceded it. James Cruze and Frank Farrington are struggling on the train as it speeds along a high embankment and, when the camera is arranged to get it as it falls, the effect is startling.

The opening scenes disclose how, despite the fact that Captain Radcliffe thought he had secured all that was of value from Hassam Ali's old trunk in the previous episode, he had missed one important document. While the worthy captain and Madame Duval lay their plans to gain control of this other fortune of Zudora's, which still lies buried in the South African plains, another search of the old trunk by its owner results in the discovery of another and equally interesting paper. In a corner which the wily conspirator had overlooked, Zudora finds a torn fragment, evidently originally a part of her father's diary. "Rich diamond find," it reads, "near large flat-topped boulder 2,000 yards, S. E. by E. of second mile post from Zudora mine."

Her discovery makes Zudora very happy, yet had she known of the schemes, which just then were taking form in the mind of Madame Duval, in that lady's beautiful Grecian salon, she might not have felt entirely at ease. Had she been able to follow her, she would have seen the leader of the band, accompanied by Captain Radcliffe and Ike, one of her "strong-arm" aids, going to the home of a wizened old hag, who lives on Craig Island, a tiny patch of earth and rock in a little frequented part of the bay, which has been aptly called the "Island of Mystery." And here, after making certain arrangements which appear to be satisfactory to the conspirators' chieftainess, the party take leave of the grizzled guardian of the islet. Afterward, they go to see the old diamond-cutter, who is polishing the stones brought to him by Captain Radcliffe.

Meanwhile Tom Hunt, the detective, with Jim Baird has decided to follow the clue contained in the torn paper and go to South Africa. For a similar reason, Captain Radcliffe and Bruce determine to make the trip themselves, the more so, as they learn of the detective's intentions. Carefully disguising themselves, they book passage on the same boat with Baird and Hunt, whom they plan to waylay at the first favorable opportunity.

Zudora and John Storm, quite ignorant that anything is on foot, after saying good-bye to the detective and his companion, are returning from the pier, when they meet Madame Duval, as if by accident, although in accordance with her well-laid design. Having found nothing tangible against the clever adventuress, Zudora has entirely ceased to suspect her of complicity in the plot against her fortune and herself, and so when the beautiful schemer invites her for a spin in her big automobile, Zudora willingly accepts, although Storm is not altogether satisfied at the arrangement. But he laughs at his own fears, feeling that he is over-cautious and that nothing can happen to his sweetheart in broad daylight and in the open.

Yet in this he is mistaken. The machine has not gone far, when in passing a lonely wharf, it is suddenly surrounded by a group of masked men. The two women are dragged out of the car, their screams being choked off by the ruffians, who hurriedly carry them to a waiting motor-boat. This soon speeds away and in a relatively short time the party arrive at Craig Island, where Zudora is placed in the hands of the the old hag—a prisoner. Of course, the men are Madame Duval's confederates and the whole scene has been carefully staged to deceive Zudora.

In the meanwhile, in far-off South Africa, many things have been happening. Hunt has located the rich find, indicated in the writing left by Zudora's father, but discovering that they are being spied upon, he takes measures to throw Captain Radcliffe and Bruce off their trail.

In this he is not entirely successful, however, and Baird and the wily captain engage in a terrific struggle on top of a moving freight train. The men are battling desperately as the train speeds along a high embankment, and strain perilously near the edge. Suddenly, the fast-moving train leaves the track and crashes down the hillside, carrying the two swaying men with it. Captain Radcliffe is picked up unconscious, while Baird escapes serious injury. A day or two later, hurry calls from New York, the one from Madame Duval and the other from Storm, lead the four men to make haste to return to America.

Raoul Barre, Edison Cartoonist

Edison is to release regularly, beginning with "The Animated Grouch Chaser," on March 17, a series of animated comic cartoons by the noted French cartoonist, Raoul Barre. These will be considerably different, in several features, from some that have already appeared as the pictures will combine both acting by the Edison players and the animated cartoons, both being interestingly and funnily blended. Mr. Barre will personally stage the part of the picture devoted to the players so that the strain of fun will run consistently through the picture and work out his ideas perfectly. A new and clever idea that Mr. Barre has worked out is the movement—that is, animation— of the figures in the cartoons while he is still drawing them upon the fixed board before him.

Raoul Barre.

Brevities of the Business

That cupid sometime lurks in the exhibition rooms of film exchanges has beene proven by the announcement of the engagement of H. C. Mason, assistant secretary of the National Board of Censorship, to Miss Mary Hazard, a member of one of the censoring committees. Mr. Mason has a committee at the Pathe Exchange, 115 East 23rd Street, New York, one day each week to view the Pathe releases. Until Miss Hazard was assigned to this committee only several months ago the two were strangers.

Adele Lane, who was for so long one of the Selig Polyscope Company's leading actresses, has joined the Universal forces and will be featured in photoplays directed by Burton King at Universal City, Calif.

Andrew J. Cobe of Alliance, recently concluded arrangements with the Pageant Film Company whereby that concern became a part of the Alliance program. This company has already completed its first picture, "The Pageant of San Francisco," which will be released through the recently organized special department of the Alliance Films Corporation.

The Vitagraph Company's films of the various New York City departments and places of public interest, both historical and scenic, for exhibition at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, Calif., will be shown privately at the Vitagraph theater, 44th street and Broadway, New York, on Sunday, March 14, at ten o'clock, for the inspection of the commissioners and other public officers of the City of Greater New York.

In line with the infusion of new blood, the enlargement of the stage facilities and the addition to the weekly program of a three-reel feature, Edison has departed from its customary way of handling scenarios and has installed as its first scenario editor Arthur Leeds, well known as an authority on the photoplay.

Francis J. Grandon, the former Selig producer, who directed the "Adventures of Kathlyn" series, has been added to the already large producing forces at the Reliance and Majestic Hollywood, Calif., studio. Mr. Grandon is one of the original "Biographers." He drifted from the Biograph to the Lubin Company as a director, and produced a number of one-reel westerns for the Lubin firm. Selig Company was his next engagement, followed by Keystone.

Ann Kroman has joined Director Davis' company, making pictures for the Kriterion Program.

After much pondering and debating over a name for the latest arrival in the Horsley family, whose first view of the world was last Monday, the proud parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Horsley, have at last decided to call their young son George William Horsley, Jr.

Selig's "Diamond S" brand is prominently revealed at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, where several wild-animal exhibits from the Selig Jungle-Zoo are drawing big audiences each day and evening.

A realistic depiction of one of the big battles of the Civil War is a thrilling feature of "His Brother's Keeper," a Kay Bee drama produced for the Mutual program. It is incorporated into the story when David Stokes, an old veteran, tells his war experiences to Amanda, the slavey girl. Five hundred men were used in twenty "big" scenes.

Lillian Elliott, one of America's foremost character artists, has been engaged by the Olivor Morosco Photoplay Company to appear before the motion picture camera in "Help Wanted," which is now being prepared for the screen at the Bosworth-Morosco studios.

Director Eugene Nowland of Edison is confined to his bed from a severe attack of grippe. His illness prevented his planned-upon trip South.

Charles B. Dillingham, the theatrical producer, accompanied by Mrs. Dillingham and Ivan Cartell, the composer, were visitors last week as the guests of George Field, while Henry Otto and his company of players were making several scenes for "Reformation." The meeting between Mr. Dillingham and Mr. Field was the first since Mr. Field played understudy to Fred Stone in Mr. Dillingham's production "The Wizard of Oz" about nine years ago.

Barry O'Neil, who is directing the Lubin production of Clyde Fitch's powerful society drama, "The Climbers," has gone to Saranac Lake, N. Y., with his special company of Lubin players and will spend several days in the Adirondack mountains taking scenes for the play.

A striking proof of the excellence of the sound business sense behind the Pathe American business since Felix Malitz's appointment to the position of vice-president and managing director of the company is afforded by the fact that during his incumbency of only a little over two months the business has increased more than 50 per cent.

The National Billiard Protective League has sent letters to 80,000 proprietors of billiard halls in the United States commending the forthcoming athletic and physical culture films which will be released every Monday by the Selig Polyscope Company, beginning April 5. Among the films to be shown are scenes showing the scientific shots in billiards exemplified by Schafer, Hoppe and others.

Ralph W. Ince, one of the best known directors of the Vitagraph Company, took a company of Vitagraph players to Georgia on Tuesday, March 9, to work on the new Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," of which Gouveneur Morris is the author. Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Paul Scardon and Julia Swayne Gordon are the principal stock members who will accompany Mr. Ince. They expect to be gone a month or six weeks.

John W. Grey's six feet of genial personality and hearty welcome are now located in the 71 W. 23rd street office of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation, where he generates publicity and advertising ideas on "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" serial. "Runaway June," the big Reliance serial, was launched under Mr. Grey's supervision.

North American Film Corporation.—The stock of this corporation, which was allotted to the public, was very quickly sold and the amount was substantially oversubscribed. Purchasers who did not get in on the original allotment of preferred, carrying with it an equal amount of common, have already purchased on the basis of taking the preferred with 60% and 50% in common.

Syndicate Film Corporation.—This corporation reduced its capital from $100,000 preferred to $33,000 and from $200,000 common to $66,000. It is now expected their remarkable production, "The Million Dollar Mystery," will pay out approximately $700,000, while only fourteen months ago $100,000 was put into the enterprise.

Biograph Company.—There was fairly active trading last week in the stock of this company with sales at 52. Most of this, however, was confined to New York City and was not general in character.

Mutual Film Corporation.—Many stockholders are indulging in conjectures to account for the unusual strength in both issues, as many buying orders are in evidence, especially on the common, without any apparent available stock for sale. One of these conjectures is based on the hope that the dividend rate might be bettered in the near future. This writer does not believe that any such hope will be realized and would deplore it as bad business policy if the company allowed itself to be tempted to do what the New York Motion Picture Corporation did, and, apparently, regretted.

Peggy Burke, the beautiful model who posed for some of the girl's heads drawn by Howard Chandler Christy, Harrison Fisher and other famous illustrators, has become a motion picture actress. Her first appearance is in Thanhouser's, "A Newspaper Nemesis."

S. J. Honek, who has been in charge of the bookings at the local Pathe Exchange, becomes manager of the Chicago office of the Treble Clef Motion Picture Company this week. Mr. Honek has a large interest in this concern and under his able management it is expected the Chicago office will do a tremendous business. Announcement is made to the effect that he has already booked the Thielan Circuit for the Treble Clef service and other large contracts are in sight. Motography extends congratulations to the Treble Clef Company upon securing such an able manager, and wish Mr. Honek every success in his new connection.

Ross Fisher, one of the crack camera men of the Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, N. J., has been sent to the west coast to undertake the task of taking pictures of David Horsley's latest acquisition, the Bostock animals. Mr. Fisher has had experience in the handling of Mr. Horsley's trick double exposure camera and for this reason he is a necessary addition to his staff on the coast.

Betty Harte has joined Director L. B. Carleton's Alhambra-Kriterion Company, producing at Santa Barbara, Calif., where she will play leads.

Paul West's skill as a scenario writer is amply demonstrated in "Vengeance," a three reel Majestic drama. It was produced by George Siegmann and has Mae Marsh, Eugene Pallette and Robert Harron in its cast.

In releasing "Infatuation," the American Film Manufacturing Company will present to the picture loving public the film version of the only book which compelled David Warfield to read against his will, furnished Blanch Bates with the most fascinating story she has ever known and caused Frances Starr to term it "a deliciously dangerous tale." The story, which is an enduring tribute to the beauty and force of a woman's consuming devotion, is from the novel by Lloyd Osbourne.

The publicity emanating from Phil Mindil's office these days has grown to astonishing proportions. Two big, fat envelopes a week is the regular routine, not to mention what flanks it when he shows an unusual burst of speed. But why not? All he has to do besides this is to make everyone in the country acquainted with "Runaway June" and her activities.

The Thanhouser Club of New Rochelle, N. Y., threatens to soon be a "floating corporation." At a meeting held this week it was decided to move to larger quarters, and they will soon be snugly esconced in a nice houseboat near the studio.

A committee including many influential member of the Widowed Mothers' Association are arranging a benefit to be given at the Vitagraph theater, New York City, on the afternoon and night of Monday, March 15, the proceeds of which are to go to this charitable fund. The benefit will be under the personal supervision of Mrs. William Einstein, president of the association; Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton, Mrs. Nelson H. Henry, Mrs. William Grant Brown, Mrs. Robert Erskine Ely and others.

Henry Woodruff, the well-known legitimate star, is enthusiastic over his part in the four-reel picturization of H. R. Durant's western drama, "A Man and His Mate," now being produced at the Reliance studio by John G. Adolfi.

Fred N. Magrath, who has been the casting director for the Edison studio, has been promoted to assistant to Stage Manager E. C. Taylor. Alan C. Crosland succeeds Mr. Magrath in his former position.

J. Whitworth Buck, capitalist of St. Louis, Mo., has allied himself with his brother-in-laws, Theodore and Leopold Wharton, in the production of pictures for Pathe, and taken up permanent residence in the East.

Brinsley Shaw, the well-known Universal villain, has been cast for a comedy role, the first in his picture career. He thinks the experiment an interesting one, and is anxiously waiting to see himself on the screen as a comedian.

In Number Sixteen of the Komic "Bill, the Office Boy" series, taken from Paul West's humorous fiction stories, Bobby Feubrer assumes the title roll. Fay Tincker continues as "Ethel."

T. Tamamato, the Edison Japanese actor, recently lost both his wife and child. His many friends extend their sincere sympathy at his bereavement.

In producing "The Black Box" serial, Director Otis Turner, instead of finishing each installment before proceeding to the next, takes all scenes which occur in the same place through a group of four chapters and photographs them all while he has the players assembled.

Contract has been entered into between Thomas Dickinson and the Life Photo Film Corporation for the exclusive world's motion picture rights to the successful drama, "The Unbroken Road."

Chet Withey succeeded Tod Browning as James Hadley in the Paul West "Bill" series, when the latter assumed a directorship.

The various departments at Universal City, including the scenario, studio, ranch hands, artillerymen, cavalrymen, zoo boys, the various companies of actors, the clerical forces in the administration building, the hospital internes, the laboratory men and even the directors are contemplating a hot baseball season with the coming of spring. Universal City expects to organize eight full baseball teams from among the members of the various departments.

A. Dresner, who has been connected with many of the leading exchanges of the South, has been appointed manager of the Indianapolis Kriterion Film Service.

"Hypocrites," the extraordinary photoplay written and produced by Lois Weber for Bosworth Inc., was given a private showing at Tally's theater, Los Angeles, last week to a crowded house of invited guests, among whom were ministers and censors.

Jacques Jaccard, director of the Kerrigan-Victor company, who for the past week has been confined to his bed on account of a nervous breakdown resulting from too close application to his work, has so far recovered as to be now able to attend to the production now in progress.

Ed. J. Le Saint of the Selig studios, is producing a big three-reel animal feature. The working title of the photoplay is "The Empty Rifle." Razeto takes the female lead.

Henry Walthall, who recently completed work in a six-part feature at the Balboa studios, has rejoined D. W. Griffith's Mutual company at their west coast plant.

Owen Moore has been signed by Mack Sennet of Keystone to play opposite Mabel Normand in a series of romantic comedies.

Jefferson De Angelis, said to be the highest salaried musical comedy star who ever has entered the motion picture field, appears in the leading role of the two-reel Big U comedy, "The Funny Side of Jealousy," soon to be released.

The success of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company at its laboratories at Grantwood, N. J., in turning out prints with unusual color effects, has prompted Charles Hirliman, the superintendent, and Edward M. Roskam, president of the company, to make, for the benefit of the trade, a commercial motion picture color reel which contains every conceivable form of tint and tone.

J. P. McGowan, Helen Holmes and the rest of the west coast Kalem Company, who are making "The Hazards of Helen," are back from the desert and believe they have taken some very novel scenes.

With the concluding scenes of "The Duchess," the latest of the Madison-Gold Seal features to be produced at the Universal west coast studios, that company will be turned over to the direction of Charles Giblyn, former director of the Nestor dramatic company. With the consummation of this change in the companies, Murdock McQuarrie is to be put in charge of the Nestor company, in which he will continue to play leading roles with Miss Vernon in the leading feminine part.

Miss Irene Hunt, the popular film actress who appears in Reliance and Majestic photoplays, has secured a few weeks' leave of absence to go to New York to visit her mother, who is very ill.

Two hundred members of the California Fruit Growers' Association visited Universal City, Calif., this week and under the guidance of Abe Mundon and Tom Walsh, of the studio forces, the party was conducted through the various departments.

Augustus Carney, perhaps better known as "Alkali Ike," is now a member of the Mutual Hollywood studios. He will appear in comedy roles in forthcoming Reliance and Majestic photoplays.

Tuesday evening, March 9, was Edison night at the Strand Roof Garden, New York City. It is the first time that this Broadway dancing palace has featured any certain organization, though it intends, hereafter, to encourage the establishment of feature nights for the prominent clubs and fraternities in New York, and it is significant of the drawing power of moving pictures that a company of screen artists should be the first ones in the limelight of New York's most unique and conservative dansant. About twelve of the Edison players were present, chaperoned by Frank Bannon, and received a great ovation from the delighted patrons of the place.

H. S. Van Gorder, formerly of the Columbus, Ohio, branch of the General Film Company, has accepted a position as head booker with the Chicago Pathe exchange. Mr. Van Gorder has had a long and varied experience and MOTOGRAPHY is sure will prove a valuable man to the Pathe people.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News No. 19—Selig—March 8.—Class of girls in New York City church takes lessons in boxing; pictures of the Boston & Maine passenger train wreck near Claremount, N. H.; George Davis, Boston Braves pitcher, wins the strong man contest at Harvard University; American League Baseball team leaving for its spring training; the latest fashions by Lucile; four-masted schooner Brynhilda sails from New York flying stars and stripes; women become conductors on the new 'bus line, New York City; numerous views of the European conflict, showing some from the eastern battle front which are the first of their kind to arrive in America.

The Champion — Essanay — (Two Reels)—March 11.—The third of the Chaplin two-reel releases in which the inimitable Charlie appears in the role of a pugilist after applying for work as a boxing partner of the champion. He knocks out the champion with a horseshoe in his glove and later is matched to fight the champion's opponent. The contest goes to the limit and both are about exhausted when Charlie's bull-dog attacks the other pugilist and he is then enabled to win. Among the "supes" is to be found G. M. Anderson. Reviewed on page 437 of this issue.

Where's My Husband—Mina—March 11.—The only bright spot in Harry's married life is beautiful Mazie, his next door neighbor. Because of his wife's vigilance, however, he seldom sees the girl. One day he breaks away and hurries to Kidd's Rathskeller with the girl. His wife follows and brings him home. That night, after Mrs. Harry is sound asleep, Harry steals out to keep the engagement he made with Mazie, and again they hurry to the Rathskeller. Mrs. Harry wakes up suddenly, however, and asks the question "Where's My Husband?" She answers herself and hurries to the Rathskeller, where after breaking up the furniture and terrifying the guests she lights upon poor Harry.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 20—Selig—March 11.—Army officers testing the new radio station mounted on a motor truck, Ft. Meyer, Va.; Secretary of the Navy Daniels turns first spade of earth for memorial at Arlington, Va., national cemetery; "Millionaire for a day" McDevitt arrives in Boston seeking a bride; boy corn growers of various states visit Washington and receive diplomas from Department of Agriculture; Grace Darling arrives in Colon, Panama, and sees numerous things of interest; pickaninnies help in movement to clean up the city of Jackson, Miss.; War section, including views taken at Northampton, Eng., Berlin, Germany, and Marseilles, France.

Saved from the Vampire—Biograph—March 15.—Jonas Jazbo, a rural swain, loves Susan Sims, whose father has a passion for organ playing. A "he vampire" from the city steals Susan's affections and promises to elope with her in an hour if she brings her own lunch. Jonas observes what is happening and leaps onto the automobile but is thrown off. He attempts to arouse Susan's father, but the old man is of little help. So Jonas alone tracks the villain to the city and eventually rescues Susan after many comical adventures.

The Master Mummer — Edison — (Three Reels)—March 15.—Mary Fuller featured. The widowed Princess Isobel gives up her court rights to become M. Feurgeres' wife, but in doing so does not deprive her daughter of her rights. She dies shortly after the marriage and the Duchess of Britslaw schemes to keep little Isobel from taking her mother's position, by having her placed in a convent. Later Isobel, now a young lady, falls into the hands of Sir William Delahaye, one of the duchess' conspirators. The master mummer, Feurgeres, learns of it and shoots the man. Arnold Greatson, a writer, and friend of the actor's, takes the girl to his apartments and places her in the care of Mrs. Burdette, the housekeeper. She is happy in her new home and in a short time has captured the hearts of Greatson and his two companions. Several attempts are made by the conspirators to kidnap Isobel, but they are frustrated. Feurgeres dies, leaving a statement telling of Isobel's royal birth. She presents herself at Frederick's court and is restored to her mother's position. She yearns for Greatson and the simpler life, however, and giving up all, returns to the writer and becomes his wife. Reviewed on page 385, issue of March 13.

Love and Trouble—Essanay—March 15.—Sweedie and her beau hold clandestine meetings despite the objections of her employers, a young married couple. Her love affair affects Sweedie's cooking ability and, because everything she turns out is a little harder than granite, she is discharged. Before leaving the house she finds an invitation to a reception and both her and her beau dress up in her employers' clothes and attend. The punch bowl is the principal attraction at the affair and the pair are soon ready for any adventure which may come their way. They break up the reception, and when the police arrive to quiet the riot they flee. A chase on bicycles and in automobiles follows which eventually leads to the capture of Sweedie and her beau and their imprisonment.

Unfaithful to His Trust—Kalem—(Two Reels)—March 15.—Unfaithful to his trust, Joynes, cashier in a bank, defrauds the institution and when he is discovered places the plame on Burbank, the elderly president. Eugenia, Burbank's daughter, is engaged to Floyd, the prosecuting attorney, and though he knows it will cost him his sweetheart, the young man convicts both Burbank and Joynes. It is discovered, however, that Burbank was merely a tool of the real scoundrel and he is released, while Joynes is sentenced to prison for ten years. His fortune wiped out in the crash, Burbank takes his daughter and goes South, where he lives in a lodge near the edge of a forest. Heart-broken at the loss of his sweetheart, Floyd seeks to forget by working continually, and this brings on a breakdown. His physician orders him to go South and sends him to the same lodge at which Burbank and Eugenia are staying. The girl manages to keep both herself and her father out of his sight, however, and he does not meet her until one day she shoots at a deer and he is wounded by the bullet, which missed its mark. She then realizes how much she really loves him and when he recovers he is delighted to learn that all obstacles between them have been removed. Alice Joyce featured.

Patsy Among the Smugglers — (Twelfth of the "Patsy Bolivar" Series) — Lubin — March 15.—Patsy is reprimanded for his somewhat negligent conduct by the police chief, but is assigned to special duty when a detective asks for a "greenhorn" to aid him in capturing some smugglers. Patsy is dressed like a tramp and sent to the smugglers' cabin. They are easily thrown off their guard and he is taken in for the night. He has a dream in which he sees himself and Jack engaged in a fight with pirates on the sea, and just as they are about to force them to walk the plank Patsy wakes up screaming. The smugglers throw him out of the cabin, and when they see him telling the detective of what he has seen they shoot him in the leg. The officers of the law capture the smugglers and Patsy is taken to a hospital. The next day he is very blue on account of his wound despite the fact that Jane and his parents visit him and try to console him.

The Fork in the Road—Selig—(Two Reels)—March 15.—A costume production well acted and satisfactorily staged. Rudolph, the innkeeper's assistant, in love with Elsa, his employer's daughter, sets out to win his fortune in the world, and at a fork in the road falls asleep, and dreams that he takes one road which leads to a beautiful city, where by his deeds of valor he wins both fame and fortune and finally marries a princess, and in the other dream he imagines himself to be taking the other road, which leads to a city of misery, where he is mistaken for a murderer and condemned to die. He decides to return to the inn, and arrives there in time to save his employer and his sweetheart from a band of thieves. After routing them he gains the innkeeper's consent to wed the daughter. Bessie Eyton and Leo Pierson featured. See review on page 393, issue of March 13. N. G. C.

Mr. Jarr Brings Home a Turkey—Vitagraph—March 15.—Before they are really settled in Harlem, Mrs. Jarr begins housecleaning, and the things that happen not only shake up the Jarr family, but also the neighbors. Mrs. Jarr's mother comes over from Brooklyn to help her, and before she is in the house and hour a free-for-all word battle takes place, which ends when Mr. Jarr goes out, slamming the door. He visits the corner saloon, where a turkey raffle is taking place, and wins the bird. One of his friends plays a mean trick on him and substitutes a dummy for the real bird. Jarr returns home with his peace offering, but finds the door has been barred. He manages to get in via the fire-escape, however, and everything appears agreeable until mother-in-law discovers that he has brought home a dummy instead of a real turkey. Then things happen. This is the second of the celebrated "Jarr Family" series written by Roy L. McCardell.

After the Storm—Biograph—March 16.—Elmer Hilton visits the country and meets Mary Cooper, the daughter of a Quaker farmer. He wins the girl's love and is determined to marry her, but her father separates them and the breach is widened when Hilton is suddenly called back to the city by his mother. He is taken ill upon his arrival and begs his mother to get Mary and bring her to him. His mother goes to the Cooper farm, but learns that Mary, after confessing her guilt, was turned out by her father. As the years pass Hilton cannot forget Mary and their child, whom he has never seen. He devotes himself to good work among the poor and with a doctor friend, visits an orphanage regularly. He is attracted by a baby boy and offers to adopt the child, not knowing that he is its father and Mary its mother. Mary, when she is told that a rich man wishes to adopt her child, agrees, although it breaks her heart, for she feels that the child's future would be assured. Hilton takes the baby home on the same day that Mary finds an advertisement in a newspaper stating that her father has relented and that he wishes her to return to him. She hurries to the nursery and is conducted to Hilton's home by an attendant. The millionaire again meets the woman he has always loved. He folds her in his arms and vows he will not lose her again.

Her Country Cousin—Edison—March 16.—The Wadsworth-Housman comedy team has adopted Lou Gorey, a pigtailed and strong-armed lass, into their scheme of laugh making, and the result is a trio of fun-makers such as are seen in no other pictures. In this release Waddy and his wife Lou are visited by the latter's country cousin Artie. As the young swain is not familiar with city ways, Mrs. Waddy admonishes him to do as her husband does. Waddy is not in on the secret, and thinks that Artie's mimicry is a symptom of lunacy. The cruelest blow of all is when Artie kisses the maid. Lou, entering the room just then, thinks that he is following her husband's example, and straightway sets herself to the task of curing innocent Waddy of such practices. C. R. C.

When the Fates Spin—Essanay—March 16.—Jim tells old Mr. Long, the grandfather of Marcia, the girl whom he loves, that he has been cast aside for another by her. The old man, sitting by the fireside, tells him that it is the will of the fates and illustrates his meaning by relating the story of his own life. Years before in the South he had been engaged to a girl whom he had known all his life. Just before their marriage a Northern girl visited at his fiancee's home and when he met her he knew that the fates had decreed that they should marry. Financial reverses caused him to lose the Southern girl and he went North to work in an office. One day he learned that his employer's daughter was the girl of his dreams and not very long afterward they were married. As the old man completes his story Marcia comes to their side and tells Jim that he is the only one she loves.

Ham at the Garbage Gentlemen's Ball—Kalem—March 16.—Ham is the favored suitor of Mary, the mascot of the Garbage Gentlemen's Association. This does not please Bud in the least and he proceeds to scatter bricks about them. Mary presents Ham with a ticket for the ball, which Bud steals, putting a pawn ticket in its place. When Ham attempts to get in the ball he is thrown out. By putting the bouncer-in-chief out of business he finally gets in and the first thing he sees is Bud and Mary dancing and the way he handles Bud starts a general riot. The bouncer-in-chief recovers and starts after Ham, who flees for his life, followed by Bud and the rest of the dancers. The chase leads to a brick yard, where the air is filled with flying missiles for several minutes. Ham and Bud, armed with sledge hammers, finally take their places on both sides a narrow alley and as the remainder of the crowd rush by they are avenged for all that has been done to them. Finally they hit each other over the head and lie down to rest.

Here Comes the Bride — Lubin — March 16.—Attorney Reed is a young man with an infinite capacity for remembering business deals, but who cannot recall anything of a personal nature. When he receives a wire from his uncle telling him that he is to visit him, he suddenly remembers that he has been drawing an allowance from uncle for several months under pretense of being married, and knows that he will have to be married before uncle arrives, the first part of next week. He immediately proposes to an old country sweetheart, his stenographer, a social butterfly, and the widow who lives next door. The night set for his wedding to all the women arrives and he forgets the entire affair, but is reminded of it by a friend. He hurries home and finds the women waiting, his stenographer being the only one who is not accompanied by a disappointed suitor. It suddenly occurs to him that he has been in love with his stenographer for some time and he declares his intention of marrying her. The others, though they are somewhat disappointed, turn to their former suitors and the four couples decide to be married at the same time. Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman.

Sage-Brush Tom—Selig—March 16.—Tom Mix in a comedy production in which Tom aspires to become a motion picture star. Falling in love with an actress' picture on a postcard, Tom is later amazed to meet the lady in real life, when the picture company comes to the ranch. When he attempts to become an actor he is told that he must be prepared to accomplish such feats as did Ursus in "Quo Vadis" when he threw the bull. Tom ties a stuffed figure on the horns of a powerful young bull, and attempts in vain to throw it, while the members of the picture company give him the laugh from nearby. After his failure, Tom learns that the leading lady is already married, so destroys her photograph and returns to cowpunching. N. G. C.

From Headquarters — Vitagraph — (Three Reels)—March 16.—Rose Peters, the daughter of a detective who believes there is no excuse for crime, falls in love with her employer, William Brown. For a while they are very happy, but when another beautiful stenographer is employed by Brown he loses his heart to her. Rose sees the girl in Brown's arms and in a fit of fury she stabs the man. She hurries home, believing he is dead. Peters is sent upon the case from headquarters, but goes to his home first. His daughter's actions arouse his suspicions and he is convinced that she is guilty. After interviewing Brown, he knows that it is his daughter who did the deed, and starts home to arrest her, determined to let nothing interfere with his duty. When he arrives at the house, however, a telephone message awaits him saying that Brown has decided to drop the case and that no arrests are to be made. As soon as he is able to be around, Brown comes to Rose and asks her forgiveness for what has happened. When Peters enters he finds them in each other's arms, for Rose has agreed to become Brown's wife. Anita Stewart, Earle Williams and Anders Randolf featured.

His Desperate Deed — Biograph — March 17.—Burleigh and Grant are rival ranch holders. The former's cattle are condemned by the inspector, while the latter's are passed. Burleigh and his helper steal Grant's cattle and also take his ranch horse. When Grant's mother is suddenly taken ill he starts for a doctor, but as his horse has been stolen is forced to walk. In desperation he holds up the mail carrier and taking his horse rides for the doctor, dropping the mail pouches in the town. Grace, Burleigh's sister and Grant's sweetheart, visits Grant's mother while he is gone and cares for her. Grant returns to the ranch with the doctor and is followed by a posse which has been organized in the town. Grace has overheard the plans of her brother and when he also arrives at the Grant ranch and accuses Grant before the posse, she tells all that she knows of the affair and forces her brother to return the cattle. Grant is restored to his standing in the community and offers Grace his sincere thanks.

Seen Thru the Make-Up—Edison—March 17.—Jay Brown advertises for a wife, specifying that she must be homely. Jane Willoughby, a pretty widow, has an actor make up her face and arrange her hair to make her look as homely as possible and answers Brown's ad. He accepts her but later, seeing a picture of a pretty woman on the table, falls in love with it. Jane then takes off the make-up and Brown is delighted to find that his wife is pretty after all. The comedy element supplied by the actor and Jane's maid is almost as amusing as the main plot. On the same reel is:

The Animated Grouch Chaser—Edison—March 17.—Dyspeptic Daniel, a confirmed grouch, meets his Waterloo when he comes across a book of cartoons from the pen of Roul Barre. The bad humor which has served him so long and faithfully in making enemies and scaring waiters nearly to death fails to rise to the occasion, and Daniel laughs. It is a strange experience for him, but he finds it pleasant and discards his grouchy disposition for good. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Galumptious Girl—Essanay—March 17.—Ruth Stonehouse has the lead in this George Ade fable production and her work is quite pleasing. The story tells how a girl living in a country town had social ambition and how she visited her city cousin and learned all the new angles of society. Upon her return to the country town she found things so dead that she telegraphed for all her society friends in the city to come and wake up the burg. They arrive and the affair was one which no one in the village ever forgot. It broke late in the morning after the night before and the old fellows wondered why they had such awful headaches next day, not realizing that they had been drinking punch rather than water. The affair disgraced Madeline forever in the village and she was forced to go to the city and become the wife of a millionaire. Moral: The Heathen Are Seldom Grateful for the Efforts of the Missionaries. C. J. C.

The Trap Door—Kalem—(Two Reels)—March 17.—The girl detective and her assistant, Warrington, see Mrs. Churchill emerge from a jewelry shop and also see Tommy steal her handbag. When they tell the woman, however, she says that they must be mistaken, as she has lost nothing. Convinced that there must be something amiss, they follow her. She meets Tommy and together they go to a house in the suburbs. Here they part and Mrs. Churchill goes to a neighboring residence. Jean enters the house into which Tommy has gone, while Warrington follows Mrs. Churchill. Both make important discoveries which convince them that there are two of a band of crooks who have been operating for some time, but before they can take action both the girl detective and her assistant are imprisoned. The girl finally manages to snatch a pistol from the pocket of one of the crooks whom Tommy has met in the residence and her shots bring the police. After arresting Tommy and his pals the officers of the law hurry to Mrs. Churchill's home in time to save Warrington, who has been cast into a basement flooded with water, from death. Cleo Ridgeley featured.

A Tragedy of the Hills — Lubin — (Two Reels)—March 17.—Judge Tingley has raised Harry, the son of Drooks, an unscrupulous outlaw, as his own son. Twenty years before the story opens the Tingleys and Drooks engaged in a feud in which all the Drooks except Harry's father and Harry himself, who was then a baby. were killed. June, Judge Tingley's daughter, and Harry are greatly attached to one another, and the judge seeing this tells them that they are not related to each other. To cover her confusion June accepts the attentions of Burr, her dissolute cousin. Harry objects and when the judge interferes in a quarrel between him and Burr, Harry believes that the judge dislikes him on account of the ill feelings between their families, and leaves his home. Burr challenges Harry to a duel and after deliberating the latter accepts, naming John Gray, an old hermit of the hills, as his second. In his mountain cabin Gray finds old Drook hiding one day. The shock proves too much for the old hermit and he dies of heart failure. Drook, who is being pursued by a posse, changes places with the hermit and, while posing as Gray, is visited by Harry, who tells him of his affair with Burr. Drook kills Burr on the morning of the duel and fixes all evidence to point towards Harry's guilt, thinking him to be the son of Judge Tingley, whom he still hates. When the Tingley clan learn of the crime Harry is supposed to have committed they plan to lynch him. Judge Tingley and June learn of the affair and hurry to his rescue. Drook also learns, through the diary of the old hermit, that Harry is his own son and rushes to the rescue, arriving in time to take the bullets intended for Harry. He drops to the ground dead, just as June and Judge Tingley arrive and explain the matter to the members of the clan. June and Harry are reconciled.

The Puny Soul of Peter Rand—Selig—March 17.—A real "sob story," in which Franklyn Hall and Lillian Hayward are featured. Miss Hayward does some character work of note. Peter Rand, a vaudeville actor in a small-time circuit, is summoned home by the illness of his mother, who has been stricken blind. Peter's acting is so bad that he is unable to secure work in his home city, but for his mother's sake he works in the kitchen of a restaurant daytimes and returns at night to boast of his success on the stage, his mother being made happy by thinking her son is famous. She dies without ever learning of the deception, and Peter then returns to the bright lights. N. G. C.

Postponed—Vitagraph — March 17.—Although Jimmie, a professional "strong man," has not worked for six months, he persuades Lillian to elope with him, because her father objects to their keeping company. He has no money to pay the justice who is to marry them, and hurries home to borrow the fee. Upon arriving at his room he learns that a high-salaried engagement awaits him in Chicago and leaves at once, telling a friend to explain matters to Lillian. The girl, however, becomes angry and for spite answers a matrimonial ad of an old man. A week later, when Jimmy returns with a fat bank-roll, he learns of Lillian's folly and decides to impersonate the old man himself. This he does, but receives a shock when a wild westerner, carrying a six-shooter arrives and announces that he is Lillian's future husband. Jimmy and Lillian flee for their lives and arrive at the justice of the peace, followed by the westerner. The justice's spinster sister recognizes in the westerner her old sweetheart and a general "making up" follows. The justice is more than pleased when he receives fees for a double wedding. Wally Van and Nitra Frazer featured.

A Horse of Another Color—Essanay—March 18.—A beautiful lady arrives in Snakeville and both Mustang Pete, the baggage master at the stage, and Slippery Slim, his assistant, fall in love with her. They both ask her to go riding and she consents. Slim's horse is not quite as lively as Pete's, and when Pete gives him whiskey he gets drunk. Slim, however, changes horses while Pete is away, and when the fair lady arrives for her drive Slim is the favored one. Just as he is about to drive off with her, however, her husband arrives in town and Slim and Pete realize that they have been stung and comfort each other.

The Only Way Out—Lubin—(Three Reels)—March 18.—Rawls, an unscrupulous man, tricks Bertha Holt, a stenographer, into going to a hotel with him, but she escapes, leaving her pocketbook behind her, however. Time passes and Bertha marries Edward Gray, a worthy man, and they are very happy with their little daughter. Rawls writes Bertha and tells her that if she will come to his apartments he will return her pocketbook. Hoping to erase the only questionable act in her life she goes. Just after Ber-lady hears a shot and calls the police. They break down the door and find Rawls dead. Reed and Green, two detectives, are detailed to the case and are convinced that it is suicide, until Reed finds Bertha's pocketbook. He is a great friend of the Grays and visits their home that evening. While Gray is out of the room Reed gets Bertha to confess that she killed Rawls, but Gray, overhearing their conversation, insists that he is the one who committed the deed. Reed is about to allow Gray to escape, when Green arrives and they are forced to arrest Bertha's husband. At the trial Gray takes the stand and tells how Rawls attempted to trick his wife again as he did the first time and how he broke into the room and struggled with him. Rawls attempted to kill him, but the pistol was turned upon himself. The jury brings a verdict of not guilty and Bertha and Gray receive congratulations from the detectives, who feel that the act was justified.

As He Blew He Blew—Mina—March 18.—Homeless Harry descends from a freight car in a strange town and reads a notice offering a prize of $5,000 to anyone who can defeat the pugilistic champion at the Opera House. He plans to win the purse, but decides to have a nap before he undertakes the task. As soon as he has dozed off to sleep Smart Aleck, the village cut-up, places a toy balloon between his lips and as he snores and dreams of winning the $5,000 the balloon keeps growing larger and larger. Just as he lands the knockout blow on the champion in his dreams the balloon explodes and he wakes up with a sudden start. On the same reel is:

The Dove of Peace—Mina—March 18.—A timely cartoon picture by Harry Palmer, showing the trials of the wandering dove and its ultimate haven of rest.

The Battle of Frenchman's Run—Vitagraph—March 18.—Brady, the owner of a Northwest lumber camp, tells his wife and daughter, Bella, that he is going to take them to New York to see the sights. John, a master in the way of handling the broadaxe, is in love with Bella, but she keeps him in hot water all the time by flirting with him. He is heart-broken when she goes to New York, and when she writes that Count Martini, a Frenchman, makes love to her a delightful way he at once packs up his belongings and follows the Bradys to the big city. He arrives in time to find the count proposing to Bella, and treats him roughly. The count insists on a duel, and John agrees. A friend, who tries his skill with sword and pistol, advises him to flee, as the Frenchman is exceedingly skillful in handling these weapons. Having the choice of weapons, John announces that the duel would be fought with broadaxes, and when the men face each other the Frenchman flees in terror. John pursues him and is stopped only when Bella springs before him, forces herself into John's arms and tells him that he is the only one she ever loved. Dorothy Kelly, Charles Wellesley and George Cooper featured.

Seekers After Romance—Biograph—March 19.—Jack Benson, a civil engineer, writes his brother in the city that he wants him to find him a wife. Cleo, a waitress, overhears Jack's brother and friend discussing the letter and, as she is seeking a husband, determines to see what the engineer is like. She secures employment in his construction gang, disguised as a boy, and Jack and she become good "pals." Jack's brother sends Mildred, a society girl who is seeking adventure, to the camp and when she arrives Cleo is heartbroken, as she believes that her love is hopeless. She wanders into the woods and Jack, missing his "pal," follows. He finds her asleep beneath a tree with her long hair falling about her shoulders, and when she tells him her story he asks her to become his wife. Upon returning to the camp they learn that Mildred and Bill Wright, one of Jack's assistants, have fallen in love and soon plans for a double wedding are under way.

In the Shadow of Death—Edison—(Two Reels)—March 19.—Edward Earle, Bessie Learn, Frank McGlynn and Hal Wright play the principal parts in this thrilling drama. It is presented as a story told by an old watchmaker to a patron who takes an unusual interest in a large clock in the store. The clock played a most important part in the drama, being the hiding place of Lizette, who entered the jeweler's to steal a brooch which was left there by her lover. It seems that Lizette gave her sweetheart the brooch to have it repaired some time before. Since then her father was murdered, and circumstantial evidence points to the young Frenchman as the guilty one. Lizette knows that he is innocent, as he was with her at the time of the murder, but her testimony is barred as being prejudiced. When the brooch is found to be missing by the housekeeper, it is once said that the murderer stole it. For that reason Lizette does not want it found and traced back to her lover. She is discovered in the clock in which she has hidden, and is placed under arrest. One day a stranger enters the jewelry store with the pearl which is missing from the brooch. The watchmaker recognizes it, and furnishes the clue which enables the police to hunt down the real murderer of Lizette's father. C. R. C.

The Convict—Essanay—(Two Reels)—March 19.—Alice Dixon appears to favor Ellis Vamilla, a man addicted to drugs, in preference to Edward Maxwell, a worthy man. Dr. Simms, a friend of Maxwell's, tells Alice of Vamilla's true character and the girl turns to the man who really deserves her love. Vamilla determines to be revenged and with the aid of Edna Fairchild plans to cause the downfall of Alice's father. The adventuress also makes advances to Maxwell but is repulsed. When Maxwell learns of the plot to cause Mr. Dixon's ruin he tries to upset it, but instead is placed in a bad light before Alice's father. Alice is told of the plot by Maxwell. She goes to Vamilla's rooms to plead with him, but he attacks her and dies as they struggle. Maxwell forces Edna to confess her part of the plot, and when the coroner's jury vindicates Alice, Maxwell and her find happiness in each other's arms. Richard C. Travers and Ruth Stonehouse featured.

The First Commandment—Kalem—(Three Reels)—March 19.—The first of a series of three-reel stories based upon the Ten Commandments. John Marshall, a giant in the financial world, contributes to the church, but refuses to attend it as he considers money his god. Marshall's two children, Walter and Marguerite, are entirely different, the former being wild and the latter thoughtful and considerate. Because of Walter's constant requests for money he is disowned and marries Mazie, a show girl. Marshall determines to have his son divorce Mazie, but poverty has brought out the good qualities in both Walter and the show girl and they determine to fight it out together. Marguerite falls in love with Tom Pierson, son of an independent manufacturer whom Marshall has attempted to crush on several occasions. In an effort to separate Walter and his wife Marshall attempts to cast a bad light upon Mazie, but his plot recoils on him and innocent Marguerite is caught in the trap. This crushes Marshall and his financial rival, Eddy, takes advantage of the condition to ruin him. Only by a supreme effort does Marshall outgeneral his foe and then he is placed in a position where his future is in Eddy's hands. Eddy insists that Marguerite marry his son and Marshall is forced to agree, but Marguerite elopes with Tom. Walter, in the meantime, has become a father and occupies an important position in the Pierson factory. Eddy, angered, tells Marshall that he must destroy the Pierson plant, but an attempt to do this is frustrated by Walter. Humbled by his own son, Marshall sees light and although the following Sunday finds him a ruined man, it also finds him a happy one, for he attends church for the first time, accompanied by his son and his wife and his daughter and her husband. Austin Webb, Tom Moore and Marguerite Courtot.

One Law Breaker—Lubin—March 19.—Tom Jordan, one of the deserving army of the unemployed in a big city, and his little five-year-old daughter, Allie, are ejected from their dilapidated shack because they cannot pay the rent. He goes out determined to secure work, but instead he is arrested for a crime which he did not commit. He tells the young judge before whom he is tried that his little daughter will be found sitting in the park where he left her, and she can prove his innocence. A young widow takes Allie home with her, however, and because the child cannot be found where Jordan said she would, the judge sends him to prison. Time passes and the judge, who is in love with the widow, visits her and together they enjoy little Allie. Jordan is released from prison and sets out to avenge the wrong the judge did him. He hides in the shrubbery near the widow's home as he sees the judge approach, but just as he is about to shoot the man he believes wronged him, his own little daughter runs from the house and leaps into the judge's arms. Seeing her father, the child, who has known nothing of his misfortune, draws him and the judge together and instead of becoming a murderer, Jordan begins to climb the upward path.

Why Billings Was Late—Selig—March 19.—A comedy that will bring many laughs, due to the acting of Lyllian Brown Leighton and John Lancaster. Billings prides himself on always being on time, while his wife is invariably late. When they are invited to spend a week end in the country, Billings warns his wife she must be on time, though this seems impossible, as one dress after another that she tries on proves unsatisfactory. Billings, grown desperate, summons a taxi, and while waiting for its arrival goes outside with his pet bulldog. The dog starts to run away and Billings is forced to pursue it. Ere he captures the dog and returns home, Mrs. Billings has finished dressing and gone to the station. He arrives there just in time to see the train pulling out and his wife laughing at him for being late.

The Capitulation of the Major—Vitagraph—March 19.—Major Andrews, a gouty and retired military officer, governs his daughter, Lillian, with an iron hand. He insists on military discipline about the house, from the cook to the chief butler, and Jack, Lillian's sweetheart, finds anything but favor in his eyes, although he likes to tell the young man all about the European war. After Jack and Lillian have eluded him and gone to the golf links he puts his foot down completely on Jack paying attention to her and announces that in the future he cannot visit her. Lillian has a plan, however, and deprives the major of his cigars and drinks with the assistance of the family physician, who tells him that to live he must abstain from these luxuries. After three or four days of suffering from his greatest companions the major is desperate. Jack and Lilian steal into the room and tempt him with cigars and liquor offering to give them to him if he will agree to their marriage. Despite his comical efforts to defeat their plan he is forced to give in. Lillian Walker, Jay Dwiggins and Garry McGarry featured.

When the Tide Turned—Biograph—March 20.—Mordaunt, desperate because he cannot secure work or money to care for his sick wife, applies to an old college chum for help. His chum tells him that he will speak to his father and try to help him. Mordaunt returns home and falls asleep in a chair. He dreams that his chum gave him the keys to his office and told him to help himself, but when he visited the office he was seen by the janitor, who later discovered the head of the firm dead. He was suspected of the murder and thrown into a cell. At this point he awakes suddenly to find his friend's auto outside with a doctor for his wife, provisions for many days and an offer of employment.

For the Man She Loved—Edison—March 20.—Mabel Trunnelle, Edward Earle and Frank McGlynn take the principal parts in this drama of a girl who discovers a thief in her employer's office, and calmly confronts him, gun in hand.

In the struggle which follows, Emma fires the revolver, and breaks the glass in the fire alarm. The employer arrives in time to save Emma from the burglar, and the firemen, answering the alarm sent in by the bullet's striking the box, take care of the safe-robber and his accomplice until the arrival of the police.

The Western Way—Essanay—March 20.—G. M. Anderson, Lee Willard and Hazel Applegate do very creditable acting in this production. The exterior western locations are very pretty, and the story is so arranged that the element of suspense is well maintained at each crisis. A highwayman, after committing a robbery, escapes the sheriff's posse but not before he has been wounded by their bullets. In a weakened condition he takes refuge in a barn and is later found by the rancher who owns it. He cares for him and, with his wife, nurses the highwayman back to health. Several days later the rancher receives a letter from his brother in the east warning him that the police are on their way west to arrest him for a crime which he committed years before. The police arrive as the rancher is reading the letter to the highwayman. Because the man has been living straight with his wife and little girl the highwayman takes his place and tells the officer of the law that he is the man they want, thus saving the others' happiness. The Railroad Raiders of '62—Kalem—March 20.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series. Helen, the telegrapher at Lone Point, and Lockwood, the one-armed crossing flagman, are friends. He tells her a story of the Civil War, which explains how he lost his arm. According to Lockwood he was one of the members of Captain Andrews' railroad raiders, who were sent by the Union Army to destroy the Confederate railroad. The little party evaded the enemy's patrol and tore up the tracks for a considerable distance. Finally they were discovered by the Confederates and a train was sent in pursuit of them. They boarded their own train and a wild race for life took place. The fuel of the Federal soldiers gave out and, although out-numbered, they put up a plucky battle. They were forced to surrender, however, and the surviving men were made prisoners and taken to Atlanta. Later, eight of the raiders made their escape, Lockwood being one of them, though it was necessary to amputate his arm, while he was in prison. Helen Holmes, Leo D. Maloney and J. P. McGowan featured.

The Wayville Slumber Party—Lubin—March 20.—A hypnotist arrives in town about the same time that Mack asks the daughter of the local police chief to marry him. She consents and they leave for the justice's office, while the professor puts the chief to sleep in a store window. The chief's wife learns that Mack is an A. P. A. and rushes to the chief to get him to help her to stop the ceremony. She has difficulty in awakening him, however, but finally does with the assistance of the fire department and they proceed to break up the wedding. They cease to prosecute the newly-made groom when they learn that he is not an A. P. A., and that those letters are his initials. On the same reel is:

On the Road to Reno—Lubin—March 20.—Jack and Amy, a young married couple, quarrel and both determine to go to Reno. They board the same train without knowing it and through a mistake get the same berth. When Jack decides to retire that evening and crawls into Amy's berth she screams and the passengers rush to her assistance. They are about to throw Jack off the train when Amy protests, saying that he is her husband. The passengers, disgusted with both, have the train stopped and leave them beside the track in the middle of a barren stretch. They are satisfied, however, for the incident has reconciled them. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured.

Jack's Pals—Selig—March 20.—One of the best jungle zoo productions released under the Selig brand, in which C. B. Murphy fondles beasts of the jungle as though they were animals of the tamest variety. He appears in the role of Jack

Murphy, animal keeper at the city zoo, who is later discharged for drunkenness, brought about by Bill Morgan, who wishes to get Murphy's job. After his discharge, Murphy obtains employment in the city fire department, and one night after Morgan has thrown a lighted match into the hay barn, causing a fire, Morgan's company responds to the alarm and succeeds in rescuing the animals. The fire scene with the wild beasts raging in their cages is wonderfully realistic, and Murphy, after his reinstatement, fondles the pets in a manner that adds still another thrill. N. G. C.

The Millionaire's Hundred Dollar Bill —Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—March 20. —To back up his contention that human nature in general is selfish and dishonest, Ralph Brewster, a millionaire clubman, wagers a dinner with his friend, the district attorney. As a test they drop a $100 bill in the park with a note attached asking the finder to put the money to some good use. Helen Wynfort finds it and hurries to the dressmaker's to buy a new dress for the week-end party she is to attend. Brewster and his friend, who are watching, see the act, and the district attorney is forced to agree that Brewster has won. In the dressmaking shop, however, Helen meets Milly, a poor girl, who is in a fainting condition from hunger, and gives her a two-dollar bill with which to buy food, planning to spend the rest for her dress. Brewster and the district attorney see Helen giving the money to Milly and believing it to be the $100 bill Brewster declares himself the loser. Next morning Helen, whose conscience has bothered her, goes to Milly and gives her the remainder of the money she found. She attends the week-end party in her everyday clothes and Brewster, who meets her there, falls in love with her, because of the disposition she made of the money. She accepts his proposal, but when he mentions the test she confesses to him that she didn't do the good act in the way he believes. This causes him to admire her even more and he insists that she be married in the $100 gown which she had unselfishly denied herself. Leah Baird and Leo Delaney featured.

Mutual Program

The Lawbreakers—Reliance—March 1.—Jerry Miles, leader of a gang, is influenced to reform by Ruth Parker, who visits Jerry's invalid sister, Kate. Later, Ruth's father runs for mayor. His political opponent, Black, compels Jerry to steal for him certain incriminating papers from the Judge's library. Ruth discovers him. The gangster cannot explain his presence without revealing to Ruth her father's crookedness, so he remains silent. He is captured by the Judge's campaign leader, who leads him away out of Ruth's life forever.

And He Never Knew—Princess—March 5.—Rene, daughter of John Beresford, a bank president, is in despair because her father objects to her marriage to Boyd Townsend, who is poor. Boyd's uncle dies, and Rene arranges with her lawyer to have $50,000 of her own money placed in Boyd's name as having been left him by his uncle. Rene's father willingly consents to the marriage then. Boyd's first act is to have his "inheritance" signed over to his wife.

Ex-Convict 4287 — Reliance — (Two Reels)—March 13.—Malcolm Forbes, ten years after his discharge from prison, is hounded by a former cell-mate, "Sooty" Decker. Forbes finds his discharge letter, and is tempted to destroy it, but instead thrusts it into his coat pocket. The next day, in mending the coat, his wife, who knows nothing of her husband's former life, finds the discharge. Forbes misses it, and hurries home to find his wife grief stricken. Just previous to Forbes' return Decker steals the document, intending to threaten the former convict with it. He is struck by an automobile in the street, and dying, confesses to the minister, giving him the discharge. The minister arrives at Forbes' house just in time to prevent him committing suicide. Ralph Lewis featured.

In Wrong — Royal — March 13. — A young couple living in a boarding-house are about to be married. At the landlady's suggestion the girl locks up her wedding presents in the safe. That night she dreams that they are stolen, and, waking up, decides to go downstairs and make sure that they are all right. One of the boarders hears her, and, thinking her a thief, seizes her and wraps her in the portieres. This arouses the whole house. The fiance is horrified at not being able to find his prospective bride. When the police arrive, and the "thief" is revealed, the mystery is explained.

Caught by a Handle—Komic—March 14.—Horde, a gentleman smuggler, receives a tip from his confederate, Swag-

ger Tim, that he is to be arrested on leaving the ship. He conceals some uncut diamonds in the handle of Mrs. Riche's umbrella, but is seen by one of the ship's officers, who notifies his friend, Schly, a detective. The customs inspectors fail to find any evidences of smuggling about Horde or his baggage and release him. Mrs. Riche and her husband, the maid, Horde, Swagger Tim, and the detectives furnish no end of amusement before the diamonds are finally discovered.

Her Buried Past — Majestic — (Two Reels)—March 14.—Muriel Manning, a reporter, traces a mysterious murder, for the solution of which her paper has offered $500, to Mrs. Martin Madison, wife of the bank president. Madison holds a $500 mortgage on the Manning home, and is about to foreclose. Muriel is anxious to secure the reward, and wrings a confession from Mrs. Madison, who tells her the story of her life; of how she had been hounded and persecuted by Howard Trimble, a gambler, who was the cause of her early disgrace. Muriel is overcome with sympathy, and in her write-up mentions the murderer as "unknown." Mrs. Madison finds the mortgage which Muriel accidentally dropped on the floor, and induces her husband to cancel it, charging the amount to her account.

Little Bobby—Thanhouser—March 14.—This is a touching drama of recognized Thanhouser standard. Helen Badgely is seen as "Little Bobby." Others in the cast are Harris Gordon, Ethyle Cooke and Fan Bourke.

The Two Sentences — American — (Two Reels)—March 15.—A dramatic story of a judge's struggle between the letter of the law and an opportunity for revenge in which Harry Von Meter and Vivian Rich have the leads. Jim Rodgers, a law student, in love with Helen Wade, becomes a judge in the city, after she turns him down to marry Tom Carter. When Carter is arraigned before Judge Rodgers he is sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary, but later Jim runs for governor in order to be able to pardon Carter. Though opposed by Helen, he is elected, and finally carries out his desire. See review on page 441 of this issue. N. G. C.

The Reward—Reliance—March 15.—Mary Lang, daughter of a rich broker, runs away in search of adventure, first destroying all the photographs she has of herself. Hugh Grey, an enterprising young reporter, sees Mary's picture on John Barrick's desk, and pockets it. The next day when the story comes out about Mary's disappearance, Grey recognizes the new arrival at his boarding-house as being the lost heiress. She accepts his attentions, thinking that at last she has found real romance, but is rudely awakened to Grey's intentions when she finds her photograph in his possession.

She denounces him as a fortune-hunter. Grey determines to at least get the large reward offered by Lang for his daughter's safe return. He locks the girl in her room, and sends for Barrick and Lang. Grey receives a check from Lang, and a trouncing from Mary's lover for refusing to give up her photograph. The act awakens Mary to Barrick's sincerity and she becomes his wife.

In the Mansion of Loneliness—Beauty—March 16.—Irving Cummings and Virginia Kirtley are seen to splendid advantage in this little comedy drama, which depicts the love of Mrs. Lane for children, and the annoyance which her husband feels for the same "brats." In her husband's absence, Mrs. Lane entertains the young children of the neighborhood, while Mr. Lane, in a distant city, promises to adopt the only child of a dying friend. Returning home with the little girl, Lane finds himself growing to love her, and instead of berating his wife when he surprises her entertaining all the children of the neighborhood, he joins in the jollification. N. G. C.

The Emerald Brooch—Majestic—March 16.—Walter Hayden, a salesman in a fashionable jeweler's, catches a man stealing a diamond ring, brings him before his employer, and is astonished when the latter lets the man go free. He tells Hayden that it is better to lose many rings than to let the public know that a theft is possible in the store. A few days later, Hayden sees one of the women patrons slip an emerald brooch into her bag. He follows her. On the street a pickpocket tries to steal his watch. He seizes the man, and compels him to relieve Mrs. Delavan of the brooch, which he takes back to the store.

The Master's Model—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—March 16.—Hugo longs to paint a great picture. He sees in Nita, a woman of the world, the very model for whom he has been searching, and induces her to pose for him. The next day she presents herself at his studio, wearing the flowing robes of the Madonna. Hugo's picture is declared a masterpiece. Tony, Nita's lover, grows jealous of the artist, and one day attempts to destroy the painting. Nita discovers him, and a desperate struggle follows. The artist's cottage is on the top of a high bluff. The two stagger through the door, and fall over the cliff. Hugo, returning, sees their bodies lying at the bottom of the ravine. He sees Nita in a vision as Madonna, the woman she might have been.

Competition—American—March 17.—A thoroughly enjoyable rural comedy in which Vivian Rich and David Lythgoe have the leading roles, and Jack Richardson is seen in a new character creation, that of "Josh Jones," and a make-up that even his warmest admirers will scarcely penetrate. When Myra Stubbs returns from the city she scorns the rural lovers who used to call on her and is planning to elope with Jim Daley, a city man, who follows her to the country. When Myra's father objects to him as a city dude, Daley buys the farm directly across the way and by modern farming methods succeeds in completely ruining the dairy trade of all the surrounding farmers. Stubbs and others are compelled to buy Daley out, and he then removes his false whiskers, and after securing Myra's hand in marriage discloses himself as the former city dude.

A Case of Poison—Broncho—(Two Reels)—March 17.—Louise Glaum featured. Mr. Barr is inclined to neglect his wife for the company of other women. Mrs. Barr determines to commit suicide, but finds that the thundering of the approaching trains bothers her too much while she is awaiting death on the rails. The drug clerk to whom she applies for poison, labels the bottle as such, but fills it with water. She drinks part of it, and falls in a faint. Edith, her friend, finds her unconscious, and frantically telephones her husband, who is dining with a strange woman. He is stricken with remorse, and drinks the remainder of the "poison." The berating he later receives from his wife convinces Barr that they are still in the land of the living.

The Balance—Reliance—March 17.—Mr. Merwin, a rich manufacturer, feels his end approaching, and, to atone for his sins, donates $50,000 to the heathen. Two crooks read of it, and attempt to rob the house of the Reverend Mr. Smug, who has the contribution in his keeping. Mike's sweetheart betrays him, and he narrowly escapes the police. Closely pursued, he comes upon a poor little flower-girl who has sold nothing all day, and is afraid to go home without at least a friend in the east says——

but, read it yourself, it's stronger than anything we might say about MOTOGRAPHY ourselves.

Gentlemen:

Am enclosing check for a renewal of my subscription to "Motography." I am an exhibitor in about the smallest way possible, yet I find Motography to be more real help to me than all the advertising, heralds card, etc., the feature houses send out. I sure do enjoy it, and as there is a sort of club in the building and as I keep Motography on my desk which is in the room, it is in as much demand and read as extensively by members of the organization as any of the current fiction found in the place. I always supposed country exhibitors had a kick coming yet I've never seen any howls published in any picture magazine, why is it? Can't they write?

Truly yours,

a half-dollar. Mike gives her a dollar bill. The police overtake him, and he is killed in resisting. Mr. Merwin also dies. The recording angel weighs the sins of the two men, and they about balance. Then the angel weighs the $50,- 000 donation to the heathen and the one dollar donation to the girl. Mike's last act far outweighs that of the rich hypocrite.

The Mill by the Zuyder Zee—Domino—(Two Reels)—March 18.—Surprised by the Spaniards the council of elders of the little Dutch village agrees to surrender. The Spanish officers are quartered upon the heads of the town for entertainment. Rondez, who is assigned to the home of Dirk Myneer, tries to make love to Elsie, Myneer's daughter. Meanwhile a spy brings news that Major Van Voort is on his way with reinforcements for the relief of the village. To distract the Spaniards' attention Myneer arranges a fete at his house. The Dutch reinforcements arrive and the invaders are put to flight. Elsie flees to an old mill for refuge, followed by Rondez. They struggle on the platform used in repairing the fan. The rail gives away, Rondez loses his balance and falls into the water below, where he is shot by the Dutch officers.

Only a Tramp—Reliance—March 19.—An old tramp plods into the village amid jeers and missiles from the boys. That night he is the means of preventing a young traveling man from eloping with one of the village girls. The next morning he leaves town. As he passes the girl's house she wishes to chase the boys who follow and throw things at him, but is prevented by her father, who says, "Oh, he's only a tramp."

The Phantom on the Hearth—Kay-Bee—(Two Reels)—March 19.—Agnes Larney runs away from home to join the circus in the next town. Her father, missing her, guesses where she has gone. Years before his wife deserted him to join a circus, but he has never told his daughter of his lifelong sorrow. She believes her mother dead. At the circus Mrs. Larney discovers that Agnes is her daughter, and, feigning illness, sends her for a doctor, thus preventing her from making her balloon ascent. As the basket is veiled the balloonist does not discover that his passenger is Mrs. Larney and not Agnes. Mr. Larney reaches the fair grounds just in time to see the balloon struck by lightning. He is in agony until Agnes returns from her errand. Mrs. Larney and the balloonist are killed and the girl returns home with her father.

The Slave Girl — Reliance — (Two Reels)—March 20.—Bob West, a homeseeker, and his daughter, Ida, are attacked by the Indians, and the latter is taken prisoner. Later she is rescued by Morgan, a slave trader, who puts her to work on the plantation under Sally, a mulatto. Mr. and Mrs. Marks buy the girl from Morgan out of pity, and she lives with them for twelve years. Fred Gilbert, the Marks' nephew, visits them, and falls in love with Ida. His unce and aunt are horrified, believing that the girl has negro blood, and the lovers are about to part forever when Sally, inflamed by jealousy against Morgan, produces a letter written by West before his death. It proves conclusively that the girl is white, and she becomes Gilbert's wife. Morgan is hunted down by a posse and shot dead.

Universal Program

Her Adopted Mother—Big U—March 9.—Mrs. Manville is neglected by her well-to-do son Charles and lives in an Old Ladies' Home. Charles tries to win the affection of his stenographer, Elsie Ellis, an orphan. Elsie feels that his intentions are not sincere and repulses him. Lonely, she is advised by her friend, Mrs. Wilson, a director of the Old Ladies' Home, of the presence there of a dear little old lady and suggests Elsie's adopting her. Arriving at her room one evening, Elsie is greeted by the sight of the little old lady knitting, in front of the grate fire. Elsie is overjoyed. Her happiness imparts itself to her employer. He asks permission to call. She consents and his first glance rests upon his mother, who receives him with gladness. And the supposition is that of an early marriage between Charlie and Elsie.

Animated Weekly No. 157—Universal—March 10.—John Ashley, train bandit, captured in Florida after a year's hunt; School children of New South Wales celebrating the day set aside for them; New York City detectives who outwitted anarchists in plot to blow up St. Patrick's Cathedral; Train carrying guests of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company leave for Universal City, Calif.; Jane Addams speaking against war in Chicago; War section, giving views of the troops of both Allies and Germans going into action and on the firing line; Cartoons by Hy Mayer.

The Refugees — Joker — March 15.—Two tramps take advantage of the present sympathetic feeling towards Belgium, and pose as Belgian refugees. The soft-hearted wives of the village respond nobly, and Mike and Pete live high until they are seen by Jimmy Hicks, editor of the village newspaper. He believes that they are impostors, and has the courage to prove it. His sweetheart begs forgiveness for doubting his word, and the "refugees" are handed into the custody of the marshal.

The Storm — Victor—(Two Reels)—March 15.—John Marvin becomes engaged to Helen Cartwright. One evening as he is calling upon her, her brother, Frank, who has just returned from abroad, enters the room. Helen introduces her brother to Marvin, but Marvin refuses to acknowledge the introduction, as Frank Cartwright is the man who once desired his, John Marvin's, widowed mother. In his library that night John Marvin ponders over the course he shall pursue. He recalls the death of his mother and his own vow to kill at first sight the man responsible for her degradation. He realizes what it will mean to him to perform this criminal act, but nevertheless, takes his revolver and going to the Cartwright home, asks for his victim. The two men come face to face. John Marvin is about to kill Cartwright when a sudden flash of lightning from the storm outside, strikes and kills the villain. Thus is Marvin saved from committing a murder.

The Blood of the Children—Gold Seal—(Two Reels—March 16.—Senator Woodward makes a stirring speech against child labor on the night before the Child Labor Bill is to be passed. Hewitt, Davis and others whose profits would shrink greatly were the bill to be passed, call on Woodward at his home, and offer him $100,000 to be absent from the senate the next morning. In answer the senator tells them what the passage of the bill means to him. When young he had worked in a mill himself and had seen his co-workers, one by one, stricken with consumption because of the lint entering their lungs. Alice, his sweetheart, married the mill foreman. Ten years later, he owned one of the largest mills in the South, and became rich on the fruits of child labor. One day a little boy was carried into his office, mangled by the machinery. It was Alice's boy and it died shortly afterwards. Everywhere he went he was haunted by the memories of the children who were sacrificed in his mill. He was overcome in time, and Alice, now a widow, found him lying on the ground, a babbling idot. She nursed him back to health, and he devoted himself to the task of abolishing child labor. The story has the desired effect and the mill owners leave, promising to back Woodward in his fight.

The Mix-Up at Maxims—Nestor—March 16.—Gason is the most popular waiter at Maxim's and is favored by the cashier to the chagrin of the head waiter who does all in his power to have Gason discharged. But Gason's popularity continues and he is made head waiter, the latter being fired. He plans revenge and arranges with three men to destroy Gason with a bomb. Gason frustrates their plans and becomes the hero of the hour, causing the head waiter and his conspirators to be put in jail. His triumph makes the heart of the cashier his.

Saved by Telephone—ECLAIR — (TWO REELS)—MARCH 17.—Harvey Randall, a reckless youth, is impressed with Belle Stanley's beauty, and takes her to the band concerts on the beach on Sundays. She is offered a position at a country school some miles inland, and there meets Jim Young, a telephone lineman, who has charge of the district wires. He falls in love with Belle, and installs a telephone in her room, making connections with a horn receiver at the beach, enabling her to hear the concerts. Randall calls on Belle, and, in a fight with his rival, is beaten. Some time later, Jim hears of Randall's plan to abduct Belle, and rides to warn her. Randall shoots him, but he manages to climb a telephone pole to cut in on the wires. In his wounded condition he tangles the wires, and connects Belle's telephone with her mother's. The girl is startled to hear her mother's voice praying for her safety. She escapes Randall and his gang and rewards Jim by promising to marry him.

Rough But Romantic—L-KO—MARCH 17.—Father was about to marry a homely girl when he saw his son's fiance and transferred his affections to her. The six-foot brother of the jilted girl made plain his intentions toward father, who changed his plan of action and ordered his son's fiance to her home, taking care to learn her address thereby. He arranged to have her kidnapped but his henchmen smuggled away the homely girl instead of the pretty one and it was only after a long auto chase that father discovered his mistake. Meanwhile, the pretty girl had become his daughter-in-law.

The Funny Side of Jealousy—BIG U—MARCH 18.—Jack Corona discovers a letter addressed to his wife and signed "Lovingly, Ned." He had never met his wife's long-absent brother and supposes the Ned is a sweetheart. He gets a time-bomb, follows his wife and her companion to a yacht, exchanges places with the waiter and a laughable series of incidents follow. He places the bomb under the brother's chair, engages in a fight with him, in which his disguise falls off, and his wife introduces him to his brother-in-law. He sinks into a chair, forgetting the bomb, which goes off and sets fire to his clothes. He jumps overboard to extinguish the blaze and is rescued from a watery grave on the promise to never again be jealous.

All for Peggy—REX—MARCH 18.—Will stakes his marriage to Peggy, daughter of his father's head groom, against the winning of the race by Ladybird, his father's horse. This is suggested by Brandon, Will's father, who opposes the proposed marriage. Later Will discovers that his father's certainty of Ladybird's winning the race is well founded and bribes Ted Baldwin, Peggy's brother and rider of Ladybird, to feign drunkenness at the last minute, telling Ted that his sister's happiness is at stake. Ted complies and Brandon is desperate when Peggy, who has often ridden Ladybird, dons her brother's suit, weighs in and wins the race. She slips away but is found by Brandon and his son, neither of whom had guessed the identity of the jockey. Brandon's delight in her pluck causes him to give his consent to her marriage with Will.

Raindrops and Girls — STERLING — MARCH 18.—Snoopy and his wife go shopping. Mrs. Snoopy chooses a pair of shoes which the salesman disposes of to a pretty girl. Mrs. Snoopy wrecks the store and she and Snoopy are caught in a rainstorm. He goes into a barroom and appropriates an umbrella. He is met by the pretty girl whom he carries across a stream. Mrs. Snoopy insists upon a like treatment and he drops her into the puddle, spoiling her hat. He takes her to a milliner's and there the pretty girl and Snoopy again meet. They flirt and Mrs. Snoopy wreaks vengeance on both the store and her husband.

The Black Peril—IMP—MARCH 19.—Margaret's coaxing fails to win from her father a beautiful black pearl he keeps in his safe. Her sweetheart, Jack North, promises to intercede for her but the colonel refuses to allow his daughter to possess the pearl, saying only somebody whose faith has been tested, is entitled to it. North wrtes Margaret of his failure, promising he "will get it yet." That night the colonel's nephew, who is in debt to Benson, agrees to help the latter rob the colonel's safe. They bind and gag North, hide him in the attic and place his tell-tale letter where it is found, thus attaching the blame to North. The latter, in the attic, breaks the faucet with his feet, the water drips through the ceiling and leads to North's discovery. He refers the colonel to his nephew for knowledge of the safe-breaking. Benson and the nephew quarrel in their attempt to escape. They are seized and the nephew confesses to the colonel who gives Margaret the black pearl, saying her faith in North has won it for her.

Down on the Farm—NESTOR—MARCH 19.—The farmer boy is madly in love with his sweetheart and they decide on a speedy marriage, but, as in days of old, her father demands that she marry a wealthy squire. Of course she refuses. Whereupon father tries to force her into the match. The farmer boy, however, interferes. Several laughable complications ensue, resulting in a mad chase, which ends in the marriage ceremony being performed by the parson as the couple are being pursued by the girl's irate father.

The Mother Instinct—BISON—(THREE REELS)—MARCH 20.—Marion Summers is shocked on learning that her suitor, Curlew, is keeping company with other women, and breaks their engagement. While on a yachting cruise later she meets Gordon Barnes, but pays no attention to him as her love for Curlew still lives. The yacht is smashed on the rocks in a storm, and Barnes swims to a nearby island with Marion. They are the only survivors. For a long while Marion fights off Barnes' advances, but finally gives up the struggle. Curlew is much affected by the news of the yacht's destruction for he still loves Marion. While on an exploring expedition a year or so later he stops at the island, and there meets Marion. He wants her to leave with him, but she asks time to think it over, telling him that a fire in her camp at night will be the signal of her consent. After a long struggle with herself she decides to remain with Barnes and her baby, and, gathering up a handful of dirt, puts out the fire.

courage to propose. The pretty girl teaches him the new dances and he devotes himself to them and to her, leaving 'Liza forlorn. Sister Kate comes from the city and teaches 'Liza the new steps and gives her tips on fashion. At the next dance 'Liza is the belle of the ball and Hezekiah insists on marrying her immediately.

An Arrangement With Fate — Laemmle—March 21.—Gretchen Carr, in love with Frank Conway, decides not to marry him until she can see her artist brother, George Carr, married to some nice girl. Carr's tastes run to girls out of his own class, so Conway has his pretty niece come on and pose as a member of a gypsy band. Conway takes Carr to the camp on the assurance that there he will find good material for his art. Carr paints the portrait of the supposed daughter of the chief, and when it is finished realizes he is in love with the model. Then the band is arrested. Carr goes to furnish bail for the chief's daughter and finds her an ugly looking girl. That night Conway calls and presents his niece. Carr discovers her to be the supposed gypsy and a double wedding is the outlook.

The Rider of Silhouette—Rex—(Two Reels)—March 21.—Tex Davis, a bad man of the Northwest, shoots the sheriff in a desperate revolver duel, and makes his way into the woods. He is startled at night by the sound of a baby crying. He cares for it, and the next day takes it to a cabin nearby. The mother is overjoyed at the child's return, and willingly hides Davis from a rancher who rides up when he confesses that he has killed a man. Davis does not know that the sheriff is not dead, nor does he tell the woman whom he shot. After Davis leaves a messenger arrives and summons the woman to her husband's side, for it is thought that the sheriff is dying. She falls from her horse on the way, and is found by Davis, who determines to risk lynching to see that the woman who befriended him reaches her husband. The sheriff, who has recovered, is angry on seeing the outlaw ride up with his wife, but on hearing of how Davis found his child and saved his wife, he relents, gives Davis a horse, and wishes him good luck as he rides out of town.

Pathe Daily News, No. 17—Pathe.—This issue of the topical shows the celebration of the Veteran Firemen's Association in New York City; $2,000 worth of shrimp condemned by the U. S. Government and dumped into the sea; view of the operations at Harvey, La., showing how the State is reclaiming 40,000 acres of swamplands; President Wilson at Washington's birthday celebration at Memorial Continental Hall, Washington, D. C.; blooded stock given to farmers at Mobile, Ala.; national guard sham battle at Peekskill, N. Y., and, in the war section, views of troops at Birmingham and Lancashire, England.

The Exploits of Elaine — (Episode Eleven Entitled "The Hour of Three") —(Two Reels)—Pathe.—In this episode the Clutching Hand sends Elaine Dodge a wrist-watch containing a poison needle that will cause her death, but Kennedy, by installing a telegraphone, learns of the Clutching Hand's plan, and later by facing him in his own den obtains full information as to what is to happen at the hour of three. He rushes out to rescue Elaine while the Clutching Hand dons a disguise and escapes from his den under the very noses of the police. See review page 447, this issue.

The Tale of a Shirt—Pathe—A slapstick comedy acted and directed by Donald Mackenzie. While dressing for his marriage a young man discovers that he has no clean shirts. The servant brings back word that the stores are all closed, due to its being a legal holiday. After much excitement around the house, during which he becomes smeared with soot from the stove pipes, the bridegroom secures a suit of clothes belonging to a stout passerby. The latter objects to wearing a barrel, hurries to the church, and trades back with the young man. C. R. C.

Ima Simp Has a Dream — Pathe — Ima Simp falls asleep in the office and dreams of wealth, pretty girls and events in which his own important self figures prominently. He wakes up to find the boss standing over him with the fire extinguisher in his hand. A good bit of the comedy is silly, but it will get by on its slap-stick merits. C. R. C.

Uncle Sam's Money Shop—Pathe—(Two Reels)—This is one of the most interesting and edifying educational subjects ever made. It was taken in Washington, and follows the government's process of making paper money from the time that the blank paper is received in one thousand sheet packages until it is counted and wrapped for distribution through the treasury. The photography is unusually clear for a picture taken without studio or sunlight facilities. C. R. C.

The Shadow of Doubt — Pathe — (Three Parts).—Anyone familiar with the past performances of the famous French artists, Gabrielle Robinne, Rene Alexander, and M. Signoret, has but to know that they are included in a cast to feel assured of an enjoyable picture. The theme does not strike out upon new lines, but its interpretation in the hands of these Comedie Francaise stars places it as a good production. A young wife becomes dissatisfied, thinking that her husband's strict attention to his profession signifies lack of interest in her, and foolishly accepts the advances of a young man whom she meets at a social function which she attends alone. Too late, she realizes her folly, and is sent away by her husband, who still loves her, but will not forgive her for risking their child's name. She secretly rents the house next to her husband's home, and watches her child at play in the adjoining yard. The little girl becomes dangerously ill, and the doctor pronounces her sickness as caused by mental rather than physical condition. The mother induces the nurse to let her mind the child. It shows immediate improvement. When the father learns her identity he forgives his wife, and the family is happily reconciled. C. R. C.

Stamps—Pathe — (Two Reels) — The details of how stamps are printed, perforated, cut and mucilaged are unknown to many because heretofore few, if any, have made moving pictures of this important department of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Three million stamps per day is an enormous output, but it is the regular routine in the stamp department. C. R. C.

Runaway June — Reliance — (Episode Eight).—Blye and his party hurry to the rescue when they see the machine in which June and Mrs. Villard are riding plunge over the embankment. All are taken to a sanitarium near by, but the chauffeur is the only one that is seriously injured. June, while recovering, conceives the notion that she would like to be a nurse, and through the doctor obtains consent from the owner of the sanitarium. Her first patient is the chauffeur, who tells her of his married life, revealing a new side of the eternal money question. One day June is summoned by the chief, and, to her surprise, finds that he is no other than Blye. Indignant, she wants to resign, but Mrs. Villard calms her and induces her to keep on at the sanitarium. In the meantime, Ned's detective has learned that Blye and his party are to dine at the Villard home that evening. Ned lies in wait near the entrance to the estate, and is about to stop Blye's machine when it arrives, but is seized from behind and borne to the ground while the car sweeps by. C. R. C.

Universal Special

The Black Box — Universal — (Two Reels—"The Hidden Hands")—March 15.—Two weeks have elapsed. Ian MacDougal is sentenced for the murder of Ella Ashleigh. Lord Ashleigh and his twin brother Edgar, alike save that Edgar is clean-shaven, attend the trial. Craig, servant and companion to Edgar, who has brought him from the continent, occupies himself with the small black box in the library, while the brothers are at the trial. Arriving home, Edgar, an anthropologist, receives word from the American Museum that the skeleton of an anthropoid ape, which he had sent to the museum for safe keeping, has been stolen. Quest is summoned to aid in the search and Lenora discovers the smaller digit of the ape's right hand on the window sill. Later, Ashleigh attends a reception at the home of Mrs. Bruce Reinholdt, whose son was his former pupil. A storm arises. Craig brings his master's raincoat and is allowed to depart by way of a short-cut through the conservatory and garden gate. The hostess, alone for a moment in the reception room, shrieks that two hands have floated through mid-air and snatched her necklace. Quest is summoned but no light can be thrown on the mystery, Mrs. Reinholdt insisting that the hands were attached to no body. Craig crouches outside the garden gate and hears the commotion. In a hut meanwhile, a strange character, hairy, wild and gibbering, keeps the company of a leopard and some monkeys. He is fed by a mysterious hand. MacDougal on his way to prison, escapes and Lenora, his wife, is again in danger. Craig seeks a Salvation Army headquarters. An awful force seems to have him by the throat.

American's "Ancestry" a Beautiful Film

The artist's love rewarded.

STARTING with an artistic triple-fade scene and disclosing one bit of beautiful California scenery after another, through its two thousand feet, till a wonderful closing scene on a rugged coast looking toward the Pacific Ocean is reached, the two-reel subject to be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company on March 22, entitled "Ancestry," is, if anything, even more beautiful than the best of the many photographic gems which have been released on the Mutual program.

Scene after scene is flashed upon the screen, each one of which could easily furnish the subject for an oil painting of exceptional beauty. Never once, even for a single scene, does this de luxe background lessen in beauty and, unless one is careful, the story is likely to be forgotten in the admiration of the settings. Beautiful gardens, immense stretches of mountain grandeur, quaint houses, set amid artistically arranged gardens and wonderful sea-coast views are but a few of the treats in store for those who see this picture.

The duke returns from exile.

Next to its beautiful setting, the acting is deserving of praise. Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood appear as a young man and woman who fall in love and portray their character with the same ease and charm which has made them such popular favorites. George Field has a character-heavy role and gives a most finished performance. Others, who are given less to do but who are deserving of mention for their work, are Josephine Ditt, Charlotte Burton, King Clark, John Steppling, William Bertram, Marjorie Cresswell and Americo de Marino.

The picture is one of those in which no auto or train is destroyed or no race for life occurs but which, largely through its interpretation and mounting, holds the interest from start to finish.

He believes her to be of royal blood.

The opening scene consists of three fades, as has been stated above. First a glimpse of the estate of the Duke of Lorenzo is given; this dissolves into the figure of Father Time—a suggestion of allegory; this changes into another view of the estate and then the story begins by showing the love affair of the duke's wife and a count. The duke discovers them in each other's arms and challenges the count to a duel. The two men meet in a garden overlooking the ocean the next morning and the duke emerges victorious from the combat. He is exiled as a result of the affair and leaves the country without his wife and their little child.

Again Father Time makes his appearance and twenty years slip by while he occupies the screen. In America we find the duke's wife and learn, through the story she tells a young woman she has met, that her daughter is dead. She asks the young woman to return to Italy with her and take the place of her dead child. The young woman agrees. They arrive in the land that is foreign to the young woman, whose name is Anna De Voe, and the villagers believe her to be the daughter of the duchess.

Harold Dean, an American artist, has obtained permission to sketch upon the beautiful grounds of the villa. As the duchess enters the villa, she has a mental shock which renders her mind a blank. Harold assists in resuscitating her, and he and Anna are attracted towards each other. Anna does not reveal her identity.

Soon afterwards the duke returns from his exile and is informed by his servants that Anna is his daughter; this she does not deny. Harold asks the duke for consent to wed his supposed daughter and is informed that she must marry in honor to her ancestors. Anna, who is in love with Harold, then disclaims the relationship and Harold is happy to find that no line of ancestry separates them.

Unique Captions in "Road O' Strife"

"Road O' Strife," the Lubin serial by Emmett Campbell Hall, release of which begins April 5, and in which Crane Wilbur, Mary Charleson and Jack Standing will be featured, supported by an unusually strong cast of Lubin players, embodies a number of novel and new features, one of the most important of which is the maintenance of illusion to an extraordinary degree. This is largely accomplished by means of a new idea in captions conceived by Mr. Hall and ingeniously worked out by Director John Ince.

As it is generally admitted that the caption or sub-title is the greatest crudity and most jarring defect in the photoplay, the "Road O' Strife" idea will be of paramount interest to the entire industry.

"For several years," says Mr. Hall, "I have been trying to get away from trite and banal captions. Finally it occurred to me that the key to the problem was the dialogue caption and the judicious use of screen letters and clippings, though this would necessitate the elimination of the drop-curtain caption, and entail a complete change in the established methods of photoplay construction. I have endeavored in 'Road O' Strife' to demonstrate the possibilities of my theory. In the fifteen reels composing the serial, there is but one title—'A Week Later'—which is not a speech by a character, and the single exception was for a particular purpose.

"To get the effect desired it was necessary to devise a method whereby the words could be conveyed to the mind of the spectator without his consciously reading them—in other words, in such manner that he would subconsciously assimilate the thought or fact to be conveyed. If we are looking at a person, and that person begins to speak, we do not cease to see the speaker—the eyes do not suddenly go out of business while the ears perform their offices, but just that, in effect, has been the demand made upon the picture spectator—to kindly go blind to the action while his eyes perform the functions of his ears and transmit a thought to the brain. To maintain a proper illusion, the spectator must be tricked into unconsciously using his eyes for his ears, and to accomplish this he must still be permitted to think that he is devoting his attention exclusively to the action.

"It is accomplished with utmost simplicity and yet so effectually as to produce almost the effect of audible speech by continuing the action while the necessary caption is being shown. The caption will be read without consciousness—the method of conveying the message to the brain being noted. That is what we have done in 'Road O' Strife,' and we believe that we have proven our theories correct. No one form has been followed—every caption has been carefully considered and brought on and taken out in accordance with its individual characteristics—some dissolve in and dissolve out, others appear abruptly and slowly fade, while still others merely flash on and instantly disappear, as a sharp, explosive 'No!' seems to do. We have undertaken to visually approximate sound effects."

Edwin Arden, Now With Pathe

Edwin Arden, one of the most famous actors of our times, has been added to the cast of "The Exploits of Elaine" and will appear in the second serial which will continue the exploits of the famous "Elaine." Such an announcement cannot fail to interest every follower of American drama since Mr. Arden brings to his work with Pathe a vast experience gained from playing leading parts in many of the most noteworthy American plays and in companies with the most celebrated actors and actresses of the last twenty years.

He was born in St. Louis of old Virginia parentage, his father being editor of the St. Louis Evening Republican, and an officer on General Sherman's staff. He became connected with the stage by accident. His father was appointed receiver for the Grand Opera House in St. Louis, and employed the boy (he was only sixteen) to attend to the finances of the company playing there. Not long afterwards he became assistant treasurer of Pope's Theater, now the Century. While holding this position he met Thomas W. Keene, who was playing there, and who took a great fancy to him. Young Arden was invited to go along with the great tragedian and play in Shakesperian repertoire. He accepted with gladness and from that day to this has followed the stage with unswerving devotion. Under Mr. Keene he became both leading man and manager.

Mr. Arden truly represents the very best in the present day acting. In himself he unites the great names of the past with the great names of the present. His value to the already fine cast of "The Exploits of Elaine" can hardly be over-estimated.

North American's Officers

The following officers were chosen as the executives of the North American Film Corporation at the election held this week: J. R. Freuler, president; W. E. Gerry, vice-president; S. S. Hutchison, treasurer; R. R. Nehls, secretary; and A. M. Cross, director.

The North American Film Corporation, which is to produce the $10,000 prize scenario, secured as a result of the Chicago Tribune's contest, has opened elaborate offices at 222 South State street, Chicago, Ill. The North American Corporation has arranged to have the picture produced by the American Film Manufacturing Company in its magnificent Santa Barbara studios, and while the two-reel episodes are appearing each week in the theaters of the country, the story of the picture will run in the Chicago Tribune and five hundred other newspapers allied with that journal.

You Are Invited to Visit California

SELIG'S EXTENDS INVITATION

IT'S all fixed.

You and the missus and the youngsters (if you have any) can pack up the suit cases and grips and get ready to see the wonders of the Pacific coast, including the big expositions, the beautiful California orange groves, and last, but by no means least, the wonderful Selig plant at Los Angeles.

And best of all it is only going to cost you a small fraction of the sum which you would have to spend yourself, if you started off on such a trip, for the Selig Polyscope Company is going to "pay the freight" for the greater part of the trip.

The Selig Special is going to transport you and your family to the Panama-Pacific Exposition and return, in a Pullman train de luxe, at a cheaper price than you can stay at home. The Selig Special will leave Chicago on Thursday, July 8, at 10 a. m., over the Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern lines. The cost of the round trip to you is the very low price of $118.00, including round trip railroad transportation, hotel accommodations at points of stop-over, transfer of passengers and checked baggage. If you desire to take side trips, special journeys have been prepared, totalling to an amount of $6.00, making the entire trip, including entertaining and side trips, amount to less than $125.00.

The Selig excursion covers a seventeen days' tour from Chicago to San Francisco, Los Angeles and other points, and return, going by way of the C. & N. W. railroad, and Union Pacific to Ogden, Utah, Southern Pacific to San Francisco, returning by way of Southern Pacific Coast line to Santa Barbara and Los Angeles, making trips to San Diego, to Riverside and Salt Lake City, D. & R. G. R. R. to Glenwood Springs, Royal Gorge, Colorado Springs and Denver; Union Pacific and C. & N. W. R. R. to Chicago. It will be seen that two widely different scenic routes are followed, going and coming on this trip.

Guests of the Selig Special will be permitted to enjoy three and a half days in San Francisco, a half day in Santa Barbara, three days in Los Angeles, where the wonderful Selig million dollar Jungle-Zoo will entertain royally all the tourists, one day in San Diego, two and a half hours in Riverside, one day in Salt Lake City, three hours at Glenwood Springs, one and a half days in Colorado Springs and one day in Denver.

The itinerary is as follows:

Leave Chicago, Thursday, July 8th, 10.00 A. M., C. & N. W. Ry.
Arrive Clinton, Thursday, July 8th, 1:40 P. M., C. & N. W. Ry.
(Crossing the Mississippi River by Daylight.)
Leave Clinton, Thursday, July 8th, 1:50 P. M., C. & N. W. Ry.
Arrive Omaha, Thursday July 8th, 11:40 P. M., C. & N. W. Ry.
Leave Omaha, Thursday, July 8th, 11:50 P. M.. U. P. System.
Arrive Cheyenne, Friday, July 9th, 2:20 P. M., U. P. System.
Leave Cheyenne, Friday, July 9th, 2:40 P. M., U. P. System.
Arrive Ogden, Saturday, July 10th, 6:25 A. M. (M. T.) U. P. System.
Leave Ogden, Saturday, July 10th, 6:40 A. M. (M. T.) So. Pac.
(Daylight ride across the Great Salt Lake cut-off.)
Arrive San Francisco, Sunday, July 11th, 10:00 A. M.

The guests of the Selig company will be permitted to remain in San Francisco three and a half days, enjoying not only the Panama-Pacific Exposition, but participating in such enjoyable recreations as sight-seeing automobile trips, a visit to San Francisco Bay, and a trip through Frisco's world-famous Chinatown.

Leaving San Francisco, Tuesday, July 13, at 12 o'clock at night, over the Southern Pacific, there will be a beautiful daylight ride along the Pacific Ocean to Santa Barbara, which will be reached Wednesday, July 14, at 1 p. m. Until 8 p. m. the same evening you can enjoy the sights of this quaint city and visit the wonderful Santa Barbara Mission.

Leaving Santa Barbara at 8 p. m., Los Angeles will be reached Wednesday, July 15, at 12:30 a. m. Three enjoyable days will be spent in the city of Los Angeles. The wonderful new Selig Jungle-Zoo will be thrown open and Selig motion picture stars, such as Kathlyn Williams, Bessie Eyton, Stella Razeto, Edith Johnson, Thomas Santschi, Tom Mix, Wheeler Oakman, Guy Oliver and others will be there to meet the visitors and they will be permitted to see motion picture plays in active production. They will also see one of the most wonderful collections of Jungle-Zoo beasts ever assembled and will be entertained in many ways.

An enjoyable side trip will be the Balloon Route, a thirty-six mile trip along the shores of the Pacific.

On Saturday, July 17, at 12 o'clock at night, the Selig Special will leave Los Angeles and arrive at San Diego, Sunday, July 18, at 5 a. m. Guests of the special will remain in San Diego one day and will visit the Panama-California Exposition.

Leaving San Diego at 11 p. m., the train will arrive at Riverside, Cal., Monday, July 19, at 5 a. m. It will remain at Riverside, which is the heart of the orange groves, until 9:30 a. m., and an automobile trip will be taken.

Leaving Riverside at 9:30 a. m. the party will arrive at Salt Lake City, Tuesday, July 20, at 11:30 a. m., and remain until 5 p. m. A sight-seeing tour will be enjoyed; also a visit to Saltair Beach. The wonderful Mormon Temple can also be visited.

Leaving Salt Lake City on July 20, at 5 p. m., the visitors will arrive at Glenwood Springs, Wednesday, July 21, at 6:30 a. m. You can remain at Glenwood Springs until 9:30 a. m. and a daylight ride through the Canyon of the Grand River will be a wonderful experience.

Leaving Glenwood at 9:30 a. m. the special will arrive at the Royal Gorge at 5:35 p. m. After a daylight ride through the Grand Canyon of the Arkansas, the party will arrive at Colorado Springs at 9 p. m., and one day will be spent at Colorado Springs, where a visit to the Garden of the Gods and Manitou will be made.

Leaving Colorado Springs Thursday, July 22, at 12 o'clock at night, the trippers will arrive in Denver Friday, July 23, at 4 a. m. One day will be spent in viewing the wonderful sights of Denver. This will conclude the sight-seeing tour by automobile. The travelers will leave Denver on Friday, July 23, at 10 p. m., and arrive in Omaha Saturday, July 24, at 4 p. m.; will leave Omaha at 4:30 p. m. and will arrive in Chicago on Sunday, July 25, at 7 a. m., affording plenty of time for those wishing to leave Chicago for their various homes.

The Selig Special will be palatially equipped. There will be one or more special trains, including a large baggage car to amply care for the baggage of the guests; a coach, twelve section drawing room sleepers and a parlor observation car on each train. Coaches will be electrically lighted and lady and gentlemen attendants will be present to look after the convenience of the tourists. Unescorted ladies will be cared for by responsible matrons.

There will be many and varied surprises for the party both going and coming from the Golden State. Artists have been engaged to furnish special concerts. There will be cabaret entertainments and other enjoyable details, which will prove pleasureable innovations.

A motion picture scenario will be made of the entire journey. This scenario will later be produced by the Selig Polyscope Company and every one participating in the trip will be seen in this moving picture.

There will be a daily newspaper issued on the train, furnishing every tourist with complete news of what is transpiring. At many of the principal cities en route, both going and coming, the train will be met by notables, the guests given the keys to several cities and nothing will be left undone to add to their entertainment and welcome.

By addressing the publicity department of the Selig Polyscope Company further details concerning the forthcoming journey and special literature will be furnished. It is the object of the Selig Polyscope Company to plan an enjoyable trip for its friends, exhibitors and others. It is not a money making proposition in any way. The small amount asked will not begin to cover the cost of the journey. The plan is purely to gather exhibitors and friends of the Selig Company together for an enjoyable trip to California, which will not only be entertaining, but something to remember pleasantly for the rest of your life.

The Gay "Runaway Juners"

Firmly believing in the old adage that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," Director Oscar Eagle who has charge of the "Runaway June" company now in Bermuda, producing the last four episodes of the George Randolph Chester serial, for Reliance, encourages his photoplayers to have as good a time as possible outside of working hours. Evelyn Drew, who plays Mrs. Villard in the screen story, is an expert swimmer and with her assistance, Mr. Eagle has organized a "Runaway June" swimming class. Norma Phillips, who plays June and Marguerite Loveridge, who plays Tommy Thomas, are rapidly getting into the championship class, although neither could swim when they reached Bermuda.

The company is quartered at the Frascatti Hotel on The Flattes outside of Hamilton and they were entertained in a body at dinner last week by the governor and his staff. A return invitation brought many of the British officers to a dinner party given by Director Eagle in the grill at the Hotel Hamilton.

Tennis and cycling are among the principal pastimes of the party and an interesting series of cycle races resulted in the established supremacy of J. W. Johnston, who plays Ned Warner, the deserted husband, and Grace Adey. The tennis honors went to Harry Weir, the assistant director in singles and to Arthur Donaldson, "the man with the Black Van Dyke" and Frank Holland, in doubles. Evelyn Dumo, who plays Marie, June's maid, won the ladies' singles and she and George Siddons, the chief camera man, carried off the prizes for mixed doubles.

One of the most popular of the "Runaway June" diversions with the Frascatti's guests is the vocal club, known as "The Mintys." It consists of a double quartet, made up of the Misses Drew, Phillips, Adey, and Loveridge and the Messrs. Arthur Forbes, Harry Weir, Marc Edmund Jones, and Dr. R. Ralston Reed of Morristown, N. J., who is stopping at the hotel. The balmy evenings on the piazza are made gay with the sweet singing of this melodic octette.

Brooklyn Exhibitors' Mass Meeting

At a mass meeting, held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, local No. 1, at the Hanover theater, 571 Fulton street, Brooklyn, on Wednesday, March 10, Lee A. Ochs, the president, acted as chairman. The Brooklyn exhibitors were re-organized into a local to be known as the Brooklyn branch of local No. 1 of the national organization. The following officers were elected: C. R. Martineau, president; I. N. Harstall, vice president; Charles Fischer, secretary, and William B. Fulmer, treasurer.

The meeting was attended by a representative body of exhibitors. Matters of adverse legislation were brought to their attention, and the importance of uniting for their welfare was strongly impressed on their minds. Much enthusiasm was evinced by those present, and all promised to do their share in improving present conditions.

The next step to be taken by the officers of local No. 1 will be to reorganize the Bronx exhibitors into a branch to be known as the Bronx branch of the above organization.

Gene Gauntier Joins Universal

Gene Gauntier, former star of the Kalem and Biograph companies, and of late the lead in her own company, has joined the Universal and has gone to Universal City, Cal., to take up her new work. Miss Gauntier is accompanied by Jack Clark, who will be her director and leading man. The engagement of Miss Gauntier was the last big piece of business which Carl Laemmle consummated before jumping on the train which was to take him to Universal City, where he opened this municipality as the first moving picture city in the world.

New Villain Appears in Elaine Serial

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

A BRAND new villain is introduced into the twelfth episode of the thrilling Pathe serial, "The Exploits of Elaine" so that now the fair heroine is being hounded not alone by the Clutching Hand, but by a Chinese adventurer known as Long Sin.

The crafty Chinaman seems capable of as much, or more, fiendishness as the other villain who has hounded her for so long, yet even he finds himself foiled by the keen wits of Craig Kennedy.

Those who are interested in the love element in the picture, will note with pleasure that Elaine, in spite of her quarrel with Kennedy finds it wise to appeal to him for assistance when she finds herself in the role of a murderess and Kennedy, though still indignant at her mistrust of him, yields enough to come to her aid and then gracefully bow himself out of her presence, after having saved her from a very real peril.

Having noted an item in the paper regarding the fair Elaine Dodge and her fortune, Long Sin, who, early in the picture, shows a greed for gold, plans to recoup his failing fortune by playing on Elaine's credulity. He gets in touch with Mary Carson, a social outcast of a depraved type, and together they hatch up a plan for blackmailing Elaine.

Preparing to use the detectascope.

The Chinaman explains to Mary how they can induce Elaine to stab him, in a moment of rage, and points out to her that the knife with which the deed will be committed is a trick one, the blade sliding back into the hollow handle and inflicting no real injury. He also demonstrates the use of a little bag of blood which he will conceal inside his loose blouse and which, on being punctured by the blow of Elaine, will apparently cause his own real blood to flow through his garment.

Mary Carson is arrested.

Elaine thinks the Chinaman dead.

Their plans arranged, Mary goes to call upon Elaine and induces her to to visit a prominent society woman who is to form a Belgian relief committee. With this as a pretext, Mary leads Elaine to Long Sin's apartment and then makes known to her that they have entered the wrong house by mistake.

At that moment the Chinaman enters the room and approaches Mary, who apparently faints with fear and is carried out. Elaine, cornered and completely at the mercy of the Chinaman, in her fear, snatches up a dagger that lies on a table and attacks the celestial, who falls to the floor, and what appears to be blood appears through his beflowered garment just over his heart.

Elaine, believing she has killed him, rushes with a shriek into the other room where Mary endeavors to calm her and, finally, with the assistance of the Chinaman's servant, the two escape from the house.

The Clutching Hand meanwhile has learned that another is interfering with his plans and pays a visit to Long Sin who explains to him in detail the method he has taken of blackmailing Elaine. Upon agreeing to share the profits of the scheme the master criminal promises his co-operation.

Later Mary Carson again visits Elaine and explains to her that Long Sin's servant was a tong man authorized to kill the Chinaman, but had permitted her escape because she had accomplished the deed he was to perform. He requests, through Mary, that Elaine supply him with $10,000 in cash, for which he will agree to dispose of the body and keep Elaine's secret.

Realizing that she is being blackmailed, Elaine appeals in her misery to Kennedy, and the latter advises her to appear to fall in with Mary Carson's suggestion and to take the money to the hotel where Mary has told her they are to meet the Chinaman.

Accompanied by Jameson, Kennedy then visits the hotel and secures the next room to that in which Elaine is to have her meeting with the Chinaman. With the aid of the detecta-scope, which enables him to see through the wall of the room, Kennedy sees Elaine transfer the money to Mary Carson and then by means of the telautograph he communicates with the clerk of the hotel on the ground floor, enabling him to summon the house detective and intercept the Carson woman on her way out of the hotel.

Kennedy then descends in the elevator and faces the captured Mary Carson, who is forced to return the $10,000 to Elaine. Kennedy then makes known to Elaine that he has analyzed the blood crystals found on the handkerchief on which she had wiped her hands after attacking the Chinaman, and assures her that they are the blood of a dog rather than that of a human being so that she can rest easy that she has not killed any one.

Society Leader in Lubin Play

Edith Ritchie, who is private life is Mrs. Stephen Morris, a well known society leader of Philadelphia, is playing the sympathetic role of "Ruth Hunter" in the elaborate production of Clyde Fitch's society drama "The Climbers," which the Lubin Company is filming in its Philadelphia studio, under the direction of Barry O'Neil, and in which Gladys Hanson will be featured. Miss Ritchie is a descendant of the Biddles on her father's side and of the Sommer Smiths on her mother's side and is related to most of the prominent old families in Philadelphia. She is a member of most of the fashionable city and country clubs of Philadelphia and Newport, and is a most charming hostess. Up until last summer her winters were spent either in Philadelphia or traveling in Europe and her summers at her picturesque cottage on Bay side at Newport. Before she became a Lubin photo-player Miss Ritchie had achieved quite a reputation as an amateur actress in Philadelphia, New York and Newport and she was always a prime mover in arranging and producing society plays for various charitable institutions.

Enterprising Chicago Concern

The Celebrated Players Film Company, at present located at 64 West Randolph street, Chicago, but which soon expects to occupy its new quarters on the third floor of the building at 207 South Wabash avenue, has been circulating a number of very high class hand bills and other advertising matter which is meeting with the unanimous approval of the exhibitors in their territory.

This company deals in feature pictures, handling the Illinois, Indiana and Iowa territory on all of the big films released by the Alliance Program and also several films made by independent companies. Its methods of booking films and the manner in which it serves the exhibitors who patronize it have won it many friends and this new campaign recently begun will doubtless have many more supporters.

During Carlyle Blackwell's short stay in Chicago the latter part of last week, he personally visited all the various theaters which have been showing the features in which he appeared for the Alliance Program.

Big Productions Coming

The annual tour of inspection being made by Adam Kessel, Jr., and Charles O. Baumann, managers of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has given rise to some interesting information concerning the plans to be pursued by that company throughout the current year.

Principal among the items of importance that came to light this week is the announcement that hereafter virtually all multiple reel productions made by Thomas H. Ince, director-general of the plant, will be released on the Mutual Program as special features. This arrangement, it is understood, will in nowise interfere with the already established release of three two-reelers a week, but will serve to introduce a new brand of productions. Just what the title of this brand will be is not definitely known, but the New York magnates and their director-general expect to decide upon a name within the next few weeks.

The New York Motion Picture Corporation already has on hand in New York one four-reel production for use in pursuance of the new plan. It is entitled "On the Night Stage" and is the medium through which Robert Edeson, William S. Hart and Rhea Mitchell will be offered in a tri-star combination. This feature, however, it is believed, will be held, pending the release of "The Devil," Mr. Ince's latest multiple reel production, in which Bessie Barriscale and Edward Connelly will be co-starred.

The noted producer, just at present, is bending his efforts toward the completion of "The Sign of the Rose," George Beban's international masterpiece, which will serve to introduce an innovation of nation-wide importance in respect to film production—a combination of the silent and spoken drama in ten reels and one act.

"The Devil" is said to be the greatest thing Mr. Ince has attempted in the nature of four or five reel productions. It is an adaptation, by Mr. Ince, in collaboration with Charles Swickard, of the famous play from the pen of the great Hungarian dramatist, Franz Molnar.

For stars as the head of the cast in "The Devil," Mr. Ince could not have selected more capable performers than Bessie Barriscale and Edward Connelly. Miss Barriscale is said to be at her best in the character of Isabella, and Mr. Connelly's interpretation of the difficult part—the title role—is declared by those who have seen private presentations of what film already has been made, to be a powerful portrayal of His Satanic Majesty. Assisting Miss Barriscale and Mr. Connelly are Arthur Maude, the distinguished English actor; J. Barney Sherry, Clara Williams and Rhea Mitchell.

Formally Open Universal City

HAVING GLORIOUS TIME

Universal City, Calif., Mar. 15, via Los Angeles.
MOTOGRAPHY,
Monadnock Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

The greatest make-believe place in America is very real and extraordinarily beautiful. Universal City was officially opened by President Carl Laemmle at 10:45 a. m., Monday, March 15, a solid gold key valued at $300, being used for the occasion. Twelve thousand people thronged the entrance during the ceremonies prior to the unlocking of the gates, the weather fitting into the occasion as though made to order. Gay in the splendor of white and green fluttered the flags of all nations and practically all nations were represented by the costumes of the player folk. A gorgeous display of daylight fireworks was heartily applauded. The great outdoor stages were given over to permanent sets of the several producing companies and the directors and stock companies met the visitors in open house parties. More than a thousand automobiles were parked in Universal City at all times during the day. Thousands of spectators witnessed Turner's "Black Box," McRae's flood scene, Ford's battle scenes, Christie's court-room farce, Kurtis' "Kurius Kreatures" in the making and the day was concluded with a grand ball in the electrical studio.

AS this issue of MOTOGRAPHY goes to press, Carl Laemmle and his guests are taking in the sights at Universal City, and from reports which have drifted back all are having the time of their lives.

Leaving Chicago the party proceeded to Kansas City, where it was met by a delegation of Universal boosters and both cordially welcomed and splendidly entertained. A daily newspaper published on the train, called the Laemmle Ledger, made its appearance ere the party pulled into Kansas City, and was greedily purchased by everyone aboard. It is full of snappy items regarding the various "trippers," and the editor is sure to be congratulated on its newsiness.

After leaving Kansas City the train wound its way toward Denver, where another big reception awaited the party. The special arrived in Denver at 6. a. m. Tuesday morning, March 9, and after the guests had breakfasted the party was taken for a sightseeing trip throughout the city, pausing at the Capitol building to call upon Lieutenant Governor Moses Lewis, and then being whisked away on a "rubberneck tour" of the parks and boulevards, returning to the Savoy Hotel in time for 1 o'clock luncheon. The early afternoon was spent in looking over the business section of Denver and at 3:45 o'clock the special pulled out for the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

It is hopeless to even attempt to describe the beautiful scenery through which the Universal special passed on the next day, but Wednesday, needless to say, was filled with sight-seeing, and the next pause made was at Albuquerque, New Mexico, where an Indian band rallied around the train, this reception being arranged by D. G. Campbell, Albuquerque's Universal representative.

The party paraded through the city's "white way" and was shown the sights in a royal manner, being introduced to notables without number and having an opportunity to invest in curios of Indian make and souvenirs of all sorts and descriptions.

Once more on the way, the special headed for Hollywood, California, and Universal City, where on Saturday, March 13, a cavalcade of motion picture cowboys, pony riding heroines and real Indians gave a western cast to Los Angeles' welcome to the Universal special. Isadore Bernstein and R. H. Cochran, together with a crowd of newspaper folks, boarded the special at San Bernardino and escorted the party to Los Angeles, where they were greeted with a band and orchestra, together with a delegation of pretty girls bearing flowers and fruit tended to emphasize the note of summer and festival.

Begins Active Operations

The Select Film Booking Agency, recently created to pursue an organized and definite plan for the distribution and booking of pretentious feature productions, is to assume immediate activity, with general offices in the Times building, New York.

George M. Welty, one of the best known booking managers in the theatrical profession, associated for many years with the Liebler Company, will be in direct charge of the booking department.

The elementary object of the Select Film Booking Agency will be to create and maintain a standard of distribution never before attempted, and far in advance of the booking methods now in vogue. It is apparent to the leaders among feature producers and exhibitors that at the present time no single feature production of unusual magnitude or attractive power can obtain the proper exploitation or specialization necessary with subjects that involve great expenditures of money and months of preparation. It is in order to provide a greater incentive to producers of gigantic feature subjects that the Select Film Booking Agency was organized, and it is therefore obvious that the essential purpose of the Agency will be to establish such conditions as will enable progressive feature producers to book their subjects in accordance with the relative merits of each production.

Toward this aim a systematic campaign has been inaugurated to align a number of important theaters throughout the country that are prepared and equipped to book a series of elaborate feature productions for indefinite engagements to be determined by the endurance of the popularity of each subject.

It is the first time in the history of motion pictures that a complete organization has been perfected to conduct a national booking system operated on the same basis upon which the foremost theatrical attractions are booked, and ready to be placed at the instant service of producers of features sufficiently distinctive to warrant extraordinary exploitation.

The first subject to be exploited by the Select will be the Famous Players Film Company's superb photospectacle, "The Eternal City," which is now playing an engagement of an indefinite run at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, where the local dramatic critics have termed it the screen's greatest dramatic achievement. This subject will be followed by other elaborate feature productions of a similar reputation and importance, to be secured from the foremost feature producers of the world.

Chicago Kriterion in New Quarters

The Chicago Kriterion Film Service has found its original offices in the Schiller building inadequate to carry on its business and new offices have been secured on the third floor of the Mallers building, 5 South Wabash avenue. This is one of Chicago's newest structures, situated in the center of the film district.

Terriss Forms Own Company

Tom Terriss, the well known actor, whose portrayal of characters from the works of Charles Dickens has won him an international reputation, has announced the organization of the Tom Terriss Feature Film Company, capitalized at $50,000, which will soon begin releasing high class photoplays for the American and foreign market. The company has been incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, with Mr. Terriss as president, L. T. Smith, vice-president, and James H. McLean, secretary and treasurer. Interested with Mr. Terriss in the important venture are a number of men who achieved big successes in the commercial field around New York City.

Tom Terriss.

Mr. Terriss, who is the son of the late William Terriss, for a long time leading man with Sir Henry Irving, controls the rights to a number of big American and English dramatic successes, and these successes, it is announced, are to be made the basis for the earliest of the new company's photoplay releases. Mr. Terriss will appear as the star in the various plays and will also personally direct the productions. His supporting company, which is now being engaged, will include a number of prominent players recruited from both the dramatic and moving picture stage whose names will add to the "pulling power" of the pictures in the houses of exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada where they are particularly well known.

The Terriss pictures are to be released through one of the big feature film companies with headquarters in New York City, the company to be selected after a careful investigation of the field designed to indicate the fitness of the releasing organization to handle photoplays of the more pretentious class.

Progressive Manager Busier Than Ever

W. L. Meyers, manager of the Palace theater, Waterloo, Iowa, who is said to be the busiest exhibitor in that state, made a flying trip to Minneapolis during the past week accompanied by his partner, A. J. Dibold, to secure a new pipe organ.

Mr. Meyer gained national publicity recently by buying a full page in his local paper to advertise a picture. This is just one of the many things he has set the pace for other exhibitors in, however. He is of the progressive type of picture house manager; never satisfied with business as it is, and continually seeking to improve it. Besides the theater mentioned above Meyers and Dibold own the Palace and Princess theaters in Cedar Rapids and are building a new $150,000 house in the same city.

Essanay's "The Little Straw Wife"

BY CLARENCE J. CAINE

ON March 23 the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company will release a three reel picture entited "The Little Straw Wife," which abounds in human interest and which will doubtless prove very popular with the "fans" throughout the country, especially those who enjoy the acting of Bryant Washburn and Edna Mayo, for these two stars are seen to splendid advantage.

The picture moves along slowly and naturally to its climax and is filled with little touches of human interest, which make every foot of it enjoyable. In the opening scenes the love affair of two children is shown and the child players enacting the leading roles in these scenes are very clever. It is not very often that such a simple yet effective incident as a children's love affair is successfully portrayed on the screen, but in this case it certainly is one of the most interesting parts of the picture.

In the second part of the story, when Mr. Washburn and Miss Mayo assume the roles of the lovers the interest is maintained equally as well. In the supporting roles Lester Cuneo appears as the heavy lead, and Thomas Comerford, Mae Edwards and Betty Brown in other parts. The acting of all is satisfactory and the "bit" each contributes, helps make the production a success.

The settings are of Essanay quality throughout and the photography is very clear at all times. The entire picture leaves a pleasing memory with one who sees it, and it seems safe to say that it will be welcomed by both exhibitors and the public. The story follows:

Zoe Ballentyne, the nine-year-old daughter of an invalid mother meets "Tuppy" Holt, a new neighbor's boy, and the children fall in love. "Tuppy" writes his proposal on an old piece of wrapping paper, which Zoe treasures. Zoe's mother dies and she goes to live with her aunt, who is a social climber. Fourteen yaers later, "Tuppy," now grown up and called by his real name, Dudley Holt, falls in love with Zoe, whom he does not recognize as his childhood sweetheart.

Zoe marries him under pressure of her aunt. Dudley, on the wedding day, suspects that Zoe doesn't love him and confronts the aunt with the lie she told him that Zoe did love him. Zoe overhears, and, disgusted at her aunt's treachery, runs away from her husband, and resumes her maiden name of Ballentyne. He pursues her and finds her in the city in time to save her twice from the attentions of two objectionable men. She thanks him, but tells him she doesn't love him and that she will free him whenever he meets a girl he loves.

She goes to St. Louis as social secretary in the family of the Razors, newly rich brewers. She finds them expecting the arrival of Dudley Holt, who is an old friend of the family and of whose marriage they have not heard. Mrs. Razor wants him to marry Claire, their daughter. Dudley, on arriving, agrees to help Claire to elope with Bret Jordan, a young man to whom Mrs. Razor objects.

Zoe seeing the development of the plot, thinks that Claire and Holt are going to elope. She warns the Razors just as Claire is escaping. Holt sees that at last his wife has realized that she loves him, through her jealousy for Claire. He confronts her with her love for him. She denies it and shows him his boyish scrawl on the old brown wrapping paper and says that she loves "Tuppy." He is delighted to inform her that he is "Tuppy," her childhood sweetheart.

"The $20,000,000 Mystery"

Episode eighteen of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" contains many beautiful scenes and also sustains the story-interest better than some of the previous episodes have done, doubtless due to the fact that not quite so many bits of by-play are introduced.

The main happening is the rescue of Zudora from the isle of mystery to which she was conveyed after being kidnapped in the preceeding chapter of the serial. Captain Radcliffe also figures prominently in this installment, as he manages to smuggle some jewels, which he has taken from the Zudora mines, into the country under the very noses of the heiress' friends, though the latter know of the attempt which is to be made.

Perhaps the most striking scene in the entire picture is one in which an ocean liner is seen driving through the waves. This was taken from a nearby tug and the effect is wonderfully realistic. Close to this scene in appeal are those photographed off the statute of liberty, New York harbor, when Jim Baird, Hunt and John Storm, the characters portrayed by James Cruze, Sidney Bracy and Harry Benham, pursue three of the plotters in a motor boat. These scenes are indeed thrilling, as the waves appear to be about to capsize both the crafts at any moment. The scenes at the diamond mines also deserve mention.

The rescue of Zudora from the island is well done and will hold the interest of any audience. The acting and photography are both of the best and the episode as a whole will doubtless please all who witness it.

The picture opens with Zudora a prisoner on the island. Captain Radcliffe is in South Africa, where he manages to secure many diamonds from the Zudora mines by bribing the men in charge. He begins his return journey and sends a wireless to his confederates, telling them to meet him in the harbor and he will throw the jewels overboard to them.

Baird learns of this plan, while Hunt learns of Zudora's place of confinement through the carelessness of the crooks. The men get in touch with John Storm and the three set out in a motor boat to rescue the girl and foil the plan to smuggle the jewels ashore. They succeed in freeing Zudora, but the crooks slip out of their grasp with the smuggled diamonds. The picture ends with Baird and Hunt in a speed craft, following the motor boat in which the plotters are fleeing toward shore.

New Horsley Printer Successful

David Horsley's latest invention, a duplex automatic step printer was perfected on March 1, three days before the inventor left for Los Angeles, and is now in practical use in the Centaur Film Company plant at Bayonne, N. J.

Mr. Horsley's new device is a development of the famous Horsley printer which has long been in use. It shows many radical departures from the original machine, and has certain definite advantages over printers of foreign manufacture. It is a solid and substantial affair, which does away with the long slide frame-up and eliminates many of the old style exterior adjustments, making the operator's work exceedingly simple and the whole machine fool proof.

The new device is to be known as the Horsley printer No. 4, being the fourth in the series of Mr. Horsley's printer inventions. It is duplex in construction, with an automatic light shift and "trouble preventer," which work upon a principle entirely different from any now in use.

Owing to the simplicity of the mechanism, one operator is able to take care of the duplex or double printer with greater surety and ease than is possible with the old style "single." The printers are arranged on a hexagonal stand with six positions. The negative is assembled in a complete reel—and adjusted in such a manner that the slack from the first machine is taken up in the second machine and so on in rotation through as many machines, up to 12, as prints of that negative may be required. The same lamp centrally arranged, supplies the light for all the machines, so that there can be no variation in the quality or strengh of the light, each machine of course having its independent automatic shifts. The time saved by this wizard-like device and its ingenious arrangement is in itself a highly valuable gain, but the quality of the work, its rock steadiness, perfect registration and easy adaptability will win it a place of honor among the greatest patents of the motion picture industry. Like all of David Horsley's inventions, the No. 4 printer from drawings to finished product was constructed in the plant of the Centaur Film Company, said to be one of the most complete in America.

New Lubin Studio

The biggest artificial light studio in the country was informally opened at the Lubin ranch in Betzwood, Pa., this week, when Director Edgar Jones began the making of a series of three-reel pictures there. This is the third big studio to be built at the ranch during the past few years. The new studio, which has just been completed, is equipped with every modern scientific appliance for the making of photoplays. The Lubin engineers have been working for many months on the big studio and the system of artificial lighting has been so designed and arranged as to permit the ultimate taking of natural color motion pictures there.

Extensive improvements and additions have also been made to the laboratories at the ranch. These laboratories, declared by experts to be the best in the country, are very busy places these days, and a great deal of scientific work is being carried on there by Mr. Lubin and his corps of assistants.

Denver Enters the Field

Denver, Colo., is the latest city to enter the race for the next national convention of the Exhibitors' League of America. H. H. Buckwalter and Harry N. Burhans, two veteran picture men of that city, are the leaders in the movement and are being supported by the various civic bodies, all of whom believe the securing of such a gathering would put Denver on the motion picture map.

The recent visit of the Universal Special, which stopped on its way to Universal City, Cal., gave them an opportunity to tell those aboard how ideally the city was suited to such an event and the Universalites and their friends promised to do all they could to turn the convention Denverward when they returned to the east.

Georgia and Parker Oliver are the names of two clever children who are appearing in Reliance and Majestic photoplays.

Fundamental Principles
TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

PROJECTING THE PICTURES.

AFTER the "positive prints" have been made from the negatives by means of either of the printing operations just described, or, in rare cases, by the "optical method" to be described later, they are developed, washed and dried, and are then ready for "projection."

The developing and washing used to be a very tedious operation, and even now some manufacturers wind the films on racks or large drums which must be handled many times during the various processes, but as in other branches of this young and overgrown industry, there are indications that really scientific methods will supplant the clumsy makeshifts that were plenty good enough before quality was considered.

AUTOMATIC DEVELOPMENT.

Automatic machinery for printing, developing, fixing, washing and drying is now available, and soon all of the best plants will have the modern equipment, which will be described a little later on. This will not only save much time and labor, but will remove many of the annoying defects in the projected pictures.

Everyone has noticed that when looking at some pictures on the screen, there will be occasional flashes of light, usually occurring regularly about every three or six seconds, but sometimes more often and irregularly. These flashes are caused by "thin" places in the positive film, which in turn were caused by "dense" places in the negative. The effect is often complicated by occasional dense places in the positive, and they are mostly due to uneven development, which will not occur when all racks and drums shall have given way to the continuous automatic machines.

THE CAUSE OF LIGHT FLASHES.

Just how these occasional dense and thin places are caused is very interesting, especially on account of the lessons which may be learned as to the extreme delicacy of the developing operation.

When films are developed according to the rack method they are wound on racks or frames which usually hold either 200 or 400 feet, and in their simplest form are made of four sticks about 4 feet long, two of them being round, and held about four feet apart by the other two. The film is wound about the round sticks in 25 turns or laps of 8 feet each, for a 200 foot rack, and then this loaded rack is put edgeways down into a developing tank along with several other racks.

EFFECT OF TEMPERATURE ON DEVELOPMENT.

Now suppose that the proper temperature for development is 65°, then if it should be warmer the development would proceed too rapidly, and if colder it would be too slow. Similarly if a portion of the developer or a part of the film should be warmer, then the development of that part would be more rapid than other parts, and it would come out of the bath more dense.

Well, this is exactly what happens to 90% of the films made today, but frequently it is unnoticeable or almost so, and it is customary to overlook it as a minor fault. Theoretically, it will not occur if the temperature of the developing bath, and the temperature of the rack are exactly the same, but this is rarely the case.

Hence, when a rack at temperature 70° is immersed with its load of film into a bath at temperature 65° the film that does not touch the rack will quickly take the temperature of the bath, while the film that touches the sticks as it turns about either end of the rack will be kept at a higher temperature for at least several seconds, or plenty long enough to give it a big start in development. Nothing that can now be done will "even up" the density, as the early stages of development are the critical ones, hence there will be a darker place on the film at each turn, or about 4 feet apart. If this happens to be a negative film the defect will be passed on to the positive, but will be reversed, and the dark part of the negative becomes a light place on the positive, and when projected on the screen, there will of course be a flash of light every time a thin place comes along.

This would occur every 3 or 4 seconds if the rack had the above dimensions, for pictures are usually run about 20 per second, and as there are 16 to each foot of film, the actual "travel" of the film through the projection machine would be 1¼ feet per second, making slightly over 3 seconds between flashes, which would be 4 feet apart. As a matter of fact you can time the flashes and tell what size racks the manufacturer used.

UNEVEN SHRINKAGE.

There are at least a dozen other defects, most of which are due to uneven shrinkage, with which everyone has to contend who adheres to the old rack and drum method, but extreme care has worked wonders, and fairly uniform films are now the rule, rather than the exception.

When the exhibitor receives the tin boxes which contain the reels of a newly released "special feature" he passes them on to his "operator," who is the man behind the projection machine. The operator takes reel No. 1 and after removing it from the can, puts it in the upper "magazine," M, Figure 19, pulling out about three feet of "leader" to be "threaded" through the "gate," G, at the back of the machine between the light and the lens. From here it goes to the lower magazine, M^1, where the end of the leader is fastened to the spool in the center. This spool is made to revolve while the film runs through the machine so that all slack will be taken up, and the film "rewound" automatically as fast as it leaves the upper spool.

After threading up it is only necessary to "frame" the picture by moving the handle H, and this is usually done after the light is turned on and the "carbons" adjusted. These carbons are in the "lamp-house," P, Figure 19, and when they are "lit" a wise operator never looks directly at them, but peeks through the dark glass or mica, E, near the handle of the door to the lamp-house, to see whether they are in proper adjustment.

ADJUSTING THE ARC.

There are several different adjustments to be made from time to time as the carbons burn. These are made by turning the round handles J, one of which adjusts the distance between the carbons, another moves both of them up and down, another moves them forward or back, while still another adjusts them sideways. And this is not all, for in some there is an individual adjustment for each carbon, and a tilting device to get the angle just right, so that the full light from the "crater" will be sure to go through the film and thence to the screen.

The crater is simply the little spot of boiling carbon near the point of the upper or positive carbon. It is only about ⅛ of an inch across, but hot enough and bright enough to be very interesting and important. Its temperature is somewhere between 6,000° and 9,000° Fahrenheit, more than enough to melt any thermometer ever made, and its brightness for projecting motion pictures is often from 10,000 to 15,000 candle power, or 1,000 times brighter than an ordinary gas flame, and 100 times brighter than a Wellsbach mantle.

The electricity that passes from one carbon to the other, making the "arc," goes first through the "Rheostat," R, Figure 19, because if it went to the carbons directly from the service mains it would be too strong and the arc would sputter and give poor light.

THE RHEOSTAT.

This rheostat is also known as a "resistance coil" and is simply a series of coils of wire which resist the passage of the electric current. Iron and German silver are much used, but not copper, because copper is too good a "conductor." On the other hand, copper is just the thing to use after we have reduced the "voltage" of the current to the proper intensity, and wish to transmit it, without further loss, to the arc. So copper is nearly always used for conductors, and iron for ordinary coarse resistances. Cost has something to do with these choices, for while genuine pure silver conducts more freely than copper, its cost is out of all proportion to the advantages. German silver (which is not silver at all, but an alloy of copper, zinc and nickel) is not nearly so expensive and is often used in place of iron for resistances.

The action of a rheostat is much like the effect of a very small pipe or tube on the passage of a fluid such as water or gas. The smaller and rougher the pipe the more the "pressure" will be reduced, and the less fluid will get through. So with the electric current or fluid, the "voltage" corresponds to the pressure of water, and the smaller the wire and the coarser the material (electrically speaking) the less "juice" will get through. Iron is, so to speak, "rough," and copper, "smooth," to the passage of the current.

ELECTRICAL TERMS.

In this connection it may be well to explain a few other electrical terms. "Amperage" corresponds to the rate of flow of other fluids, just as voltage corresponds to pressure, and to say a current has so many "amperes" means that so many "units" of electric "juice" will get by in a certain time at a certain voltage, but if the voltage goes up more units will pass. Therefore, in order to designate how much actual quantity is consumed, or how many units pass over a wire, or through some device in a stated time, we have another measure which is termed a "watt," and for commercial purposes it is so small that they bunch them in thousand lots, and call them "kilowatts."

A watt is an ampere multiplied by a volt, so that a current of 100 volts pressure, and a volume of 10 amperes would be called a kilowatt, or 1,000 watts. For purposes of charging consumers of electricity according to total quantities used, meters are made which record the numbers of kilowatt-hours, or units, which correspond to the number of gallons of water which go through your water meter.

"Voltage," then, means pressure or intensity; "amperage" means capacity, or the size and "smoothness" of the conduction; "wattage" means rate of flow, and is dependent upon both voltage and amperage; and the number of "watt-hours" or "kilowatt-hours" means how much actual juice gets by. The arc of an ordinary motion picture machine consumes from 10 to 60 amperes, at a pressure of 45 to 50 volts, or anywhere from 10x45=450, to 60x50=3,000 watts, or 3 kw.

However, the meter will show more than twice as many units as these figures would lead one to expect, for the usual direct current goes through the meter at a pressure of about 110 volts, and the rheostat simply gets in the way and cuts the pressure down to below 50 volts, the difference of 60 volts being lost in heating up the rheostat. Alternating current is handled differently, as will be told later on.

Volt, ampere, and watt, have been named after three pioneers of modern science, and kilo is a French prefix used in the metric system to denote 1,000.

DESCRIPTION OF PROJECTOR.

In Figures 19, 20 and 21, the more important parts of a modern projector are shown, with the mechanism exposed to view, although of course when running the films through, everything is enclosed, not only to protect the film from damage and possible ignition, but also to keep light from straying out into the booth, and to keep dust from the various parts.

In Figure 19, the lamp-house P encloses the arc A, which is here shown drawn back for the purpose of cooling it off, preparatory to changing the carbons (which are just out of sight, inside of the lamp-house). The six round knobs or wheels J, are turned to make the various adjustments mentioned above. The light from the arc, which shines from a point opposite the window E, through the "condensers" N (which consist of two "plano-convex" lenses with the convex sides together), being thereby concentrated upon the film-image at G, passes then through the lens L, and thence out and onto the screen, lighting up the dust in the air of the theater like a big triangular cloud, with its point at the projecting machine, and its base at the screen.

The film runs from the reel R, in the upper magazine M, and is "taken up" by the reel R^1 in the lower magazine M^1. U is a safety shield to be dropped between the light and the film in case, from any cause, the latter stops.

In Figure 21, the film, F, is shown by a dotted line passing first under the "continuous" sprocket K, then to the "upper loop" and past the "aperture plate" T, then part way round the "intermittent" sprocket I, and into the "lower-loop," over the "lower continuous sprocket," K^1, and down to the take-up magazine.

THE INTERMITTENT MOVEMENT.

The intermittent sprocket is controlled by a simple but wonderfully accurate device known as a "star-cam," or "Geneva movement," and this is the most vital part of the whole mechanism. In fact, an error of 1-10,000th part of an inch would be unpardonable in the machining of any of the several component pieces of this device, whose action is simply to turn one fourth of the way around and stop, and then repeat, and keep it up, starting and stopping about 60,000 times per hour for from six to ten hours a day, year after year, so that a good projector should have an intermittent movement that will start and stop four or five hundred million times without getting out of order or even wearing enough to get loose.

No ordinary machine work this, and small wonder that early projectors are now classed as "crude," and that it requires an investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars in special tools, etc., to insure the accuracy of the work.

There are 16 sprocket teeth on the intermittent sprocket and since there are four holes to each film picture, it would take just four pictures to go around the sprocket, hence when it turns ¼ way round it pulls down just one picture or image. If it turned suddenly it would tear the film, so it is made to start gradually and stop gradually, leaving the next image in its exact place in front of the aperture, so quickly and precisely that you cannot see the film move at all, no matter how carefully you may watch.

FRAMING THE PICTURE.

Sometimes, through somebody's fault (usually the last operator but one) a film becomes torn, or the corners of the holes crack, and the intermittent sprocket "jumps a hole." The audience notices this at least as soon as the operator (sometimes a long time before), and then it is up to the operator to "frame" the picture which has "dropped" quarter way down the screen.

In this particular projector, he does this by lifting the lever H, which swings the whole intermittent movement, sprocket, cam, and casing, about its axis, until the images again come to their proper place at the aperture.

The "shutter," S, has three opaque blades, between which are the three openings. One of these blades is to shut off the light while the film is being jerked down by the intermittent sprocket, and the other two are to divide up the "exposure period" so that instead of being 16 or 20 flashes per second (which would be discernible and irritate the eye) there are 48 to 60 per second, and although this of course cuts off some light, it is preferable to the excessive "flicker" that we formerly had to put up with.

Vitagraphers Entertained

Vitagraph players, loving cups, a turkey supper and a thoughtful host, made the evening of March 10 a memorable one for the Brooklyn Dance le Follies and its patrons. For the occasion was Vitagraph Night and an over-flow attendance did tribute to the popularity of the Vitagraphers. Edward Stevens, host, provided the ginger-ale plus, also the turkey buffet supper and the Vitagraphers did the rest. The loving cups were warmly contested and the winners were Lillian Walker and Gladden James, who received the popularity cups; Kate Price and Joe McLean, who did the old-fashioned waltz to such perfection that the cup which had Dick Leslie as its donor, went unquestioned to Kate Price; Ethel Lloyd and Donald McBride proved themselves the best dancers and Miss Lloyd was made the happy possessor of the cup donated by Harry Haven of the Telegraph. A cocktail tray and cup was presented to Dick Leslie, Vitagraph's famous "make-up man;" the tray was inscribed with the names of those who contributed to its presentation, which was made by Sam S. Spedon, with an appropriate little speech.

On the Job

Few things happen on the west coast that are missed by that snappy little paper devoted to the interest of motion picture cameramen which is published in Los Angeles and is called Static Flashes. They not only cover the entire field of the men who turn the crank, but also get much that is of interest to those in various branches of the industry and to the "fans."

"The Lone Star Rush," a film version of Edmund Mitchell's widely read novel is the next offering on the Alliance program.

Runaway June Again Meets Husband

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

WITH the exception of a few scenes, the entire tenth episode of "Runaway June's" experiences were staged on board of the Bermudian, on which the Reliance company recently embarked for the Bermudas. There was really little or no actual staging to be done as the scenes were mostly all exteriors, having for their backgrounds the deck of the vessel. In spite of this narrow field, however, Director Oscar Eagle has succeeded in making this one of the best of the releases up to the present time.

The story aids him considerably in this, for it brings together June and her husband, Ned, their first meeting since she ran away from him shortly after their marriage. This, coupled with Blye's presence on the boat, furnishes all the initiative necessary for new developments and good, lively action, and the director made the most of the opportunity.

The end of the last episode left us with the belief that Ned and his detective, Burton, failed to board the steamer bound for beautiful Bermuda. They were too late to get aboard in the usual manner, but this meant only a little inconvenience, not denial, to them, and the opening of this chapter, entitled "Trapped on the Liner," shows them climbing over the Bermudian's rail, panting from the exertion of climbing up the rope hanging over the side.

Ned obtains a glimpse of June and her collie, Bouncer, playing about on deck, and it requires all of his better judgment to restrain him from running to her. For future safety he and Burton decide to pretend not to know each other, and separate. From his hiding place Ned has a good view of the Blye party, seated in a row on the sunny deck, and is much distressed at seeing June yield to the others' persuasions to drink.

June eludes Blye.

To escape Cunningham's repulsive advances, June leaves the party and finds a chair on a deserted part of the deck. Here Anna, the stewardess, joins her, and warns her of the evils and consequences of drink. To prove that she has drawn her views from experience Anna tells June the story of how she was betrayed by young Lord Edgerly, and later married off to Dench, a sailor, who received a double dowry for saving the girl from disgrace. Drink was the cause of it all, she claims. Just as she finishes her story Dench, now the boat's steward, approaches, and roughly orders her below.

Ned finds June alone, thinking of the other girl's domestic misery, and they embrace lovingly. Blye finds them thus, and orders two of the deck hands to overpower Ned, telling them that he is a dangerous lunatic. June's pleas are in vain. Poor Ned is thrust into one of the staterooms, and kept there under lock and key. As the steamer enters the harbor at Bermuda, Burton slips Ned a chisel through the window, and the young husband pries the door open.

Ned and June separate.

The first that Blye hears of the escape is when the deckhands tell him that the "lunatic" has jumped overboard. Shortly afterwards Blye's yacht appears, and the captain comes aboard for instructions. Ned is picked up by some fishermen, and taken ashore, where he is joined by Burton. The detective has learned the course agreed upon by Blye and the captain, and knows the name of the yacht, but how are the pair going to overtake and board it?

What Good Is It?

"If you repeal the Ohio censor law, you will have a municipal police censorship in every city of the state." This was the slogan of the advocates of legalized censorship in Ohio in appealing for the support of the exhibitors in the state.

"The Ohio law does not and cannot protect you from the exercise of the police power to prevent the showing of any film that in the judgment of the mayor is immoral or obscene," was the reply of the advocates of the repeal bill now before the Ohio legislature.

"As mayor of Cincinnati, I am the conserver of public morals, and having been informed by the city solicitor of my rights in the premises, I have ordered the film known as "Three Weeks," now being exhibited in a downtown theater (the Alhambra), to be discontinued forthwith." This was the utterance of Mayor Frederick H. Spiegel of Cincinnati a few days ago. The film has not been shown further in the city.

"There is not the slightest question in my mind that the mayor is acting entirely within his rights in suppressing the film, no matter by what body it has been passed or approved," ruled City Solicitor Schoenle.

"The eliminations ordered by the Ohio Board were not made," said the redoubtable Maude Murray Miller when the case was brought to her attention, "and, anyway, this is all the work of the horrid National Board of Censors, whose men are coming into Ohio and trying to take away our jobs. They are to blame."

"Very well," says the state rights owner of the film, Ashbrook, "we'll make the eliminations that you say are to be made, and that you say were not made, in your presence. Then the film can run in Cincinnati?"

"Nothing doing," quoth Mayor Spiegel. "No state board can say what pictures shall be shown in Cincinnati."

"Neither the National Board of Censorship nor its attorney, ex-Mayor Henry T. Hunt, had anything to do with the matter either directly or indirectly," declared J. W. Binder, who is leading the fight for the repeal of the Ohio censor law in this city.

"That's right," affirmed Mayor Spiegel. "I have had nothing to do with Mr. Hunt or any other representative of the National Board in regard to the prohibition of the film."

Does state censorship protect the exhibitor against municipal or police censorship?

It does not.

Made New York Gasp

The daredevil performances of the nervy picture men included not only the hair-raising and nerve-racking feat of maintaining their equilibrium at the dizzy height, but they actually made motion pictures of one another while clinging like monkeys to dangling ropes, or clutching with one arm slippery beam supports.

"It's all in a day's work," was the characteristically modest comment of Mathiew when the men descended. "But, say, it was surely a ticklish moment when I slipped in climbing back across a narrow beam that extended over the sidewalk about fifteen feet. Thought it was 'Hallelujah' for mine, with the Angels' Serenade and slow music. As it was, I fell about five feet—fortunately catching an iron girder." Mathieu grinned at the recollection of his narrow escape.

Makes Screen Debut

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, who several months ago announced its advent in the motion picture field in association with Bosworth, Inc., offers as its initial release, Fritzi Scheff, the noted star of the legitimate stage, in "Pretty Mrs. Smith," a film adaptation of the recent success at the Casino Theater, New York City.

This is the first performance of the well known Fritzi before the motion picture camera, and according to reports received from the Coast, promises to soon establish her among the prominent screen artists of the country.

No expense has been spared to make this a memorable picture and particular attention is directed to the staging of the scenes, which are in every way realistic. The trip to Africa, the ocean liner, docks, ocean views, dancing parties on board ship, and some exquisite moonlight scenes are offered in this production. Miss Scheff worked for days at a fashionable country club, getting interior and porch views, and some excellent pictures on the golf links. The scenes of "Pretty Mrs. Smith," in a hotel seeking repose, were made in the magnificent Hotel Alexandria. Throughout the play the illustrious Fritzi exhibits a wonderful array of artistic costumes, specially deisgned for this role, particularly a crystal robe worn in a fireside scene.

Keystone Upheld by Court

Justice Lehman of New York, last Wednesday denied the application of Marie Dressler against the Keystone Film Company to restrain the defendant from exhibiting the motion picture, "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

The defendant, through its attorney, Arthur Butler Graham, interposed the defense that the Keystone Film Company had been authorized by the terms of the contract to handle and exploit the motion picture, and the plaintiff claimed that this should not have been done without her consent.

In the decision, which was nearly a thousand words in length, it was held that the Keystone Film Company was justified in conveying the exhibition rights of the picture.

Tom Mix in Another Daredevil Role

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

ADMIRERS of Tom Mix will have another chance to see this daredevil player of western roles in a two-reel thriller on Monday, March 29, when the Selig Polyscope Company releases "Ma's Girls," written by Mr. Mix himself, in which that celebrated cowboy plays the leading part, though not the role of hero.

Those who recall a picture released some months ago in which Mr. Mix was dragged by the heels across a prairie behind a runaway horse will certainly not have forgotten the thrill which chased itself up their spines as that hair-raising performance was screened. In "Ma's Girls" Mr. Mix repeats the stunt, though this time he is lassoed by a girl and dragged through a river and up the steep opposite bank, this feat being even more hazardous, apparently, than was the previous one.

The second reel of the subject is literally crammed with action and scene after scene, in which daredevil riding is featured, flashes upon the screen, only to be followed a moment or two later by a still more daring ride by others of the characters.

The plot to buy the mine.

Mr. Mix is supported by such popular Selig stars as Goldie Cowell, Luella Maxam and Eugene Ford, while Edward Brady has a heavy role opposite that of Mr. Mix.

As the story runs, Ma and Dad, with their two daughters, live just outside a small western town and the sheriff of the village is a frequent visitor at their home, being in love with Rose, one of the two pretty daughters, to whom he is paying devoted attention.

Tom, the gambler at the village saloon, breaks the assayer in a poker game one day and when the latter decides to end his life, being ruined, the gambler advances him some money and takes his I. O. U.'s for the amount.

Later, on a ride by himself, the gambler meets the girls and attempts to pay some attention to Rose, but the girl, after slapping his face, manages to elude his grasp and call to her sister for help. Madge, the sister, rides up and is able to throw her lasso over the gambler's head, dragging him by the heels through the river and up the opposite bank, where she permits him to escape, his clothing torn and his features badly spattered with mud and water.

The gambler swears revenge upon the girls and, having learned from the assayer that the father of the girls has struck gold upon his place, attempts to buy the ranch. Though the assayer has told the old man that the ore which he submitted as a sample is well nigh worthless, the old man does a little assaying of his own at home and learns enough to feel satisfied that the gambler is offering him little more than a tenth of what the place is really worth.

Tom, the gambler, is even more disgruntled when dad fails to sell him the land and the following day visits the camp of some renegades a short distance outside the village and induces them to aid him in capturing the two girls and bringing them to the camp.

The next day Ma becomes alarmed at the absence of her daughters and when she sets out in search of them and comes upon Rose's hat in the prairie she suspects the worst and rides on to the settlement, where the sheriff and his posse are urged to institute a search for the missing girls. The camp of the renegades is visited first of all by the sheriff and his posse. The renegades, seeing the sheriff coming, make haste to escape.

Ma and her girls.

The sheriff congratulates Ma.

Meanwhile the girls have released themselves from their bonds and are about to get away when the gambler notes them crossing the top of a distant hill. He sets out to follow them, but is overtaken by Ma, who downs him in a running fight. The posse meanwhile have pursued the fleeing renegades and after two of the men have been badly wounded the other two are captured and brought back to the settlement for trial.

The sheriff, having proven his heroism, is looked upon with favor by both Pa and Ma when he asks for the hand of Rose in marriage and as the picture ends Ma has agreed to give one of her daughters into the care of the sheriff.

"The Black Box" Grows More Interesting

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

THE splendid stage settings, beautiful photography and gripping action that mark the first episode of the new Universal serial, "The Black Box," are all to be found again in episode two, which is entitled, "Hidden Hands" and was released on Monday March 15.

Sanford Quest, the scientific detective, proves even more resourceful in episode two than in the first installment of the picture, having now as his assistant, Lenora, the wife of the man who in episode one was sentenced to the penitentiary for the murder of Ella Ashleigh. Lenora has completely reformed, and seems now bent on aiding Quest in his criminal research, and doubtless her woman's intuition and feminine instinct will prove a valuable addition to Quest's scientific research and remarkable detective ability.

Episode two begins with the meeting between Lord Ashleigh and his twin brother Edgar, who are as alike as two peas, except for the fact that Edgar is clean shaven while Lord Ashleigh is bearded. While the two brothers are attending the trial of Ian MacDougal, Craig, servant and companion of Edgar, busies himself with a mysterious "black box" which up to date has played such a small part in the story, but which seems likely to become more important as the serial develops.

Upon their return from the trial, the brothers enter the library where Edgar, who is an anthropologist, receives word from the American Museum that the skeleton of an anthropoid ape, which he had sent to the museum for safekeeping, has been stolen. Edgar is furious over the theft since it prevents his proving to the satisfaction of the scientific men at the museum that he has discovered the real missing link, the strange half-man, half-animal, which connects the gorilla family with the human race.

Immediately he learns of his loss, Edgar summons Sanford Quest to his aid and that detective together with Lenora, his assistant, hastens to the museum where Edgar awaits him. After inspecting the crate that had contained the ape's skeleton, Quest walks over to a window that opens on the street and calls his assistant's attention to the fact that the lock which should fasten it is broken.

Upon investigating the ground outside the window, Lenora finds one of the smaller digits of the ape's right hand which had evidently been broken off as the skeleton was passed through the window by the thief.

Later Ashleigh attends a reception at the home of Mrs. Bruce Reinholdt, whose son was his former pupil, and while there a storm comes up and Craig, his man servant, arrives with a raincoat for Edgar. After delivering the garment, the servant is shown out through the conservatory and a back gate.

Just as a musical number is concluded in the drawing room, a shriek rings out through the room and the hostess comes rushing in to explain that while enjoying a musicale from a seat just inside the conservatory her diamond necklace had been snatched from her throat by two hairy hands that seemed to almost float through the air and snatch the chain which fastened the necklace. Sanford Quest is summoned, but after a brief investigation is unable to throw much light on the mystery, or at least, if he has a clue he does not make it known at that time.

In a lonely hut, meanwhile, a strange creature, hairy, wild and jibbering, keeps company with a leopard and some monkeys. This strange, wild creature is fed by a pair of mysterious hands that come into the picture from one side, but just who he is or what part he is to play in the story later episodes must explain.

Meanwhile, one learns that MacDougal, who was being taken to prison after his trial, has escaped, after inducing his jailer to loosen his handcuffs for a minute, and is once more at large.

As the picture closes Craig is seen outside a Salvation Army headquarters and finally ventures within, being apparently attracted by the music. When an appeal is made by one of the Salvation Army lassies for all those who have sinned to confess, Craig yields to the appeal and comes up to the front of the room, but at the last moment shrieks out that he cannot confess his dark deeds.

After this statement, the Salvation Army lassie asks all present to pray that the man may have strength to confess all to his Maker and as those in the room kneel in prayer, episode two of "The Black Box" comes to an end.

Lord Stranleigh at Last Wins His Lady

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

WITH the release of "A Theft in the Dark" on March 26, insipid, and yet marvelously shrewd, Lord Stranleigh closes his screen career in a blaze of glory, for this hero of three previous Edison releases has more than made good. The drawing of a character such as his lordship requires the services of a true artist, and it found this qualification in Marc MacDermott. His indolence was natural, his bored expression and impatience at anything disturbing his prolonged relaxation unaffected, and still, when Stranleigh did rouse himself and put his mind to the accomplishment of a task which was beyond the more energetic, he appeared masterful and inspired confidence instantly.

Lord Stranleigh's experiences in foregoing pictures are in no way connected with this three-reel feature, except that two of the characters in it were also seen in the others. The story is independent and complete, dealing with the mysterious theft of Lady Sinclair's necklace during the few moments that the lights were turned out while welcoming the new year, and gives Stranleigh a chance to prove that he is not only capable of sacrificing that which he holds dearest to him, but also of accepting defeat, however unjust, like a man.

One little point seems to be a bit out of harmony with the rest of the story. It is small, apparently trivial, but nevertheless, one of the mainsprings of the plot. It is the fact that Stranleigh, impersonating Vernon's accomplice, should receive the necklace from Vernon without turning his face, or even a fair profile, to him. The action was such as to make Vernon suspicious under ordinary circumstances. The result of this, had the action followed its natural course, would have led to investigation on the thief's part, and the balance of the story would have been affected.

The photography is soft and clear, and the Edison company has long ago proved that English settings and atmosphere are among the things it can do best. Charles Brabin directed the picture which features Marc MacDermott as Lord Stranleigh and Miriam Nesbitt as queenly Lady Sinclair. Almost as important in the story and fully as conspicuous as the part of Lord Stranleigh is the role of Ralph Vernon, the society "Raffles," strikingly portrayed by Edward Earle, a good-looking, clever young fellow who retains the love and confidence of Lady Genevieve, though she knows him to be a thief. Viola Dana makes a charming little Lady Genevieve.

In a moment of unusual courage and confidence, Lord Stranleigh proposes to Lady Sinclair for the third time, and for the third time is put off with the smiling statement that he has as yet been of no use in the world, having never done anything that was actuated by purely unselfish motives. His lordship is in a quandary as to how to show his mettle.

On New Year's eve Lady Sinclair holds a masque ball at Graythorne Manor. As the clock strikes twelve the lights go out, leaving the ballroom in total darkness. When they are relighted, after the last stroke, Lady Sinclair discovers that her necklace is missing. She calls Stranleigh to one side, and informs him. He decides upon a plan immediately, and announces that the guests are to remain in the house until the arrival of detectives from London.

When the house is apparently asleep Stranleigh, hiding within a suit of armor, perceives Ralph Vernon descend the stairs, and hears him call up an accomplice with whom he makes arrangements for getting rid of the necklace. Stranleigh overpowers Vernon's accomplice, takes his place, and receives the jewels. He then confronts Vernon with his crime and promises to let him go free. Later, he discovers the thief about to elope with Lady Sinclair's sister, Lady Genevieve; Stranleigh tells the girl of Vernon's real character, and she makes him promise to keep it secret.

Lady Sinclair, finding them in the hall, misconstrues Stranleigh's attitude towards her sister, and denounces his lordship. Later, she learns the truth and realizes that Stranleigh was making a sacrifice equalled by none. Lady Sinclair then begs forgiveness for her conduct, and readily accepts Stranleigh's fourth proposal. The story closes with a touching scene in which Lady Genevieve is seen reading a letter from her lover, Vernon, in which he tells her that he is steadily forging ahead in the industrial world by honest methods.

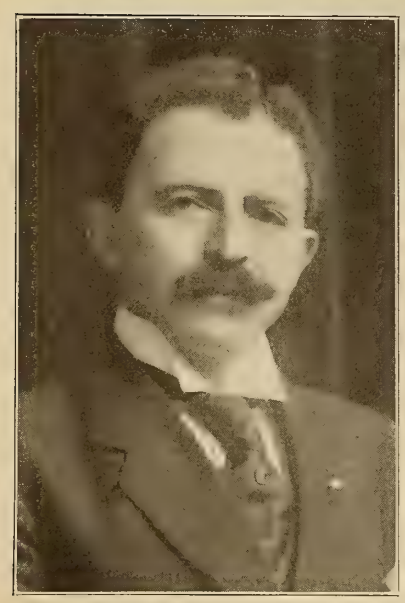
Charles K. Harris Talks of Future Plans

BY MABEL CONDON



Charles K. Harris.

WHILE you will always know him best as the man who wrote "After the Ball," it will be but a short number of weeks before his name will connect itself in your memory with a feature film company that has for its working foundation, several things which it will not do.

The Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company is the name of the new organization which has Albert E. Lowe as its president and Mr. Harris as its writer of scenarios and its generally useful man. It was Mr. Harris who vouched for the fulfillment of the promise that the Harris Feature Film Company intends to give the public "something new." This particular vouching was done in Mr. Harris' private office on the fifth floor of the Columbia Theater building one afternoon last week. Mr. Lowe was present and nodded support to all the Harris statements.

"There are to be no betrayed women in the films we are going to make," announced Mr. Harris with determination. ("Twang, twang!" came the accompaniment of a guitar to a Harris selection being rehearsed in a distant room.)

"The children will not have the blight of illegitimacy upon them. They all will be honorably born." ("Can you pay for a brok-en heart?" queried a tremulous female voice to a piano's crescendo finale.)

"We are not going to take our stories from plays and books; they are all to be original. There will be a picturization of some of my old and best known songs, which I shall scenariorize; and I will also supply the other original stories to be filmed." ("Nobody does it like you do, you do,— Nobody does it like you-dle oo-dle oo-dle do!" came a tango-time vocal duo from the next room.)

"And people wonder," commented Mr. Harris after a pause, "that I want to take my meals where there is no music. When the leader in the upstairs dining-room at the Claridge sees me coming he strikes up a Harris selection. So I prefer to eat in the grill.

"There is a piano in every one of these rooms," indicating with a gesture the Harris suite on the Broadway side. "And they are going all day long. My own piano," it stood dark and closed against the wall of a room which opened off of the one where we were seated. "My own piano hasn't been opened for two months. Sometimes it stays closed three months and then, one day, I'll open it and compose two or maybe three songs."

There was a decisive chord struck in the next room, it had its echo further down the hall and then all the pianos seemed to start at once. The result was a medley of voices and selections that demonstrated entire impartiality to any one vocal range or to any one melody.

"We are not going to give an advance synopsis of any of our pictures," Mr. Harris resumed, "the public likes to be surprised, and there is a lack of this element when it knows exactly what is coming next. So we shall issue no synopses. So you can see," Mr. Harris summed up his "we-shall-nots," "that the Harris Feature Film Company intends to give the public something new. We will show people that a film may be five reels in length, may possess interest, strength and punch, and will be clean, throughout. Every one of our pictures will be of the variety that the whole family can see and enjoy. The film that is made for those over twenty-one, only, is not the kind we will make."

"We have two companies at work now," suggested Mr. Lowe. "One is down south and the other in Yonkers. The company in the south is the Dyreda. It is producing Mr. Harris' old songs, 'Always in the Way,' and 'Break the News to Mother.' J. Searle Dawley is directing it."

"And in Yonkers," Mr. Harris took up the story, "Percy N. Vekroff is producing 'When It Strikes Home.' Both will be ready for release early in May, and the World Film Corporation has arranged to exploit them. 'When It Strikes Home,'" Mr. Harris went on, "I wrote at this desk. Wait—I will show you the story as I wrote it out first."

From under a number of papers he took huge saffron-tinted sheets of paper, pencil-written. The top one began—

"On this day, Feb. 1, 1915, while looking from my office window onto Broadway toward Forty-seventh street, I saw a crowd gather about a policeman and a baby-carriage. A touring car drew up and a beautiful woman stepped out and made her way to the center of the crowd. I called one of the office boys and said, 'Quick, go down there and see what it's all about!' He returned with the information that a baby had been abandoned and the beautiful woman wanted to take it. The policeman said she would have to accompany him to the station and make her request there. So the woman got back into her car and followed in the wake of the policeman and the baby carriage."

"That," said Mr. Harris replacing the saffron sheets, "was my inspiration for the film, 'When It Strikes Home.' And, because he knew there wouldn't be space for the printing of the synopsis he related its story.

"Nobody knows the inspiration for 'After the Ball'," said Mr. Harris in answer to a suggestion that there were many reasons given for its writing. "I never gave out a statement on it but I never contradicted any that others gave. When I was one of the Tomb-Stone Club members of the Milwaukee press, Peck, who was its veteran newspaper man, gave me this advice, 'Never answer a newspaper article.' And I never have. So I have never told what inspired me to write 'After the Ball.'

"A funny thing happened in Berlin, at the ice palace, a few years ago. I was there with my wife and daughter and in the box next to us was Martin Beck, the vaudeville man, and a party. The manager of the palace knew me and the band of 150 pieces played 'After the Ball.' Martin Beck thought it was a publicity stunt on my part and, leaning across the box, said, 'Harris, you're a d— good plugger!'"

"And what, after 'When It Strikes Home'?" I was prompted to ask by a warning sounded by a voice, a banjo and a piano.

"Ah!" ejaculated both Mr. Harris and Mr. Lowe as they exchanged glances and the voice, banjo and piano sent forth a final and triple warning.

"Yes," I encouraged, "you might as well tell."

"The next," answered Mr. Harris, slowly, for emphasis, "will surpass everything I have written, for heart interest. It will cost $50,000 to produce—and it will be in a natural colored picture."

"The new natural color process that Kinemacolor has been working on for the last year?" I asked of Mr. Lowe, whose original connection is the Kinemacolor Company. With a smile that carried satisfaction, he replied that it was. And as though in celebration, the trio burst forth into the joyous acclaim, "I Never Wanted Anything So Good, So Bad."

It was Mr. Lowe's suggestion—he is good at making them—that Mr. Harris autograph a copy of "After the Ball" for me. As he did so he remarked that the demand for copies of this song, now in its twenty-first year, is never less than a thousand a week.

The tremulous female voice from the next room urged "Don't You Wish You Were Back Home Again?" Glancing at my watch I decided the suggestion was opportune.

"The Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company is here to stay," assured Mr. Harris with his finger on the elevator bell. And a male quartet from the end piano-room warbled the reflection, "There's a Little Bit of Ev'rything on Broadway."

How Shall Tax be Collected?

Within a few days, proprietors of leading theaters and moving picture shows in the city of Montreal will discuss with the legislation committee of the city council the new charity cent tax imposed on patrons of places of amusement. As the Montreal bill left the Legislature, it empowered the city to impose such a tax. But the city council must first pass a bylaw; and it is the terms of the bylaw that the proprietors will discuss with the aldermanic committee.

The main question will be: How is the tax to be collected? By the terms of the clause, the city council may require the proprietors of places of amusement to collect the tax themselves and to give account of it to the city under penalty of being held personally responsible. Half a dozen schemes of collection are offered. One requires that the patron of a place of amusement shall buy a ticket for one cent in addition to his ticket of admission; and, for the sale of the additional ticket, it is suggested that booths be erected in the theaters. The objection raised to this is that the scheme would require the creation of a staff of inspectors and the consequent swallowing up in expenses of the greater part of the proceeds.

It is felt that in the collection of the tax, the city will have to proceed warily. There are constitutional difficulties in the way. If the tax or any part of it is paid by the proprietors of theaters, it is claimed, the whole clause will be unconstitutional as imposing an indirect tax.

Director George Nichols, before joining the Mutual forces, produced pictures for Thanhouser, Lubin and Keystone.

Lubins' Heavyweight Player

George S. Trimble of the Lubin players, who can step on a pair of scales any hour of the day and make the arrow spin around to the 275-pound notch, is one of the most versatile of the character men in the studio, especially when it comes to comedy. This is due to the fact that he has a quarter of a century of theatrical and operatic experience back of him. The weight question never bothers Trimble except on rare occasions, and one of these occasions occurred last summer when Trimble was doing a scene in the "Patsy Bolivar" series. Trimble was playing the part of an innkeeper and Peter Lang, who by the way weighs 265 pounds, was an irate father. Together they started to chase an eloping couple. The couple, both lightweights, waded across a swamp in part of the chase scene. Trimble and Lang floundered after them until they got into the middle of the swamp and there they both stuck fast. The more they struggled the deeper in they sank. It is said that that to get the pair of heavy weights out it was necessary to utilize a stout rope and a horse. Trimble is an actor of the old school and played with such stars as Barrett, Willard, Mansfield, Keen and Lewis Morrison.

Picture Holding 'em Out

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production "The Birth of a Nation" has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theater could have been filled. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to its making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

Inceville Held Up by Storm

The wind and rain storm, which made a violent attack last week on the coast of Southern California, wrought havoc with the daily routine of the Inceville folk. It didn't do any damage to the properties of the big camp of the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino films, but it annihilated large portions of the road which is the only access to the place. The electric car which carries the Ince people to work was unable to proceed any further than the Santa Monica canyon, so that for an hour or more several hundred employes of Inceville waited at the long wharf for transportation to the studios.

Film Folks Feed

The Green Mill Sunken Gardens, Broadway and Lawrence avenue, Chicago, was the scene on Friday evening, March 12, of a merry gathering in honor of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hoagland, who are newcomers to Chicago's film colony, and the occasion served to make them acquainted with a number of other well known folks in the industry. Allen L. Haase was the host of the evening.

Mirth and gaiety prevailed throughout the evening, and some fifteen couples sat down to the collation, which according to the menu was as follows:

Cox's Martini Blusher
Blonde Celery Kirkland Salted Almonds le nut Bloeser
Olives a la Espanole Dola Danseuse
Strained Chicken Gumbo—Hoagland
Cucumber Salad—Edythe Hoagland

Binder Accomplishing Things

That the work which Mr. Binder, representing the National Board of Censorship, is doing is really accomplishing results is proven by news received just as MOTOGRAPHY goes to press, to the effect that the censorship bill in the Iowa legislature was killed in committee. Mr. Binder spent Thursday and Friday of last week in Des Moines and is to be congratulated upon the result.

The Michigan legislature is also considering a censorship bill this week and the committee having it in charge is meeting today. Mr. Binder will be present and it seems safe to predict that this measure also will be killed in committee.

"A Concrete Romance"

Aaron Gollos of the Photoplay Productions Releasing Company is now taking bookings on a two-reel Essanay picture entitled "A Concrete Romance," in which Rapley Holmes, Peggy Sweeney, Milton Bromley and John Cossar are featured. The story is interesting throughout, the photography up to the regular Essanay standard, and Mr. Gollos feels sure that exhibitors will find "A Concrete Romance" in every way a desirable picture.

Renovating Studio

For many days the Favorite Players' studio has been in a state of great unrest. During Carlyle Blackwell's visit to New York, William D. Taylor, director, thought it a good chance to renovate the studio, and have everything in readiness for Mr. Blackwell's return.

Electricians, carpenters, and many workmen have been kept busy, and Mr. Taylor hopes to be able to start right in "on the job" as soon as Carlyle returns.

To the ambitious author—cast your picture play plots upon the waters and they will return to you after many days.

There are few new things under the sun that have not been developed by picture play authors.

A Campaign Against Official Censorship

IN expressing appreciation of our editorial on "The Supreme Court's Decision" two weeks ago, J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship emphasizes the conclusion that the fight against legalized censorship must be appealed to the court of public opinion, and that it must continue without an instant's cessation, backed up by all the resources of the industry and its every member. He says:

That the industry as a whole will do this was convincingly proved to me by the results obtained at a luncheon recently given by the National Board at Rector's in New York. There were present at this luncheon approximately a score of men. They were the leading men in the producing and distributing ends of the motion picture industry. At this luncheon, which was presided over by W. D. McGuire, executive secretary of the board, in a five-minute talk I told the assembled company of a condition—not a theory—regarding censorship legislation which confronted them in ten states. These men were all familiar with the work the National Board has already done in fighting legalized censorship laws in Ohio and Pennsylvania. I pointed out to them that the censorship laws in both these states had been allowed to pass by default. I told them of the difficulties we were meeting in our endeavors to have them repealed. The same thing, I said, will follow in the ten states in question provided the bills are not opposed in committee. The National Board had the machinery for fighting these bills. Two simple questions therefore remain. First, do those present want the National Board to make a fight in these ten states? Second, if so, will you pay the bills? Both were answered in the affirmative with enthusiasm, and, headed by such men as Messrs. Lubin, Laemmle, Blackton, Hodkinson, Selznick, Wright, Carl Anderson for Lasky, Adolph Zukor, Felix Malitz for Pathe, and many others, before rising from the table a considerable sum was pledged with which the fight has since been aggressively carried into the ten states menaced with legalized censor bills. The result to date has been the defeat in committee of the bills in Indiana and Delaware. In the other states an effective campaign is being conducted, and my prediction is, that with the possible exception of Oklahoma, none of the other states will enact censor legislation at this session of the legislature. The Oklahoma bill is not, strictly speaking, a censorship measure. It does not provide for prepublicity censorship, but simply excludes from being shown within the state "any motion picture featuring a bank robbery, train robbery, nude forms, suggestive poses, or pictures that are obscene, indecent, licentious, or immoral." The bill, as will readily be seen by those informed, is aimed at the Al Jennings film, "Beating Back." [Motography, February 27, page 326.]

My experience with the real men in the motion picture industry leads me to the profound conviction that they will not hesitate to carry through a nation-wide campaign, using the newspapers, magazines, and that most potent of all forms of publicity—the motion picture screen—to create public opinion against all forms of legalized censorship to the end that there shall not be throughout the whole nation a single man in public life who will dare advocate legislation to limit and hamper the freedom of the motion picture screen.

My personal belief is that the National Board of Censorship, composed as it is of men and women whose very names are guarantees of fairness and impartiality as well as devotion to the public good, is the proper body to make this fight. From what I know of the men who direct and inspire the National Board, I am convinced that they will not shirk the responsibility.

The fight must go on. The life of the motion picture industry depends upon it. It must be won.

It is our devout hope that this confidence is justified, and that all the motion picture interests, to the last man, will join vigorously in the intensive work for which the situation calls. At the same time we realize that the task is not a easy one. It requires more than mere antagonism to the censorship principle; it means above all persistence; continuous, untiring, day and night application to a logical, carefully thought out program.

The letter quoted above states that the National Board of Censorship is the proper body to make this fight. Certainly it is the appropriate agency for the work; but obviously it cannot accomplish very much without earnest co-operation—financial as well as moral—of everyone interested.

In this trade we all know of the good work of the National Board, and of the exceptionally high character of its personnel. Therefore we are inclined to wonder, sometimes, why it is that local censorship bodies, local reformers, are not willing to defer to it and to accept its findings as authoritative. Of course we know that both police organizations and individual reformers are frequently of a peculiarly circumscribed mentality, unwilling to accept anything outside their own observation. Nevertheless, it should be possible to convince all of them of the truth as it applies to the sincerity and competence of such a society as the National Board. Obviously, the thing has not been presented to them with sufficient force and persistence. Only the other day a certain state legislator, when asked as to the meaning of the big list of names on the letterhead of the National Board of Censorship, replied that "he supposed they were put there to make the proposition look better." Evidently his impression was that the National Board literature was parallel to that of a mining company with stock for sale.

The Supreme Court has decided that the censors may continue to censor. Therefore our only possible present stand is, not that no one has a right to censor us, but that the only censor we recognize, the National Board of Censorship, is adequate and efficient. And to take that stand with any hope of convincing the world of its propriety, we must aid the National Board in gaining universal recognition. This can be secured only through widespread publicity of the right kind.

If the National Board of Censorship now has a department of publicity, that department should be augmented and given sufficient power and funds to carry on a campaign of education clear across the country. The sole object of such a campaign would be to convince the public and its political representatives that the National Board is competent to censor films; that its personnel is such as to guarantee such competency; that it does censor all films most effectively; that films once censored by it need no further attention; and that its certificate upon a film is an absolute guarantee of its fitness for public exhibition.

When these facts have become established and of common knowledge there can be no logical appeal beyond them, and local censorship would fall to the ground for sheer superfluity and want of support. Therefore the one objective to concentrate all our forces upon immediately is the reputation of the National Board of Censorship. As to the ways and means of accomplishing the desired end, there are enough bright minds on the Board and in the film business to work out an efficient plan. MOTOGRAPHY will be glad to help in the work to the full extent of its power.

New Use for Gas-Filled Lamps

A new application of the gas-filled high-efficiency tungsten lamp is in the lighting of moving picture studios where playlets are being enacted before the camera, says a recent issue of the Electrical World. In the plants of the companies producing the more costly films 1000-watt nitrogen-filled lamps to the number of eighty-six have been used to illuminate a single stage. In the smaller studios fifteen or twenty 1000-watt units suffice for ordinary pictures. The advantage claimed for the high-efficiency incandescent lamp over other illuminants which have been heretofore used is the correction of color values possible with a lamp giving a continuous spectrum. The "make-up" which moving picture actors have had to use to bring out the features of the face is avoided, and a better balance is given to the flesh tints, it is said.

COMMERCE WITH GERMANY

It is natural that the German photographic industry which has been producing for export to a large degree, is suffering in consequence of the war, says the Weekly Report, published by the American Association of Commerce and Trade. Little is known generally abroad of the capacity and extent of the German photographic industry. In regard to unexposed films for moving pictures, such films have so far been imported from America through London firms. In the future, however, American firms will be able to deal directly with Germany. Germany is a good customer in exposed American moving picture films, as American pictures are particularly appreciated, and it is safe to say that American pictures will be in demand as much as before.

Just A Moment Please

By golly, this Dick Nehls person is trying to run a joke department all of his own, in his weekly press sheets. Did you read that one he pulled about the scenario writer who married his heroine to a man who had been killed off five years before, and then added the final punch by inquiring where we supposed they met? Stop it, Dick, stop it!

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

The World's Greatest Yarn.

By U. N. Derwood,
The World's Greatest Writer

Episode One:—"The Missing Scripts."

(Part One.)

Consternation reigned at the plant of the Jumbo Film Corporation, out on Skidoo Avenue and Bunkum Place. The earliest arrivals at the plant had found things turned topsy turvy, the doors broken open and the night watchman missing. As one official after another arrived and was told of the dirty deeds performed during the night, indignation gave way to wrath and finally even profanity began to flow. Though the place showed every trace of having been robbed, nothing had as yet been missed. The money was all in the vault, the studio settings and prop room had been left in their usual order, the negatives were safe, and the dressing rooms were closed and locked, but robbers had undoubtedly entered the place and made way with the watchman. While Sue Brett, the beautiful ingenue of the company, stood talking with "Di" Rector, the $1,000,000 per year producer of the concern, Ed Itor, the scenario man, suddenly burst into the room, his coat off, his hair rumpled and his eyes blazing with wrath. "Every darn script in the place is gone!" he shrieked. "We're cleaned out. Not even a single reeler ready for production and four companies ready to start work on the floor!" M. A. Gnate, the president of the Jumbo Corporation, gasped: "We're ruined!" "Di" Rector shrugged his shoulders, knowing his salary would go on as usual and Sue Brett, inspired by a sudden happy thought, laid her soft hand on M. A. Gnate's arm and gurgled: "It's all right. I have an idea that will save the day."

Brevities of the Business

The Edison scenario writers and those who aspire to be classed under this heading will be pleased to meet, via this paragraph and the picture to the left, Arthur Leeds, who will in the future say yes or no when the question of availability of submitted scripts comes up at that studio. Mr. Leeds, as most of those in the scenario game probably know, is the man who has been turning out The Photoplay Author, that little journal of the scenario writing end of the picture business which has so many friends. He is also the author of the book on the subject, entitled "Writing the Photoplay." In the latter work he collaborated with Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, and the result has been more than helpful to the numerous photoplaywrights who have been struggling along the hidden pathway to success. Arthur Leeds has learned life from the ground up. He has also learned most of that which pertains to the dramatic presentation of life, and when he places his official O. K. on a script the author thereof may be sure that he has written something of real merit.

The Edison Night Atop the Strand brought many of the Bronx residents into white-lighted Broadway for the occasion. Accompanied by Frank A. Bannon, those of the players who attended were Edward Earle, Sally Crute, Viola Dana, Bessie Learn, John Collins, Augustus Phillips, Ethel Lawrence, and Bruce Eytinge.

Harry Reichenbach, late of the Bosworth Film Company, is now connected with the Metro Film Corporation in the Heidelberg building, New York City, in the capacity of publicity manager.

Upon Jacob Wilk was bestowed the honor of fatherhood, on March 7, when a daughter, immediately named Ruth Helen, made her appearance. She has been accorded a hearty welcome by her happy parents and their many friends.

Wendall P. Milligan, whom you know as head of the Billboard's motion picture section, became a Benedict on March 4 by reason of making Miss Mildred Schultz, Mrs. Milligan. The latter was a schoolday acquaintance of Mr. Milligan in the latter's home town, Stamford, Conn. "Bill" Barry of the Nicholas Power Company and K. Renaud of Stamford witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Milligan are residing in the vicinity of Broadway and Ninety-eighth street.

Zene Kiefe is again a member of the Vitagraph stock company and after her absence from the studio for a year, received a hearty welcome back.

Arthur J. Lang, whose card reads "Executive Secretary—Nicholas Power Co." has returned to his desk after a week's dental trouble caused by an ulcerated wisdom tooth. The ailment threatened serious trouble for Mr. Lang and he is to be congratulated on his recovery.

Among the prominent exchangemen visitors in New York this week were George Grombacher of Portland, Ore., Louis B. Mayer, Boston, Otto N. Davies, Minneapolis, James B. Clarke, Pittsburg, and Mr. Allenbaugh, Baltimore. A board meeting of the Metro Pictures Corporation was the attraction.

Dorothy Gish, the distinguished Griffith film actress, is to be featured in a number of three and four reel feature photoplays, and in each picture her part will be a somewhat different character from her previous one.

The management of the Strand theater is making elaborate preparations for the anniversary week, commencing April 11, which commemorates the opening of this house. The theater will be handsomely decorated and it is said that the bills surpassing anything yet presented at the Strand will be offered. The theater has also in preparation a handsome souvenir program which will be given to each patron of the house during the week.

Harry Pollard, director of American, is getting some particularly beautiful effects in his four reel feature, "The Divinity of Motherhood," in which Margarita Fischer is starred and in which she has one of the parts that the public love to see her in and which runs the whole gamut of the emotions and from girlhood to old age.

No new mining camp would be complete without a new newspaper. And so, naturally, "Poverty Flat," the mimic Sierran mining settlement, built by the California Motion Picture Corporation at Boulder Creek, Calif., as "scenery" for its production of Bret Harte's "Lily of Poverty Flat," has just given to the world a new journalistic thrill in the shape of the "Poverty Flat Nugget," edited weekly by "Culpepper Starbottle," one of the picturesque characters in the pioneer photoplay.

The Famous Players Film Company have acquired the film rights to Madeline Lucette Ryley's celebrated play, "Mice and Men," once the popular starring vehicle of Annie Russell, in which they will shortly present Miss Marguerite Clark.

Louise Glaum is under suspicion! It is rumored she was married recently and it is rumored she ain't no sich thing! Some say she was seen dressed in white in a closed auto and some say one man was trying to hide in the auto and some say another. All inquiries are met with sweet evasion.

New York Motion Picture Corporation—The directors met last week, but reached no decision in the matter of dividends. A general feeling among stockholders from many quarters has been expressed that the directors have, apparently, assumed an attitude of indifference toward the interests of the stockholders, who have patiently waited for some news or information during the last ten months when dividends were abruptly discontinued. As it has generally been understood that the available cash resources were in the vicinity of $200,000, the stockholders feel they have a right to at least expect some information as to why they cannot receive some return on their investment.

Thanhouser Film Corporation—In addition to the increase in capital from $400,000 to $1,000,000 and giving each stockholder of record 2¼ times his holdings, it should be noted that the new stock—instead of being $100 par value, will be $5.00 par value. The remaining $100,000 of stock it is reported will go to the new manager—E. Thanhouser—in the form of compensation for his services over a period of years.

Reliance Motion Picture Corporation—There has been some demand for this stock between 35 and 40.

Mutual Film Corporation—There still continues to be a steady demand for the common stock, but as the bid and asked prices have more or less maintained a spread of about 4 points, the stock was not as actively traded in during the past week.

nothing of a huge seagoing octopus. This is rather a novel innovation and should do much toward helping the cause for which this play was written.

That the motion picture business is coming to the front in the way of artistic advertising is shown by the absolute deviation from the commonplace in the new posters issued by the Thanhouser Syndicate. With episode ten of "The $20,000,000 Mystery" a sepia toned poster, one sheet size, was issued, made by this new process. Instead of the lithographic posters as of old the rotagravure is utilized.

Clay M. Greene, one of the best known of the Lubin photo-playwrights, and who has achieved a wide reputation as a writer of fiction and plays for the legitimate stage, had a regular birthday party this week, his friends surprising him at his Philadelphia hotel.

Allan Crolins, who played the part of Detective Stone in the Edison three-reel drama, "Killed Against Orders," is one of the latest additions to the Edison force. He is a little too sincere for comfort. Miriam Nesbitt thinks, after being hounded about by him for stealing a muff, her first moving picture theft.

Will T. Gentz has resigned as publicity department head of the United Film Service to give his entire attention to a new venture which he is undertaking in company with Joseph A. McKinney, former general manager of the United Film Service and best known for his activities in organizing the Roosevelt Progressive campaign. Gentz and McKinney have taken quarters in the Longacre building, where they

The latest addition to the Centaur Film Company is a new foundry. Although at the present time this plant has all the equipment necessary for a most complete motion picture establishment, this addition was found quite imperative because Mr. Horsley's latest inventions, the double-exposure camera and continuous printer, were not being turned out fast enough to meet the present demand. It is expected that with this addition the demand can be entirely satisfied.

Tyrone Power, the noted stage artist, takes the leading role in "Whom the Gods Would Destroy." This multiple reel feature was recently completed at the Chicago studios of the Selig Polyscope Company. It was written by William B. Wing.

There are no coal mines in California and that is the only reason why it was necessary for Producer Thomas H. Ince of the N. Y. M. P. Company to build them recently for the production of "Sons of Toil," a powerful picturization of an episode in the Pennsylvania coal mining regions, that will soon be released as a art of the Mutual Program under the Domino banner.

A large force of carpenters, mechanics and plasterers have been busy the past several days at the Lubin western studio, erecting an Algerian village. Several of the regular dressing room buildings have been transformed into Algerian structures and a number of temporary ones built, in order to have a complete Algerian street to be used in a big feature which is to start immediately.

A. D. Flintom, the head of the Monarch Feature Film Company of Kansas City, recently made a special trip to New York to confer with President Cobe of the Alliance upon several important matters. Mr. Flintom states that the conditions in his territory, which embraces the states of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, are very satisfactory, and are continually getting better.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 21—Selig—March 15.—Girls of the University of California in class race; convicts from New Jersey state prison under single guard live in camp while working on the new highway; women join San Francisco police force and will patrol exposition grounds; thousands of Greeks attend the funeral of Bishop Hawaweeny; latest styles designed by Lady Duff Gordon; Boston Red Sox and Chicago Cubs at their training camps; aviation the latest fad of the millionaire colony at Palm Beach, Fla.; senators leaving the capital at Washington, D. C., at the close of congress; new troops brought up by Germans, Lowicz, Russian Poland.

In the Park—Essanay—March 18.—The first single reel Chaplin-Essanay comedy. Charlie becomes so interested in a spooning couple in a park that they chase him. A crook steals the girl's pocketbook and then tries to pick Charlie's pocket, but Charlie gets the pocketbook from him instead. A giant comes along and takes it away from both of them and, in the fight which follows, Charlie takes the spoils and leaves the other two in the hands of a policeman. The girl thinks her lover took the pocketbook and jilts him. He decides to commit suicide and goes to the lake. Charlie sees him and encourages him, after taking his watch and money away. The giant, crook and policeman follow Charlie and a free-for-all fight takes place on the bank of the river. Charlie succeeds in throwing them all into the water and then makes his getaway.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial—Selig—March 18.—Pictures taken from the thirtieth story of the unfinished Western Union building, New York City; Blackfeet Indians from Glacier National Park visit San Francisco; Boston Braves in spring training camp; work started for the big Union Station in Chicago; Theodore Roosevelt visits the United States Steel Corporation's workshops; Grace Darling in Panama; war section containing views of the great European struggle taken at various points.

IN last week's isue the synopsis of "The Wayville Slumber Party" was announced as the Lubin release for March 20. This picture has been taken out and replaced by "The Prize Baby," a synopsis of which follows.

The Prize Baby—Lubin—March 20.—A stranded theatrical company escape from their hotel during the night, thereby saving their board bill. After a long journey by foot over the railroad ties they come to a town where a baby show is being held, a prize of $100 to go to the winner. The fat boy of the troop, who takes the part of a baby in the show, enters the contest and wins the prize. Just as they are about to begin celebrating, however, it is discovered that one of the babies present has the small pox and the entire troupe are quarantined. When the doctor attempts to vaccinate the fat boy a free-for-all fight takes place, which ends when the fat boy is carried off to jail. The company find themselves minus the prize and again start to walk the ties.

The Maid of Romance—Biograph—March 22.—Among all her suitors there is none who loves her; they are all after her money. So she leaves the little country town and, in the city, takes a post as governess to the youngest child of a newly-rich widow, whose son has a position of trust in a business office. The young man falls in love with her, but dares not ask her to marry him because he is unworthy. He has been taking money from his employer's safe. Discovered, he is threatened with exposure unless he makes restitution—which he is unable to do. The girls learns the facts and reimburses his employer. Discovering what she has done, he comes to thank her, and is told that the governess has been discharged for carelessness. But he finds her again.

Only the Maid—Edison—March 22.—Sally Crute and Duncan McRae featured. Ralph Sterling, wanted for murder in a distant city, meets and fascinates Beryl Tracy, who is courted by Ralph Somers. Sterling induces Beryl to elope with him, but their plans are spoiled by the maid, who dresses up in Beryl's clothes and waits for Sterling at the appointed place. She has also notified Somers, who arrives in time to save her from Sterlin's anger. The latter is placed under arrest and held to answer the charge of murder against him. Beryl realizes how foolishly she has acted and consents to marry a true lover, Ralph Somers.

Sweedie Learns to Ride—Essanay—March 22.—Another of the inimitable Sweedie comedies with Wallace Beery in the leading role. When Sweedie sees her mistress mounting her horse for her morning gallop, she desires to do likewise. She calls up her sweetheart, who is captain of the mounted police squad, and upon his appearance the two start off for a ride. Sweedie learns that it is not so easy as it looks, and later, when her mistress returns and finds her missing, a general alarm is sent out for her arrest. Eventually Sweedie is cured of her passion for riding. N. G. C.

The Girl of the Music Hall—Kalem—(Three Reels)—March 22.—Fane, a composer, is threatened with a nervous breakdown after the failure of his opera. His friends, hoping to divert his mind, induce him to go slumming. He meets Ida, an East Side music hall singer, and though he is disgusted with the life she is leading he is forced to help her despite himself, because the girl attracts him. While he trains her voice she supports herself by singing in the chorus of a musical comedy company. Alan Glynn, an artist and a friend of Fane's, meets Ida and appears to fall in love with her; she returns his affection. Hagan, who formerly was the "bouncer" in the music hall, follows Ida about and refuses to allow her to forget the past. In time he meets Glynn at the stage door and tells him of Ida's career. Glynn, mistaking the girl's character, asks her to come to him, though he does not wish to make her his wife. She turns from him and, feeling that the life she has been leading is false, returns to the slums, for she does not know that Fane really loves her, though he has never declared himself. Hagan and Glynn follow her to the slums and in a quarrel between them Hagan is killed by the artist. With the murderer's arrest the two men pass out of her life forever. Later Fane again finds Ida and this time tells her of his love and asks her to become his wife. Alice Joyce and Guy Coombs featured.

Patsy on a Yacht—(Thirteenth of the "Patsy Boliver" Series)—Lubin—March 22.—After recovering from the wound he received in the last episode, Patsy begins to look for work, encouraged by the faithful Jane. He secures work on a yacht owned by Mrs. Sykes' brother, Tom, a man of wealth. Tom invites the entire Sykes family to spend a day cruising, and Tilly, who has married Sykesy and who has caused him no end of trouble by her display of temper, is with them. With the assistance of Jane, Patsy smuggles a minister aboard the yacht and, when the others go ashore for lunch, Jane joins him and they sail away from shore. Grace and Sykesy attempt to follow them and fall into the water. While they are being rescued Patsy and Jane are being married by the minister.

Retribution — Selig — (Two Reels)——March 22.—Because the governor of the state is in a position to not only ruin her father, but also to send him to prison, Mary Cullon agrees to become his wife. A reporter, who is in love with her, is heartbroken when he learns of what has happened, but determines to loosen the governor's grip on her father. A hunchback, who has been calling on the governor and securing money regularly, is hurt by Mary's machine and she cares for him, thereby winning his undying gratitude. He learns of her sorrow and goes to the reporter, giving him valuable information. On the day of the wedding the reporter and the hunchback confront the governor with the evidence that he is the cripple's father and that he was the cause of the death of the boy's mother. The governor takes his own life, and the reporter and Mary are free to marry. A review appeared on page 451 of the issue of March 20.

Mr. Jarr and the Lady Reformer—Vitagraph—March 22.—Another of the "Jarr Family" series. Mr. Jarr's boss sends him West on a business trip and Fritz, the shipping clerk, asks him to chaperone his sister on the return trip from Chicago. When he is ready to return, Jarr finds that the sister is a fat girl who has been appearing as "Fatima" in the side show of a circus. He makes good, however, and all is well until a lady reformer, who sees them together, believes that Jarr is luring the fat girl from her home. She sneaks to his berth at night and handcuffs him. A lunatic is to be put off the train at Poughkeepsie early in the morning, and Mr. Jarr, by giving a generous tip, persuades the porter to make a mistake. He is rushed to the asylum after leaving the train, but finally convinces the doctors of the truth of his story. The lady reformer accuses "Fatima" of being an accomplice in the escape of Jarr, and in the fight which follows "Fatima" proves that she can make good use of her weight and treats the lady reformer rather roughly. Jarr arrives home a day later and learns that the lecture on social conditions, which he was to attend with his wife, has been postponed on account of the lady lecturer being assaulted on the train.

His Brother's Keeper — Biograph — (Two Reels)—March 23.—With her dying breath their mother commended his weak brother to his care. So, as son as he won success in the West, he sent for Jack. The boy fell under the bad influence of the ranch foreman and a halfbreed cowpuncher, but even in his wildness there was something of good, for it was in the Last Chance Saloon that he met Carlotta, the extraordinary woman who owned the place. On the day that Joe became sheriff, Jack resented the foreman's insult to Carlotta. A few hours afterward the foreman was found on a lonely trail, shot through the heart. Joe had to arrest his brother, whose pistol and hat were found on the scene of the crime. Carlotta refused to believe the evidence and, visiting the spot, picked up a trail which led into the desert. Presently she came upon an exhausted man—the halfbreed, who, after being discharged by the foreman, had killed him in a drunken fit and fled. To obtain Jack's pistol he had given in exchange his fine Mexican sombrero, which Carlotta has desired for a curio, and had taken Jack's hat for good measure. Carlotta, returning with him, arrived in time to prevent the infuriated cowboys from lynching the man she loved.

Hans and His Boss—Edison—March 23.—This is a Waddy-Arty comedy that bubbles over with laughs and giggles. Arty (Arthur Housman) tells the rich widow that Hans (William Wadsworth) is his boss, with whom he must imbibe or lose his job. Hans, who is only Arty's friend, is then compelled to fill out the role of boss and the results are truly laughable. C. R. C.

Ham Among the Redskins—Kalem—March 23.—Because they accidentally save Mary from Indians, Ham and Bud decide to become Indian killers, but their first attack, upon an eight year old brave, results disastrously for them. They then hit upon a plan which they think cannot fail, Bud being supposed to blow a horn and attract the Indians, while Ham hits them over the head with a mallet. This does not work out to the entire satisfaction of both, however, and they decide to do their hunting singly. Each disguises as a redskin and when they meet each other, both believe the other to be the real thing. The result is a double comic-tragedy.

An Expensive Visit—Lubin—March 23.—Jack, a gay college boy, receives a note from his father saying that his allowance has been cut off and that the old man is coming to see where all his money is being spent. Together with his pals he plans to fool his father and Dick, one of the boys, agrees to dress as a girl. When dad arrives he finds Jack buried amid his books and upon his son's suggestion starts out to see the sights. He meets Dick and flirts with "her." Receiving encouragement, he asks to see her home, and upon arriving at Dick's room he is confronted by Jack, disguised, who says that he is her husband. Dad is forced to part with his bank roll in order to get out of the affair quietly and hurries back to the farm. The boys then plan for a banquet.

The Outlaw's Bride — Selig — March 23.—Tom Mix furnishes chief thrill in this picture when, with his hands tied behind his back, he leaps from a horse and rolls down a steep hill. The Western settings abound in beauty and the story itself is meritorious. It deals with the attempt of a secret service man to capture an outlaw. The outlaw forces a girl to marry him against her will. The secret service man witnesses the ceremony and, because he loves the girl himself, attempts to stop it, but is too late. He is captured and led away by the outlaw's confederates, but he manages to escape by the leap described above. The girl joins him and a pistol battle takes place between the officer and the outlaws, ending with the death or capture of all of the latter. The outlaw who married the girl is killed and she is free to wed the officer, whom she loves. C. J. C.

A Wireless Rescue—Vitagragh—(Two Reels)—March 23.—Engineer Jim Burke is discharged for drunkenness and collects a gang of disgruntled employees about him. They fail to get the engineers to strike and meet with even less success when they try to get Welch, the operator and towerman at the bridge, to quit. Burke swears to be revenged upon both the railroad and Welch and believes his opportunity has arrived when he learns that the limited will arrive at a certain hour and that it will pass over the draw bridge at full speed in case it receives the "clear" signal. Polly Welch, the daughter of the towerman, brings her father's dinner from home and, as she approaches the tower, notices that the bridge is open and the "clear" signal is up. The flyer is due in a few moments and she is about to break into the tower when Burke and his gang rush upon her, they having previously overcome Welch. She escapes to her home and locks the door. There is only one chance to save the limited and that is by using the wireless apparatus which she has installed and in the use of which she has become efficient. This she operates frantically, knowing that the limited carries a wireless outfit. Burke and his gang arrive at the house and start to batter down the door as the limited dashes past the "clear" signal and towards the bridge. The operator receives Polly's message a moment before the train reaches the open bridge. The breaks are at once applied and the limited is saved. Polly's lover, who has found Welch and freed him, rushes to her assistance with the train men and Burke and his gang are captured just as they are about to break into the house. Dorothy Kelly featured.

disquieting to say the least, and even dangerous when he wades through the soup course and begins to wield a knife and fork. The rejected suitor then takes part in the play, throws the "count" out, as per prearranged plans, and is granted permission to marry the girl by the stern father. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Struggle Between Personal Liberty and the Wave of Reform—Essanay—March 24.—E. H. Calvert is the featured player in this George Ade fable in which he enacts the role of an old gambler, who formerly sold green goods in the morning, played the ponies in the afternoon attended boxing shows in the evening and worked at his regular game of bucking the tiger all night, but after serving a penitentiary sentence for his crimes finds that the reformers have so changed things that at athletic exhibitions they only wrestle, no drinks are obtainable after midnight, his poker playing friends of the past now play checkers, the racetrack has fallen into disuse and even his plans for raiding the polling places on election day are foiled, when the women judges and clerks compel him to remove his hat before casting a ballot. N. G. C.

The Diamond Broker—Kalem—(Two Reels)—March 24.—Another of the "Girl Detective" series. Ripert and Henri Bladeau are suspected of smuggling diamonds into the country, but it is impossible to catch them in the act. Jean and her assistant, Warrington, are assigned to the case and the girl asks Ripert to duplicate some jewels she shows him. The liner Eastern arrives and Ripert comes ashore, but Jean and Warrington note that he immediately reengages stateroom No. 3 for the return trip. Jean arranges to get the same room, and when the boat is leaving, after Ripert has given the jewels she desired to Jean, Henri finds that the girl detective is in the same room he has engaged, and while the girl and he go to the steward to have matters straightened Warrington remains behind and sees Ripert enter the room, remove a deckboard under the bunk and take a bag of jewels from it. Henri discovers Warrington and overpowers him, but Jean enters and covers the two crooks with a pistol until assistance arrives. The croks then confess that they have been operating a wholesale business in this manner. Cleo Ridgley featured.

The Blessed Miracle—Lubin—(Three Reels)—March 24.—George and Gail Bowman, after five years of married life, find themselves childless and unhappy. Diane King, an adventuress and a former schoolmate of Gail's plans to secure George and his riches for herself. As he finds himself falling into Diane's power, George goes to New York, but the adventuress follows him. He cannot resist her when they again meet and writes Gail that if she desires to get the divorce they have often talked about she may do so, as he has left for Europe, where he will remain for some time. Before the letter reaches Gail she realizes that a great happiness is to be hers and, believing that their child will bring them together, she writes George of the news after receiving his message, but Diane gets her letter and returns it unopened. Months pass and Gail fears that George is lost to her. In an effort to see him she goes to New York and takes rooms at the same hotel in which both Diane and he have engaged separate apartments. He enters the hotel on the day of his return and learns that his wife has just given birth to a child. As he passes Diane's room she attempt to stop him, but he tells her that Gail needs him. The adventuress' actions clearly prove to him that she cares nothing for him and that she was merely looking out for herself. He leaves her storming at him in anger and hurries to Gail's bedside to take their little son in his arms.

Alice of the Lake—Selig—March 24.—A young man is asked to care for the daughter of his friend, and though he is told by his physician that he has only a short time to live, he asks her to marry him that she may be provided for after his death. An unscrupulous suitor, who has already asked the girl to marry him, persuades her to accept her guardian's offer, saying that he will wait and that they will be married after her husband's death. The guardian learns of what has happened and, heart-broken by his wife's perfidy, goes away, asking her to respect his name while he is alive. When she is left alone she thinks the matter over and realizes her mistake. She rejects her unscrupulous lover and returns to the man she really loves in time to save him from plunging into a life of dissipation, which would have meant his death. He recovers and they find happiness together. Lillian Hamilton, E. J. Brady and Robyn Adair featured. The photography is clear throughout and the interior settings and exterior locations do justice to the story. C. J. C.

The Master of His House—Vitagraph—March 24.—Greene's wife devotes her entire time to card parties and Greene becomes tired of such an existence. He discharges the servants and, when his wife declares that she cannot cook herself, he proceeds to get the dinner. Although he makes quite a mess of it, he finally places food upon the table and sees that he eats most of it himself. The next time her card social is to be served by caterer—so she thinks—but Greene has another idea and chases the caterer out of the house, acting as cook himself. He takes all that he cooks into the presence of the guests and eats it. When they have gone, he forces his wife to attempt cooking and she fails miserably. His treatment, however, has brought her to the realization that she is really doing nothing for him, and after having a good cry she promises that in the future she will devote her entire time to keeping house. Billy Quirk and Constance Talmadge featured.

The Love Transcendent—Biograph—March 25.—John Gage loves Ruth West, but she marries his friend, Charles Grey. The young couple are apparently happy; a child is born to them. Suddenly Ruth discovers that her husband has been systematically robbing his employer. Threatened with imprisonment unless he refunds the money he has stolen, Grey is at his wits' end. Ruth appeals to her erstwhile lover for aid. John Gage has been despondent in his lonliness, and has been saved from suicide by a prospector, with whom he has struck up a friendship. He welcomes an opportunity to help Ruth. Returning home with the money, she finds her husband dead by his own hand. With her child she goes back to join John, whose love for her has transcended all.

The Two Bold Bad Men—Essanay—March 25.—Ben Turpin and Leo White, now at the western studio, are featured in this single-reel release, as two bold bad men who come into town ready for any criminal act. When they find the village constable asleep, they enter the home of a nagging husband just as his wife turns on him and throws him out. The husband then assists them in stealing everything in the place, which they hide in a trunk. Later, the constable following them, removes the silverware from the trunk and hides therein himself.

Unconscious of the change, they carry the trunk to the barnyard and bury it, but the constable emerges from the ground to overpower and capture them. N. G. C.

The Tale of a Hat—Kalem—March 25.—Fossell sees his wife flirting with Dud and becomes jealous. When Mrs. Fossell returns a hat she has purchased and it is bought by Mrs. Dud, it is only natural that Fossell should see Mr. and Mrs. Dud walking down the street and mistake Mrs. Dud for Mrs. Fossell. He follows them home and becomes enraged when he sees Dud kissing the woman he believes is his wife. To get more evidence, he has himself lowered from his own room, one floor above Dud's, and peeks through the window. Dud sees him, and seizing him by the trousers pulls him down. The garments come off and, when Fossell hits the ground, he immediately starts to run for cover. A marathon race is taking place and Fossell becomes mixed up with the runners. He believes that they are pursuing him and puts on so much speed that he crosses the finish line before any of the contestants. He is declared the winner and receives the gold trophy, but his happiness is cut short when his angry wife rushes up and drags him home.

Men of the Mountains—Lubin—(Two Reels)—March 25.—Hooper, a dictatorial old mountaineer, forces his daughter, Meg, to marry Jasper, a gambler, when the girl is really in love with Ned Davis. Ned goes away after the ceremony is performed and travels to the lumber country, where he secures a timber tract. Jasper's gambling shack is raided and he is forced to flee, taking Meg with him. Two years later Meg is very unhappy, because of the treatment she and her child receive from Jasper. Later he robs a miner who stops at their cabin and again flees, taking Meg and the child with him. The infant soon dies. Hooper and his two sons leave their home to visit Meg and Jasper, knowing nothing of her trouble. The gambler and Meg arrive at Ned's cabin, but they do not recognize him because of the beard he has grown. Jasper attempts to secure Ned's land by gambling, but Ned beats him at his own game and then gambles his money against Meg and also wins. Covering Jasper with a pistol he takes Meg and her child and hits the trail. Meg, not knowing that Ned is trying to save her, is the means of disarming him and giving Jasper the advantage over him. Hooper and his sons have come upon the miner and learn from him of Jasper's crooked work and of the manner in which he abuses Meg. They set out in pursuit and, just as Jasper is about to kill Ned, they come upon them and one of the boys fires the bullet which brings the gambler to the ground. Ned then makes himself known and is met by the outstretched hand of Hooper, while in Meg's eyes he reads the promise of future happiness.

A Titled Trio—Mina—March 25.—Wilfull Netty declares she will marry no one but a count, despite the fact that her mother has selected handsome Harry and her father educated Ed to be her hubby. Father and mother convert their two favorites into counts, by means of disguises, and Netty also secures a count by calling up the Royal Matrimonial Bureau. Harry and Ed call on Netty and get into a dispute over which will wed her. While they are in the back yard settling the matter in true nobleman style, the count from the Matrimonial Bureau arrives and Netty welcomes him. Father and mother join in the fight between Harry and Ed, as do the cook and her policeman-sweetheart. Just as Netty is convinced that she has found her ideal, the policeman sees the Matrimonial Bureau count and exposes him as the barber living in the next block. Therefore, Netty is still unwed.

The Other Man's Wife—Vitagraph—March 25.—Governor Grant, overworked, takes a vacation, leaving his young wife, Madge, and his private secretary in his home together. He goes to the woods incognito, where he amuses himself by flirting with the wife of Jake, his guide. Jake becomes intensely jealous and, when he sees a man kissing his wife, shoots him. The man proves to be his wife's father, rather than the governor and he is placed under arrest. The governor returns home and finds so much work stacked up that he forgets his wife completely and plunges into it. His wife turns to the private secretary for companionship, and when the governor finds her sobbing out her sorrow on the secretary's shoulder, he orders both of them from his home. Jake's wife visits the governor of the state to secure a pardon for her husband and meets the man who caused all her trouble, but whose identity she did not know before. When he learns of what he has done, he realizes that he was wrong, not only in this case but also in the case of his wife and secretary, and after giving Jake's wife the pardon she asked, he sets out to find Madge. When they meet he tells her that he has realized his unworthiness and begs her forgiveness, which she grants.

A Stop-Off in New Mexico—Biograph—March 26.—The inquisitive tourist disturbs the slumbers of a "bad man" who is taking his siesta near the railroad station. Fleeing for his life, the tourist soon creates a sensation in a sleepy town, and provides plenty of excitement for the other passengers before the limited train pulls out. Meanwhile, his wife is in a "state of mind" over his disappearance, and when he returns she is so thankful that she readily forgives his escapade. On the same reel is:

A Hot Foot Romance—Biograph—March 26.—A tramp steals Smith's shoes off the back porch and evades capture. Smith and the policeman chase a reputable citizen who, on his way to be married, is carrying his shoes because his feet hurt him. Things get so hot that the bridal party leaves the house and is whisked away in an automobile. The car behaves so strangely that they abandon it and perform the ceremony in the open road, running at top speed from the pursurers, who finally catch the tramp asleep in the automobile.

A Theft in the Dark—Edison—(Three Reels)—March 26.—The last of the "Lord Stranleigh" series, featuring Marc MacDermott, Miriam Nesbitt, Edward Earle and Viola Dana. Stranleigh finally musters up courage enough to blurt out a proposal to Lady Sinclair, but she meets him with the old accusation, that he has done nothing unselfish or worth wile in his life. Lady Sinclair's necklace disappears at a reception given by her, and the guests are detained until the arrival of detectives from London. By some clever sleuthing Stranleigh learns that Ralph Vernon is the thief and obtains possession of the jewels. Later Stranleigh prevents Vernon from eloping with Lady Sinclair's sister, Genevieve, and tells her of Vernon's theft. She exacts a promise of secrecy from Stranleigh, which he keeps, though it comes very near breaking his friendship with Lady Sinclair. When she learns the truth she realizes that Stranleigh is capable of making sacrifices and promises to marry him. A review of this feature appears on page 489 of this issue.

The Great Silence—Essanay—(Three Reels)—March 26.—One of the best stories recently seen on the Essanay screen with Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne playing more convincing roles than has recently fallen to their lot. John Landon, an Alaskan, and half owner of "the Nugget" gold mine, tires of the great silence of the northern wastes and returns to civilization, where, by chance, he encounters Loyal Channing in the city, and instantly falls in love. Loyal is the daughter of Nicholas Channing, an unscrupulous capitalist, who manages, with the aid of his son Arthur and his daughter Loyal to ensnare Landon. They arrange a wedding and Landon gives Loyal many shares of his mine stock, which she turns over to her father, who promptly proceeds to sell it to save himself from ruin. When Landon discovers what has happened, he forces Channing to confess his act, though the shock of exposure causes his death, and then, after explaining everything to his wife, leaves to return to Alaska. Too late she discovers she really loves him and follows him into the great silence.

The Thief in the Night—Lubin—March 26.—Ruined because of the crooked work of Adams, an unscrupulous stock dealer, Arling returns home, determined to commit suicide. He gazes at the picture of a girl on his table and then reads her letter saying that because of a tragedy in her life, which is bound to come between them, she cannot marry him. As he is about to fire a bullet into his brain a burglar who has been hiding in the room springs out and stops him and takes the pistol away. The intruder also snatches the photograph and trembles as he looks upon the girl's face. Then he reads the letter and, after tying Arling to the chair, so that he may not escape, and shutting off the gas, hurries from the house. He goes to Adams' rooms and arrives just as that gentleman is about to get away with the spoils of his stock gamble and forces him to give up the money that he took from Arling. He then hurries to the girl's home, where he is greeted warmly by her and tells her of what he witnessed at Arlin's home. She immediately writes another letter, which he takes and returns to Arling, whom he finds asleep with the gas turned on. He wakes the young man up and convinces him that he is not overcome by gas, as the gas has been shut off. He also shows him the money and the letter from the girl which says that nothing now stands between them. Arling asks an explanation from the burglar and he says that the girl is his sister and that years before Adams swindled him out of a fortune and then fired a bullet into his head which made his mind a blank. The girl had heard that he was living the life of a criminal and this was the obstacle between her and Arling. It was not until he saw her picture that his mind returned. Promising Arling that everything is all right, the burglar leaves, but the young man vows that he will repay him for what he has done. Kempton Greene, Ormi Hawley and Earle Metcalfe featured.

The Clam-Shell Suffragettes—Selig—March 26.—The fun in this farce comedy comes from the application of modern tendencies to the stone age. There are so many characters used that the laughs will be drawn principally from the individual actions, but it is certain that they will be plentiful. Lillian Brown Leighton and John Lancaster have the leading roles. The story of the picture tells how a lazy young man, after marrying a rich woman, settles down to a life of comfort. She believes he should work and one day while resting in a hammock falls asleep and dreams that she is living in the stone age. The men of the tribe insist on the women doing all the work and allow them no pleasure. Finally the women rebel and organize the Clam-Shell Suffragettes. Then follows half a reel of feminine discipline which completely changes the ideas of the men about the opposite sex. When the rich woman awakes she decides that the dream has offered a valuable suggestion and applies the same treatment to her husband successfully. C. J. C.

The Lady of Shalott — Vitagraph — March 26.—Ivy and Lily Skinner, sisters, love the village schoolmaster, and when he shows preference for Lily, Ivy, who is of a romatic, novel-reading nature, determines to die as her favorite heroine of fiction, "The Lady of Shalott," did. She decks herself up in her very best and, getting into a row-boat, pushes it out from shore, but after going a few feet it becomes stuck in the mud and Ivy, singing as her heroine did while going to her death, attracts the attention of Captain Starboard, a grouchy retired sea capitain. He wades out in the knee-deep water and pulls the boat to shore and then carries Ivy home. She suffers a cold as a result of her adventure and the captain's visits to see how she is getting along soon leads to a new hero replacing the schoolmaster in her heart. Not so very long afterwards the Skinner sisters are brides in a double wedding, the captain and schoolmaster being the grooms. Flora Finch, Kate Price, William Shea and Jay Dwiggins featured.

A Foothill Problem — Biograph — March 27.—Unable longer to stand her brother's brutality, the girl runs away with a stranger. He, too, proves to be a brute and at the first opportunity she deserts him—on the trail where he camps for the night. Wandering, she reaches a lone prospector's cabin and is given shelter after telling her story. The man is a sharp contrast to the other and she clings to him when, in the morning, the stranger discovers where she is, and later when her brother also finds her. Daunted by the prospector, the stranger departs and meets the girl's brother, whom he tricks into believing that the prospector is the guilty man. At the cabin the brother learns the true state of affairs, and goes after the blackguard. A desperate running fight between them culminates in the death of both. Thus the girl is free.

The Outlaw's Awakening—Essanay—March 27.—G. M. Anderson is seen in the role of the outlaw preparing to rob the stage, when he receives a letter from his wife telling him to lead a good life for the sake of her and their baby, thereby filling him with such remorse that he refuses to rob the stage, though his companions proceed with the hold-up. Later the sheriff sets out to capture the bandits, and when he arrests the innocent outlaw the latter is so disgusted that he prepares to resume his criminal career. In the meanwhile the posse captures the real bandit and the outlaw encounters his wife and baby girl, so he goes back to decent living. N. G. C.

The Phantom Thief—Edison—March 27.—This is the Dramatic Mirror contest picture. The story is unique in construction, even quiet it might be termed, leaving the responsibility of its succes rest almost entirely upon its cast. The latter part receives most artistic treatment in the hands of Gertrude McCoy as Lady Sylvia, Edward Earle as Kenneth Turner, Hal Wright as Ralph Kernes, Mr. Leoni as Cameron, William Carleton as Hawksley, Guido Culucci as M. Gambon, Sally Crute as Nana and Nellie Grant as Mrs. Badger. It has an unusually large cast for a single-reel drama, but it works up the climaxes without difficulty and puts them over with real acting rather than obvious situations telling the story. Briefly, it is of a portrait of Lady Sylvia painted by Kenneth Turner, with whom she is in love. She obtains his promise never to exhibit the work, though it is his best. A jealous model, formerly employed by Turner, represents herself to Sylvia as his wife. She writes him a brief note, breaking the engagement, and he, despondent, gives M. Gambon of the Royal Academy the portrait. Later Sylvia sees it in the gallery and thinks that Kenneth has broken his word. He steals the portrait that night and sends it to her. She, in the meantime, has learned the truth from the model. The next day Turner receives a visit from Sylvia, and their misunderstanding is soon a thing of the past. C. R.C.

The Girl at Lone Point—Kalem—March 27—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series, featuring Helen Holmes. A hot box causes Billy's express car to be detached from the train upon its arrival at Lone Point and the messenger goes to the station to visit Helen. Two crooks steal into the car while he is away and when Helen returns to the car with Billy they attack him and knock him senseless. They then lock Helen in the car with him and get away with the spoils. The girl revives Billy and breaks down the car door with a hatchet. The two men board a passing freight train and Helen manages to leap aboard the caboose of the same train. While the train crew are trying to capture the crooks, Helen goes forward on the cars and is trapped by one of the crooks. As he is about to throw her off, she separates the train. The crooks are taken back for a moment and as the cars close with the train one of the crooks is captured, while the other, who jumps to the ground from the train, is knocked down by a blow from Helen and also made a prisoner. The yeggmen are shackled together and taken to jail.

It Happened On Wash Day—Lubin—March 27.—Speedy Smith and John are rivals for the hand of Mattie, who proves herself to be very fickle. Smith plans to get John "in bad" with her by making her a target during a shooting affair between them. This he does and Mattie becomes so aggravated that she gets a bomb and blows them all up. On the same reel is:

Si and Sue Acrobats—Lubin—March 27.—Si and Sue live on the farm and are ambitious to become circus performers. Their acrobatic stunts do not meet with the approval of their parents, so they run away from home. In the city they stroll into a theater and break up a performance. The impression they create, however, is such that they secure engagements for a full season. After closing, they return to the farm, where a barbecue is given in their honor. Neighbors come from far and near to welcome them and, after the big dinner, Si and Sue entertain the crowd with marvelous feats of equilibrium.

Perils of the Jungle—Selig—March 27.—A Jungle-Zoo picture featuring Edwin Wallock, Marion Warner, William Stowell and Vivian Reed. Dalton, a civil engineer, and his assistant, George Leighton, are at work in the African jungle, accompanied by Dalton's wife and her sister, Annette, who is George's fiancee. To protect the women Dalton places mines about their cabin. The men are at work and, after having an exciting experience with a leopard, start to return home. Natives attack the cabin while Rose is alone and the chief is about to carry her off when Annette shoots him from a tree near the house, where she has taken refuge, and then shoots the keys on the switchboard, which explode the mines. The natives flee in terror just as the men arrive.

His Return — Majestic — March 5. — Harry, son of a wealthy father, is both handsome and wild, and after a debauch, quarrels with him and leaves home. Many years pass and the father dies pining for his boy, leaving him his fortune should he return within a certain time. He returns very shabbily and finds himself in love with his father's ward. Thinking of his wild life, he goes away, leaving her alone with the thoughts of her rich home.

Doggone It — Royal — March 20.—Frank, a ne'er-do-well, is told by his fiancee's father that he must cut out fast life or be left penniless, according to the terms of his father's will. Frank picks up a stray dog on the street, and takes it home, intending to give it to his girl. That night the girl's brother, who has taken a correspondence course in burglary, breaks into Frank's room and is caught by him. In exchange for his freedom he promises to pry open Frank's father's safe. The boy's father catches him in the act—but not before the boy finds a clause in the will granting him unconditional rights to the state.

Ethel's Doggone Luck—Komic—March 21.—This is chapter nineteen of the famous "Bill" series. Ketcher, a professional dog thief steals a valuable dog from Mrs. Dapper, and involves Ethel, Mr. Hadley, Ethel's sweetheart, and Bill, a policeman, in the affair by switching about several stolen dogs until everyone suspects everyone else of being a thief, and nobody knows which dog is his. In the end Mrs. Dapper recovers her dog, Ethel and her lover become reconciled, and Bill has a lively experience with a bull dog who refuses to let loose of his trousers.

The Forged Testament—Majestic—(Two Reels)—March 21—Mawby, an unscrupulous adventurer, beguiles a rich widow into marrying him. She soon discovers his real character. One night he wrests her purse from her, and falls in a semi-drunken stupor on the couch. Mrs. Halloway, who is affected with heart trouble feels an attack coming on, and, fearing that her husband will come into possession of her property in case of her death, she makes out a new will, bequeathing all to her daughter, Madeline, and hides it. After her death Mawby helps himself to her jewels. The locket, however, he gives to Madeline, thinking it worthless. Mawby fears that the missing will may be found, and tries in various ways to induce Madeline to marry him, but she refuses. At last he lures her to a roadhouse, and pretends to save her from disgrace, but she sees through his scheme. The reporter who is assigned to the case turns out to be an old friend of Madeline's and the story wired in by Mawby is suppressed. The girls find the missing will in the locket, and with it proves the will offered by Mawby to be forged.

The Stolen Jewels — Thanhouser—March 21.—William Jameson engages Bryce, a detective, to investigate several mysterious robberies that have taken place in one of his stores. Guy Manse, the manager throws suspicion upon Jack Kent, a young clerk, whose duty it is to lock the safe at night. The detective secures conclusive circumstantial evidence against Kent, and he is sent to prison. Mary Ball alone believes her sweetheart to be innocent. She suspects Manse, and one day sees him drop a pawn ticket. She notes the number of the ticket and the pawnbroker's name, and locates the stolen jewelry. Kent is freed, and the manager punished.

Ancestry—American — (Two Reels)—March 22.—The Duke of Larenzo is banished from Italy because of a duel with a count, who was his wife's lover. He leaves the duchess and their little daughter behind. Twenty years later an American artist meets the duchess and the girl, who the villagers believe to be her daughter, when they return from America. The duchess' mind becomes a blank and the girl does not tell those about her that she is merely a friend of the duchess' and that the woman's daughter is dead. The artist falls in love with the girl, but fears that he cannot marry her because of her royal blood. When the duke returns from his exile, however, the girl tells all and then agrees to become the wife of the artist. A review appears on page 469 of this issue. C.J.C.

The Game of Thrills — Reliance—March 22.—Jack Morris complains that there is no excitement or romance in New York and plans a trip to South America. Graves and Belden, his pals, conspire with an actress, Loretta Blair, to give Morris an adventure. She visits Morris at his hotel, representing herself to be a Russian woman, seeking to evade the secret police of her country. Graves and Belden, disguised as Russians, enter the apartment, bind and gag Morris and Loretta, and take them to a deserted house, where they lock them in. A tramp accidentally sets fire to the house, and when the two men return to release their captives they cannot even get through the fire lines. They believe themselves to be murderers of Morris and Loretta when they see the supposed victims coming towards them through the smoke. Morris tells them of their narrow escape and gladly forgives their serious little joke—for he has at last found romance in New York.

When the Fire Bell Rang—Beauty—March 23. — An exceptionally clever comedy dealing with the attempts of a fire lad to win the daughter of the department's chief. The action takes place in a small village and Fred Gamble's small town chief character could not be improved upon. It is genuinely funny. Irving Cummings is the fire lad and Virginia Kirtley the girl. Joseph Harris, as the meddling member of the force, is also one of the chief fun-makers. The chief objects to his daughter keeping company with one of the fire lads and, when the chief is called out of town on business, the girl and fire lad immediately plan to be married. The mischievous pal of the girl's lover, however, rings the fire bell, calling the chief back from the station. He stops the ceremony, but when he again starts for the station the minister is called back. The chief, missing his train, returns home in time to break up the affair the second time, but the fire lad's pal comes to the rescue and again rings the fire bell, causing the chief to leave the house long enough for the couple to be married. C. J. C.

The Greaser—Majestic—March 23.—Miguel loves Miriam, the ranchman's daughter, but does not disclose his feelings to her. John Clifton, hurt while hunting in the hills, is brought to the ranch, and falls in love with Miriam, his nurse. Miguel plots revenge. He sees Clifton accidentally kill a man, and is filled with savage joy, until he witnesses Miriam's meeting with her lover. He then determines to save Clifton for the girl. The Mexican trades clothes with him, is chased by the posse, and shot on disobeying the sheriff's command to halt. The girl and her lover realize, on seeing Miguel brought back dead, that he has sacrificed himself for their happiness.

The Duel in the Dark—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—March 23.—John Gregory, district attorney, carries on a vigorous campaign against clairvoyants and hypnotists who are swindling the people. His assistant, Ralph Morris, Gregory's daughter's fiance, suspects his superior of giving out advance information in regard to raids, and forces him to resign. His engagement with Florence is promptly broken off. Meanwhile, the girl has become worried about her mother's strange actions, and at last succeeds in winning from her the confession that she has been visiting Sardo the hypnotist leader. He cured her of a violent headache some time before, and since then, by means of mesmerism, has compelled her to spy upon her husband. Florence follows her mother on her next visit, and pits her will power and love for her mother against the hypnotist's control. After a terrible psychic struggle the girl wins. Sardo is arrested, Gregory, reinstated, and Morris, forgiven, marries Florence.

In the Switch Tower—Broncho—(Two Reels)—March 24.—Bill Wharton, once the best engineer on the road, is now a locomotive wiper. The cause is drink. A man is killed in a barroom fight, and Bill is arrested and sentenced to three years for the crime. His son, Joel, who left his father when a small boy has risen rapidly in the railroad and is now division superintendent. Knowing that his son will be disgraced if he hears of his father's imprisonment, Bill persuades his friend, Robert Hall, to write Joel, telling him that his father is dead. Three years later Bill is freed, and pays Hall a visit. He learns that Joel is coming back home and will visit Hall, and, sadly realizing that he is cut out of his son's life, he leaves. The division superintendent will not tolerate drinking among his employes, and discharges Alden for violating the ruling. Alden plots vengeance, and that night overpowers the towerman and is on the point of causing a collision between the eastbound Flyer and the special train carrying Joel and his wife, when Bill discovers him. A fierce struggle takes place during which Bill is stabbed. He throws the lever just in time to prevent the collision, and then falls dead.

The Black Sheep—Reliance—March 24.—Bob Holmes is exiled from home by his father in spite of his mother's plea that there must still be good in the boy. The father dies. Bob's sister marries and she and her husband move to a nearby town, her mother accompanying them. Bob is now a beggar on the streets. The sister's husband, one night, is attacked by thugs, and Bob, happening to be near, helps him beat them off, and assists him home. Holcomb invites his friend in need to stay over night in his house. Needing money to make his getaway, for the police have given him just twelve hours in which to leave town, Bob invades the library. He is surprised by his sister. The recognition is mutual. When Bob's mother and Holcomb appear on the scene the latter tells of Bob's brave and generous act in defending him against the thugs. The mother's faith in her boy is justified.

In the Heart of the Woods—American—March 24.—Vivian Rich appears as a girl of the wilds in this picture and her acting will certainly prove a delight to her admirers. The story contains many touches of heart interest and the characters are drawn in the most human manner. David Lythgoe, Harry Von Meter and Louise Lester appear in supporting roles. Jack Daley is turned down by his city sweetheart and goes to the woods to forget. Here he meets Nance Morgan, the daughter of the old game warden, but considers her merely as a child and does not notice that she falls in love with him. When he receives word that his city sweetheart has married another he is broken-hearted and pays no attention whatever when Nance attempts

Gentlemen:

Am enclosing check for a renewal of my subscription to "Motography." I am an exhibitor in about the smallest way possible, yet I find Motography to be more real help to me than all the advertising, heralds card, etc., the feature houses send out. I sure do enjoy it, and as there is a sort of club in the building and as I keep Motography on my desk which is in the room, it is in as much demand and read as extensively by members of the organization as any of the current fiction found in the place. I always supposed country exhibitors had a kick coming yet I've never seen any howls published in any picture magazine, why is it? Can't they write?

Truly yours, to console him. They are further separated when he kills her pet rabbit. At this time her father meets with an accident and dies. Jack realizes that he really cares for the girl for the first time when he sees her weeping. He tells her that if she wants him to come to her all she has to do is ask. She will not do this, however, but Jack's dog is the means of bringing about a reconciliation. C. J. C.

Tricked — Domino — (Two Reels)— March 25.—Sid Hart marries a wealthy woman, and rises rapidly in the business world while his brother, Tom, remains at home and supports his mother whom Sid grudingly allows five dollars a week. Tom, out of work, pleads with his brother to raise his mother's allowance, but unsuccessfully. In desperation he raises Tom's check from five to five hundred dollars, and sends his mother to the country for her health. Sid has him arrested. Their argument is overheard by Edna, Sid's stenographer, who is in love with Tom. She decides to aid him, and forces Sid, with her knowledge of the double life he is leading, to telephone the police to free Tom. Sid explains the existence of the other apartment to his wife by saying that it is a surprise for her birthday.

His Brother's Keeper — Kay-Bee — (Two Reels) — March 26. — Jeremiah Stokes and his wife, Malinda, make life miserable for David Stokes, Jeremiah's brother, who is an old veteran and too feeble to work on the farm. Amanda, the little slavey, is the old man's only friend. David applies to Washington for a pension, and Amanda pays the retaining fee of thirty-five dollars for him. In gratitude, he promises to divide his first allowance with her. Soon after this David is sent to the poorhouse by his brother. The pension attorney calls to interview the veteran, and Jeremiah refuses to tell where he is. Amanda overhears them arguing, gets out the buckboard and drives the attorney to the poorhouse. David joyfully receives his money, and establishes a home for Amanda and himself.

Jealousy—Thanhouser — March 26.— Arthur Compton is apt to drink too much at times, but Ruth, his young wife, is forbearing with him, hoping that gradually he may overcome the habit. One evening at the club he relates to John, his friend, the story of how he won Ruth from George, another of her suitors. Returning home, he drops into a chair in the library and falls asleep. In a dream he sees George and Ruth in the house together. He kills the intruder, is arrested, and is on the point of paying the price of his crime when he awakens. The dream makes him realize what might happen if he continues to drink, and he promises Ruth that he will abstain from liquor entirely.

Universal Program

Wifey's Fling—Imp—March 15.—This is one of the Mary Pickford reissues, and promises to be a little different from the ordinary line of domestic dramas.

At His Own Terms—Big U—March 16.—Murdock MacQuarrie and Agnes Vernon featured. John Marsh, a backwoodsman, has lived in the woods in Hazzard County for so long that he has come to believe that he has a right to a portion of the land. The Union Lumber Company, however, acquires legal title to the Hazzard County land, and notifies the squatters to vacate. Marsh stubbornly refuses, and prepares for a siege. Edward Burton, president of the lumber company, and his family arrive at the local hotel, and Mrs. Burton and Teddy go for a walk through the woods. Teddy becomes lost and is found by Marsh who takes him to his cabin, and entertains him with his fiddle. The hunting party comes to the cabin, looks through the window, and sees the object of their search within. Burton is so affected by the squatter's kindness that he settles for the land with him at his own terms.

Animated Weekly—Universal—March 17.—Bicycle rider starts for Panama-Pacific Exposition, chained to his wheel; daring steeplejack at work, Easton, Pa.; skiing meet, Montreal, Canada; the St. Helena sails for Belgium with food for the sufferers, also the Kansas; the German cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich arrives at Newport News, Va., for repairs, carrying prisoners of many nationalities; the Kaiser on the battlefields of Europe; cartoons by Hy Mayer.

The Golden Spider—Victor—March 19.—Featuring Mary Fuller. John Rock, a human spider whose wealth enables him to ensnare foolish girls with promises of untold pleasure, stops in front of Joan's home one day to fix his car. Joan, a whole-souled girl living with her younger sister, Millie, recognizes him, and tells her sister of his unsavory past. Left alone, Millie, like the foolish fly, flirts with the "golden spider" and accepts his invitation to go riding. That night Joan visits Rock to inquire about Millie, and is told that the girl was killed in an accident. To avenge her sister's error Joan attacks Rock, and he has her arrested. Several years later she is freed from prison and her first act is to call on Rock. He, a wreck from drink and dissipation, receives such a shock on seeing Joan advance towards him, knife in hand, that he drops dead. She is happy in the belief that Justice has righted the wrong done her sister and herself.

One Night—Imp—March 22.—Featuring King Baggot and Arline Pretty. The woman deserted by her husband is unable to provide her baby with the necessities of life and one night leaves it on the steps of an imposing mansion. A crook enters the house and is about to depart with his loot when he hears the infant crying. He takes it in and places it on the sofa. Shortly afterwards the woman returns for her child and is stricken with remorse at not finding it. The crook comes out, hears her story, and takes her to the child. The millionaire returns home, surprises them, and is about to 'phone the police when the crook stops him, and tells him the woman's story. Convinced that he is telling the truth, the millionaire allows the pair to go free and gives them a check with which to start life anew.

The Wrong Address—Joker—March 22.—Bob and Tim, rivals in business and love, quarrel, and Tim, who gets thrashed, avenges his bruises by changing about the reading matter in two ads set by Bob and inserted by an uplift society and a burlesque company. A veritable riot results, and the angry parties involved practically wreck the printing shop.

Mary's Duke—Victor—(Three Reels) March 22.—An amusing romance featuring Mary Fuller and Matt Moore. Mrs. McGuire, wife of wealthy soap manufacturer, insists on marrying her daughter, Mame, to a title, and orders a nobleman from a matrimonial agency. Mame finds an invitation to the exclusive Van Duysen mask ball, and attends, dressed as Pierrette. Teddy Van Duysen, who dresses as Pierrott, takes a fancy to the shy little girl, and dances with her through the entire evening. She refuses to unmask or to tell him her name. He changes rings with her so they can identify each other when they meet after twelve. Mame does not wait for the time to unmask, but returns home to dream of her gallant Pierrot. The matrimonial bureau makes arrangements with Mrs. McGuire for a marriage between Mame and the Duke Alfonso D'Enfetti, and the happy mother plans a grand dinner at which her daughter is to be presented to her fiance. When the night arrives Mrs. McGuire finds that she is short one guest, and telephones a fashionable club, hoping that someone will accept the invitation. Young Van Duysen hears of it and, for a lark, attends as "Jones." During the course of the evening Mame and he are brought together, and the discovery of the rings follows. In spite of the McGuires' objections Van Duysen and Mame are married. The socially ambitious parents are overjoyed on learning that Teddy is one of the rich Van Duysens.

When Jealousy Tumbled—Big U—March 23.—Ray Gallagher and Edna Maison featured. Allan Frisbee is extremely jealous of even the slightest attention paid to his wife, and for this reason takes a great dislike to a Mr. Gagnon, who is one of the guests at his wife's dinner party. Gagnon becomes acquainted with a woman who bears a remarkable resemblance to Mrs. Frisbee. The latter's husband sees Gagnon and this other woman out driving together, and returns home in a rage to wait for his wife. She has spent the day with her mother-in-law and is both surprised and shocked when on returning home, she is greeted with accusations by her husband, who is armed with a revolver. They set out for his mother's home to prove her claims, and on the way pass a disabled machine. Seated in it are Gagnon and the woman that Frisbee took to be his wife. Humbled and crestfallen, the jealous husband orders his chauffeur to turn about and drive back home.

The Human Menace—Gold Seal—(Two Reels)—March 23—Featuring Cleo Madison. Halsey Burnes, engaged to Zoe Wharton, betrays her confidence and runs away with another girl. He leaves a note for Zoe, advising her to go to the city until it all blows over. The poor girl's first thoughts are of suicide, but she finally decides that it is best to face it out, and departs for the city. Shortly after her baby's death she meets Mamie, a girl of the streets, and accompanies her to the Thalia. There, while dancing, she attracts Judson Holmes, and he proposes to her. She accepts but does not tell him of Halsey or the baby. He introduces her at home as the new mistress, but his daughter, Ellen, receives her coolly. At a reception she is presented to her husband's friends, one of whom is Halsey. She follows him and Ellen to a secluded spot in the conservatory, and overhears Halsey begging Ellen to elope. Zoe then tells her husband all, and he prevents his daughter from eloping with the deceiver. Zoe is about to leave the house when he gathers her into his arms and tells her that her past is nothing to him.

It Happened on a Friday—Nestor—March 23.—Jimmie Marsden and Madge Jordon, both on their way to attend a house party given by Mary Holmes, get their suitcases mixed in getting off of a street car. Two crooks rob Jimmie of his suitcase, but he captures them, and takes them to a police station. On opening the suitcase the police find only girl's clothes, and arrest Jimmie for kidnapping. In the meantime Miss Fish, the school teacher, calls up Madge's mother to inquire for Madge's sick brother, and learns that nothing is wrong with him. She fears that the telegram Madge showed her was a hoax to lead the girl into a trap, and notifies the police, telling them that they will know the kidnappers by the initials on the suitcase. This complicates matters further, and in time Frank Jordon, who invited Jimmie to the party is dragged into the case. It ends by everybody arriving at the police station at the same time. Then the mystery is explained.

To Redeem an Oath—Laemmle—(Two Reels)—March 24.—A boy taunts his his younger brother because he cannot climb a cliff. The other makes an attempt and falls, injuring himself so that he will be crippled for the rest of his life. From that time on the older brother's love is evidenced in a series of sacrifices for the other boy. At last love comes into their lives, and the girl chooses the stronger brother. He learns that his crippled brother also loves the girl, and decides to make the crowning sacrifice of his life, but the invalid insists that he loves not his brother's fiancee, but his nurse. The couples are married, and the happy lovers take up their journey in life, leaving the nurse and the cripple to console each other.

No. 329—Big U—(Two Reels)—March 25.—Murdock MacQuarrie featured. To pay his gambling debts, Jim Small robs his employer's safe, and throws suspicion upon a fellow-worker, John Anders. Unable to clear himself, Anders is sent to prison. Ten years later he is released, but cannot find work because of his past record. He goes West and, under an assumed name, obtains employment. Ten years pass. Anders is now one of the town's respected citizens and president of the board of aldermen. He opposes the building of a bridge, the contract for which is solicited by Small, now employed by an engineering concern. During Ander's address the other recognizes him, and arranges a conference at his hotel. During the evening Small unconcernedly scribbles on a pad of paper, each time writing 329 which was Anders' number in prison. The latter feels that his fight has been for naught, and returns home discouraged, the figures 329 continually bobbing up before his mind. During the night Small's hotel burns, and he, fatally injured, confesses his part in the safe robbery. The next morning Anders is overjoyed to read the account of the confession in the papers.

Six Months to Live—Rex—March 25. Howard Ellsworth consults a doctor about his heart, and is told that he has but six months to live. He determines to get all the pleasure possible out of the rest of his life, and chooses cocaine as the means. He forsakes his brother, friends, everyone that will not cater to his passion for wild pleasure, and sinks rapidly in the social scale, finally reaching the bottom. A pitiful wreck, he learns that the doctor misinformed him, confusing his case with that of another of his patients. He calls on the doctor, bent on murder, and finds the man caught in the vise of one of his experiments. Ellsworth's office boy pulls his script out of the typewriter, and rushes in to show his first story to his boss.

Uncle John—Imp—(Two Reels)—March 26.—John Waldron, millionaire, objects to his son, Horace's charity work and finally, after a quarrel, the latter leaves home and takes a room in a cheap tenement house. Horace falls in love with Helen, the artist across the hall, and sends a man over to buy some of her pictures for him. He also, by letter, attempts to buy the tenement house from his father, but the old crank refuses to sell, and decides to visit the building which has suddenly become so interesting and which he has never seen. In going down the dark, narrow stairway he slips and sprains his ankle. The three Moore children, who have been subsisting for a week upon the earnings of Jimmy who sells newspapers, take the old and poorly dressed man in, bathe his ankle, and spend their last few pennies to buy him something to eat. The act opens old Waldron's eyes, as do several evidences of open-hearted generosity which he witnesses during the time he is confined in bed. The result is that he becomes reconciled with his son, adopts the Moore children does what he can to improve conditions in his tenement buildings and enjoys a clear conscience and happy disposition long before the date set for Horace's marriage to Helen.

They Were on Their Honeymoon—Nestor—March 26.—Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde, and Lee Moran featured. Eddie, a freshman, is chased to the railroad station by the upper classmen, who are bent on hazing him. It happens that Lee and Vic, honeymooners, happen to be waiting for a train at the same station. The college men mistake Lee for Eddie, and haze him. Afterwards they see their mistake and seize poor Eddie.

The Danger Line—Victor—March 26.—Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby, and Brinsley Shaw featured. Ralph Tuck and Sue Burman love each other despite the feud existing between the two families. Lud Connors, a brutal mountaineer, also loves Sue, and informs her father of the girl's clandestine meetings with young Tuck. Old Burman declares war on the Tucks on learning this, and shortly afterwards comes face-to-face with Ralph's father in the woods. Burman is badly wounded in the duel and Sue, thinking that it was Ralph who shot him, stirs the mountaineers to raid the Tuck home. But they are too late. Ralph has already left for the city. Burman recovers his memory and vindicates Ralph. Five years pass. Sue succumbs to Lud's wooing and they are on their way to be married when they meet Ralph returning home. The rivals fight, and Lud gets the worst of it. Sue begs forgiveness of Ralph, and later calls on Ralph and his mother and asks them to take her into the family.

The Hidden City—Bison—(Two Reels)—March 27.—Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. Lieutenant Johns, a British officer, in chasing an Arab comes to the wall of a hidden city, but cannot find the gate. He sees the Arab, who happens to be the minister, push a secret button in the wall, disclosing the gate. He enters by the same method, and is captured by the natives. The queen is attracted to him, but when he pays no attention to her caresses, she orders his death. Later she regrets her action and aids his escape. The minister discovers her part in the affair and tells her that, as she has robbed the fire of its sacrifice, she must take the intended victim's place. Johns overhears this, and makes his way to a nearby camp for aid. The English soldier break in upon the ceremony, but are too late. The queen has already jumped into the fire. They punish the minister by stringing him up by the thumbs.

Dixie's Day Off—Joker—March 27.—Dixie, a valuable chimpanzee belonging to a circus, escapes from his cage, and nearly scares the town to death. He takes refuge in the bunaglow occupied by Jimmy and Nellie, newlyweds. Professor Lazelle, the trainer, follows him into the house, but is unable to find him. Nellie thinks the gesticulating Frenchman crazy, and frantically calls up Jimmy. Mike, a footpad, approaches the house, and Nellie has him evict the professor. When Jimmy arrives Mike keeps up the good work, and throws him out, too. Nellie and the maid hide in one of the clothes closets, and Mike takes advantage of the opportunity to collect the silverware. Dixie makes his appearance again, and Mike climbs on top of the shower bath. Jimmy, accompanied by an officer and the professor, enter and bring Mike down by turning on the hot water. The silver is taken from him, and he is thrown into jail.

The Ace of Clubs—Powers—March 27.—Sydney Ayres featured. Reginald, the only son of Roland Staples, is addicted to drinking and gambling. One night on returning home he accidentally drops the ace of clubs on the floor before his father. The latter picks it up, and tells his son the story of how he nearly ruined his own life by giving in to his weaknesses. At the time that Reginald was a baby Roland Staples spent most of his time and all of his money in saloons. One day, in a fit of ugliness, he beat his wife, took away from her the money she had earned by doing washing, and ran out of the house. In following him, the poor wife got in the path of a car and was killed. The son promises to profit by his father's stern lesson, and gives up his bad habits.

The Bay of Seven Isles—Laemmle—March 28.—The skipper of a whaler falls in love with Margaret, who lives in the town of Seven Islands Bay. They plan to elope, as Margaret's mother opposes their marriage. Susette, Margaret's twin sister, learns of the plot, and informs her mother who locks Margaret in her room. Susette, herself, keeps the tryst, and is taken on board of the skipper's ship, but the next morning the deception is discovered, and Susette taken back to shore. In the meantime, the shock and disappointment have caused Margaret's death. The skipper, on the way to her house is stopped by the tolling of the funeral bell. Afterwards a story is told in the town about a phantom ship resembling the Breeze that is often seen far out at sea and which, on approaching the shore, fades into mist.

A Change in Lovers—L-Ko—March 28.—One of the inimitable comedies in which Hank Mann and Gertrude Selby are featured and which is filled with laughs from start to finish. The incidents are so arranged that not a dull moment appears through out the entire picture. C. R. C.

The Desert Breed—Rex—March 28.—Pauline Bush, Lon Chaney, and William Dowlin featured. The little cow camp of Rawhide is awakened by the sound of shots coming from the saloon. Fred and Jack lose the pursuing cowboys in the darkness and, riding up to Pauline's lone cabin at the desert's edge, demand entrance. Receiving no answer they force their way in, and find themselves staring into the muzzle of Pauline's gun. Good-naturedly they obey her command to leave and camp for the night a short distance away. Later, Pauline is again awakened by a pounding on the door, and thinking that it is the two refugees again, she opens fire. When her shots are returned Pauline becomes afraid, and dives under the bed covers. Fred and Jack find the cowboys insulting her, and capture them. In gratitude, Pauline shows them the trail across the desert.

Feature Programs

Alliance

The High Hand—(Six Reels)—Favorite Players.—The latest release of the Carlyle Blackwell Company, in which

Carlyle is seen in the role of Jim Warren, who came up from a ranch to the superintendent's desk in a big steel works. Francques, henchman of Lewis, a political boss, sees in the young superintendent a tool through whom he can ruin his superior. Warren runs for the legislature against Lewis, and by means of evidence furnished by Francques, is able to win. Lewis takes his defeat calmly, and through his influence, Warren meets the speaker of the house, Mr. Tillinghast, and Edna, his daughter, with whom he immediately falls in love. Lewis' wedding to Edna is to occur, as soon as Tillinghast has been elected governor, but as time passes she realizes she does not love Lewis, but Warren. Lewis plots Warren's undoing, and bribes of every sort, such as marked bills, stocks and bonds, are lavished upon the apparently unsuspecting legislator. When the trap is thought ready to spring, Lewis exposes Warren as a grafter, but the latter plays his high hand by conducting the investigators to the vaults of a bank where all the bribes are neatly arranged, untouched, together with names of the givers and evidence which results in many of them going to the penitentiary. Weeks later, when Warren has been nominated for governor, Edna decides to become the governor's wife.

The Pageant of San Francisco—Alliance—Pageant—(Five Reels).—This new Alliance release depicts in historical sequence the events in the rise of the city of San Francisco. Portola and his band of adventurers are seen departing from the Spanish settlement of San Diego and traveling northward until they at last reach San Francisco Bay. After reporting the results of the expedition to the Royal Viceroy a number of settlers under the command of Juan Baptista Anza and Padre Junipero Serra, a monk, are dispatched to form a Spanish colony there. The banners of the church and of Spain are raised aloft and the settlement named in the honor of St. Francis. A hundred years later the first Yankee arrives and at that moment begins the great expansion and prosperity which has made California famous. Following the Mexican War, California became a territory of the United States, and in 1849 the finding of gold is pictured. Ere another year has passed California is admitted to the sisterhood of states and the next decade sees the growing city in the clutches of a ring of lawless politicians, though law-abiding citizens eventually emancipate their city. The great earthquake follows, and the rebuilding of the almost destroyed city proves the indomitable spirit of the inhabitants. The film closes with a beautiful panoramic view of the Panama-Pacific exposition, with the hills of the Golden Gate as a background.

Fox

Kreutzer Sonata—(Six Reels)—Fox.—A wonderful production of the famous Tolstoi novel in which Nance O'Neil is featured, supported by Theda Bara and William E. Shea. The story is dramatic from start to finish, as is usually the case with productions put on by Herbert Brennon. It begins in Russia, where Miriam is threatened with disgrace on account of an unfortunate love affair with a young officer. Finding it impossible to wed her the officer shoots himself, leaving a request that she marry someone else to be the father of her unborn child. Gregor Randon, a musician, is induced to become her husband for a certain sum, and the couple go to America, where they are followed by Miriam's family, including her sister, Celia. A clandestine love affair takes place between Gregor and Celia and the sister, who eventually discovers through Gregor Miriam's secret, is soon placed in an even more compromising position by the birth of a child. Miriam is rendered desperate over the situation and takes vengeance into her own hands, killing her unfaithful husband and unnatural sister.

The Nigger — Fox — (Five Reels). — William Farnum is featured in this great American drama from the pen of Edward Sheldon. Governor Morrow, elected on the liquor ticket of Cliff Noyes, a distiller and political boss is about to sign the bill which will ruin Noyes' business, when the boss confronts him and tells him that he has negro blood in his veins and that if the prohibition bill is signed he will publish the whole story in the newspaper which he controls. Morrow realizes his secret exposed to the world would mean his political ruin and the loss of Georgiana Byrd, the belle of the state, whom he loves with all his heart. At first Morrow believes Noyes is trying to frighten him and demands proof of the charge, but Noyes with a triumphant grin produces a bundle of documents which proves the statement and he also summons in Mammy Jinny, Morrow's old negro "Mammy,"and she testifies that Morrow is the son of her sister, the "yeller gal" known to Noyes. Morrow, white and stern, but determined to do his duty, signs the bill in spite of Noyes' threat. He meets Georgiana and tells her the truth and, though the girl is utterly crushed, she bravely goes to his side and declares they will go North and begin life all over again. Morrow, however, thrusts her gently aside and as the film closes he is seen going out on the balcony to address a delegation who have assembled to hear the governor. He plans to make the speech in which he will resign his office, brand himself as an outcast and become a "white nigger."

Mutual Master Pictures

The Quest — American Distinctive Creations—(Five Reels).—A millionaire tires of the false life he is leading and boards a ship owned by a friend. The ship is wrecked and he alone survives. He reaches an island inhabited by a lost tribe. Here he meets his "dream girl" in the form of Nai, the daughter of the tribe's chief. They fall in love and decide to marry, but the chief declares she must wed one of the tribe. The father's favored suitor pursues the lovers when they attempt to elope, but is killed by lightning. The millionaire and Nai are married and go to the hills. Later the old priest of the tribe comes to them and says that the chief has repented and that he wishes them to return to the tribe. The millionaire's friends, cruising in a yacht, arrive off the island and the millionaire plans to take Nai back to civilization the next day. That night he has a dream, however, in which he sees the terrible effect society would have upon the girl of the wild and, when the dream ends in a tragedy, he awakes and tells the priest that Nai and he will return as he desires. A review appeared on page 433 of the March 20 issue.

The Lost House—Majestic—(Four Reels)—March 25.—This is one of the Mutual Master-pictures, and features Lillian Gish and Wallace Reid. Dosia Dale's uncle has spent her fortune, and, as the time approaches when he will be brought to account, he proposes marriage to his niece but is refused. Dr. Protheroe is then taken into his confidence, and they scheme to do away with Dosia. Dosia is locked in an upper room of Protheroe's house. She manages to slip a note through the window bars, and the finder takes it to the Press Club as directed. Ford, a reporter, sees the note, and decides to investigate. After some time he locates Dosia, and then calls on Dr. Protheroe, telling him that he is suffering from a nervous breakdown. The doctor locks him in a room, but he escapes and makes his way to Dosia's room. Before leaving the club Ford left instructions to have the doctor's place raided if he was not out at a certain time. The police arrive, and besiege the house which Protheroe and the uncle are defending. The house catches fire, and Ford and Dosia make their escape over the roof, leaping through the flames into a net below. Protheroe and the uncle are shot to death. The story ends with Ford and Dosia happily engaged. C. R. C.

Paramount

Gretna Green—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—Marguerite Clark, featured in the famous comedy by Grace Livingston Furniss, portrays the character of Dolly Erskine, a little English belle who queens it over Harrowgate's beaux until she loses her heart to Richard Murray, a riding master. Richard, who in reality is the Earl of Basset, loses his head and heart to Dolly and when a friend is about to reveal Murray's real identity, Richard persuades him not to, as he has resolved to win Dolly without the assistance of his title or position. To save a frivolous married sister's reputation, Dolly visits Gretna Green, a famous lovers' haven in the north of Scotland, with Richard, and Dolly's own reputation is thereby placed in jeopardy, since she makes a statement while there which, according to the Scotch law, makes her Richard's wife. Most delightful comedy follows and in the end Dolly capitulates to her new husband.

Are You a Mason?—Famous Players — (Five Reels). — John Barrimore, already seen in several Famous Players productions, returns to the screen in the role of Frank Perry, a dashing young married man of exuberant spirits, who, when his wife announces her chief desire in life is to have him become a Mason, grasps the opportunity it affords for staying out several nights, explaining his absence with the statement that he is undergoing the ordeals of initiation at the Masonic lodge. One night his wife delightfully announces that her father, who is a Grand Master of the Masons, is coming to visit them. The manner in which Perry tries to keep his father-in-law from discovering his deception adds much fun to the story and the fun is further heightened by the fact that father-in-law has also deceived his family and is constantly manufacturing other deceptions to safeguard his first falsehood. How he is finally caught and cornered by his clever son-in-law, who emerges victorious from the chaos he has created, ends the comedy in a roar of laughter.

Pathe

The Bliss of Ignorance—Pathe—(Three Reels).—Henry King featured. Ernest Gray tires of working on the farm, and goes to the city where he becomes an ardent anarchist. While campaigning in the interests of his followers, he meets a philanthropist who induces him to go to work and secures for him a position in the library. Here he meets a pretty, innocent little girl, and they set up housekeeping and live together without the formalities of a marriage, though their intentions are pure. When

Ernest realizes the great mistake they have made, he leaves the girl, and seeks consolation in drink and evil companions. She, in the meantime, has wandered out into the country, and stopped at the Gray farm for food and rest. John, Ernest's brother, who lives alone, falls in love with the girl and they become married. Ten years later Ernest drifts back home, a physical wreck and a fugitive from justice. He is shocked at meeting the girl in his own home, but promises to keep their former relations a secret. A few days later Ernest dies. Ignorance would have saved him from many of his trials and troubles. C. R. C.

The Gorges of the Torn—Pathe.—Educational views of picturesque France. On the same reel with "The Prying Mantis," treating on the life and habits of this strange, pugnacious insect.

The Police Dog—Pathe.—This is the third of this series of cartoon comedies from the studio of J. R. Bray. It deals with the adventures of Officer Piffle and his canine mate, the Pinkerton Pup. It it hardly necessary to tell the story of this farce-comedy as anyone who has booked either of its predecessors will take this one regardless of the details. An exhibitor who has not yet introduced "The Police Dog" to his patrons is overlooking a good thing. It is about 750 feet in length. The reel is filled out with views of Seningham, India. C. R. C.

The Treasure—Pathe.—It is a rate treat to see the famous Thomas A. Wise in a single-reel picture. At the present time Mr. Wise is starring in a big Broadway production. The picture is comedy for the most part, but it contains several little scenes that will start tears in the eyes of the interested spectator. An old miser finds a little baby on his doorstep one day, and adores it as he never did money. Nothing is too good for the child. Compared to his former mode of living, the old man spends money lavishly in an effort to obtain the best of food, comforts, and playthings for the "new treasure." Some time later, the baby's mother calls for the child, saying that, poor as she is, she cannot do without it. The old man refuses to part with the baby, and adopts its mother into his family. C. R. Runaway June — Reliance—(Episode Nine)—March 10.—Marie, June's maid, and Henri, Mrs. Villard's chauffeur, go out joy-riding and are seen by June's dog, which follows them. Marie takes the collie back to the Villard home to surprise her mistress. On the way the dog discovers Ned and his detective hiding in the shrubbery. Henri and Jens, a hired man, overpower him, and hold him prisoner in the loft of the garage. Mr. Villard reappears at home, to his wife's great displeasure. Tommy Thomas confides to June what sort of a man he is—always in pursuit of several women at once. Villard attempts to make advances to June, but her collie intervenes, impairing both his clothes and dignity. June promises not to tell if he will decline the invitation to accompany Blye's party to Bermuda, she having already consented to go. Ned escapes from his captors, but arrives at the dock too late to board the Bermudian, on which are June and the others of Blye's party. C. R. C.

Universal Special

The Black Box—(Installment Three)—Universal—March 22.—In "The Pocket Wireless," Quest is confronted by two mysteries which must be solved. He perfects a pocket wireless instrument, and instructs Laura and Lenora in its use. The detective receives a strange note in one of the mysterious little black boxes telling him that he will probably find the necklace where the skeleton is hidden. Lenora takes a dislike to Craig, which is not lessened any by her seeing him listening at Craig's study door. Quest tries out his phototellsme on Inspector French, and astonishes the man by naming the bone which the latter holds in his hand as the left minor digit of the anthropoid skeleton. This convinces the inspector that Quest really can see by means of his phototellsme, the person and objects at the other end of the wire. By some keen detective work Quest locates the old skeleton in an old hut. He also finds that he is near Professor Ashleigh's house and enters. Shortly after the professor's arrival, Craig bursts into the room with the news that the hut is afire. The professor is prostrated by the loss of the skeleton, and Quest returns home to find awaiting him—Mrs. Rheinholdt's jewels in a little black box. C. R. C.

M'Liss—(Five Reels) — Shubert — A splendid film story founded upon the popular Bret Harte tale of California and the days of forty-nine. Barbara Tennent, Howard Estabrook and O. A. C. Lund have the leading roles and prove fully adequate in the parts assigned. M'Liss, the slovenly daughter of Bummer Smith, falls in love with Gray, the Nevada schoolmaster, and when Bummer shoots himself he leaves a letter to Gray confinding M'Liss to his care and willing him his claims to lands in the rich oil fields of California. Don Jose, a worthless companion of Smith's, finds the letter and goes to California to take possession of the property. He later sends for M'Liss and brings her up as a Spanish girl. After her departure Gray sets out to seek his fortune, and arriving in California strikes oil on the property adjoining that of Don Jose. Not knowing his neighbor is Gray, the Don invites him to a fandango at which M'Liss is to dance, but while the entertainment is going on, Gray learns his oil wells are afire, having been lighted by a Mexican, hired by Don Jose. Realizing all is over, Don Jose attempts to escape, and M'Liss risks her life trying to stop him. He meets death in the oil well fire that he himself ordered started, and later Gray finds the letter Smith had written him and learns the claims had been willed to him and M'Liss left in his care, so M'Liss' heritage is restored to her and she and Gray are married.

Miscellaneous

A Modern Magdalin—(Five Reels)—Life Photo—A story from the pen of C. Haddon Chambers having to do with the lives of the employees in a great factory. The leading roles are enacted by Catherine Contiss and Lionel Barrymore. Katinka, a factory girl, finds her life anything but agreeable when her parents continue to nag her. In despair she accepts the offer of the factory owner to become his mistress and sends much of the money she receives from him to her family. When her lover's extravagance ruins him, Katinka tries to atone for the past by becoming an army nurse and finds happiness at last with the faithful Joe Mercer, a role played by William Tooker. One of the most sensational scenes in the production is the burning of Lindsay's factory.

The Last of the Mafia—Neutral Film Company—(Five Reels).—Two members of the Mafia, or Blackhand gang make their way to this country. A short time later, the detective assigned to capture them by the Italian government is found dead. Before the anger aroused by this heinous crime has fairly died out, a fresh offense is laid to the blackmailers in the kidnapping of Aramatta Lattori's child. After much risk and many thrilling experiences Detective Cavanaugh recovers the baby, and effects the capture of the entire band. C. R. C.

Bosworth Leaves Company He Formed

And Other Important News

According to the Evening Herald of Los Angeles, Hobart Bosworth, and Bosworth Incorporated, have reached the parting of the ways and Mr. Bosworth retires from the company which he formed, absolutely and finally, not even taking a share of the stock in the organization that he founded, with him. Frank A. Garbutt continues in full and comfplete control.

Mr. Bosworth, who has a reputation as a director and actor that makes him envied by other players, is said to have signed a Universal contract and to be ready to begin his duties at the Universal plant on April 1.

It is reported he will produce special feature pictures for the Universal under the title of "Hobart Bosworth brand," and will have the privilege of selecting players from any company under contract to his employers.

The Los Angeles paper neglects to state whether Miss Adele Farrington (who is Mrs. Bosworth) will be a member of her husband's company, but it seems natural to assume that the clever actress will appear in the pictures to be produced by her husband.

Pathe Still Heads Firm

On account of rumors, which have gained some credence, particularly in the east, a statement has been issued by the house of Pathe, calling attention to the fact that the guiding spirit of the firm always has been and will continue to be Charles Pathe himself.

It is also announced that Felix Malitz no longer has any connection with either Pathe Freres or Pathe Exchange, Inc., the positions formerly held by him now being held by Charles Dupius and L. Gasnier, who has spent many years in the United States, occupying positions of trust with the firm and is now recompensed for his long and faithful service by a promotion.

Paul Fuller, Jr., of Cordett Brothers, legal representatives of the Pathe house has been appointed a director of the concern and Charles Pathe, himself, will continue to reside in New York and devote his energies to the American branch of his business.

Takes Over Exchange

The taking over of a number of the exchanges handling its program, by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which recently increased its capital stock to $10,000,000.00, will not, it is said, affect in any way the distribution of Paramount pictures as it existed heretofore.

Raver Confirms Rumor

The rumor, circulated recently, that the Itala Film Company's features would in future be circulated through one of the prominent programs was given credence by a statement issued by Harry R. Raver, who is in charge of Itala's American interests.

"It is true that negotiations have been pending for some time with a view to securing our films for a prominent chain of offices now being operated by one of the pioneers of the film industry in this country," said Mr. Raver. "The final details of the arrangement are still unfinished, however, but the name of our future connection will be given shortly. This will not involve 'Cabiria' or subsequent spectacles of similar magnitude, but only our regular output of features. We have been approached by many concerns having chains of offices who were desirous of exploiting Itala features, but have considered favorably only the firm we are now concluding arrangements with, as we desire an affiliation assuring us permanence and prestige."

It will be remembered that Mr. Raver began selling state rights for Itala films in June, 1912, and has continued releasing features regularly ever since. Sixty-four subjects were issued, representing the sale of nearly seven million feet of positive film. Over $70,000 was paid the U. S. government in duty alone on positive prints imported.

Mr. Raver will continue as the American representative of the Itala Company of Torino, Italy, but will handle no films from his own office except the exploitation of "Cabiria" and similar spectacles.

Lichtman Engaged by Select

Al Lichtman, one of the best-known feature authorities in the country, has been engaged by the Select Film Booking Agency, which last week began active operations, as general manager. Mr. Lichtman was formerly sales manager of the Famous Players Film Co., having acted in that capacity from the inception of that concern until last fall, when he severed his long connections with the Famous Players in order to organize the Alco Film Corporation. One of the pioneers in the feature branch of the business, and familiar with every varying phase of feature distribution and exploitation, he is, by natural aptitude and experience, peculiarly adapted to advance the financial and artistic success of the feature photo-productions to be distributed through the Select Film Booking Agency.

Engages Billy Reeves

Billy Reeves, widely known as "the original drunk," and one of the funniest comedy acrobats and pantomimists in the country, has joined the Lubin Company and is to be featured in a series of popular comedies under the direction of Arthur D. Hotaling at the Lubin southern studio in Jacksonville, Fla. The southern studio has been undergoing extensive repairs and improvements during the past few weeks, but will be reopened next week. While the repairs were being made Hotaling came to the Philadelphia studio and made two comedies with Reeves as the star.

Reeves had never played before the camera previous to his coming to the Lubin studio, but his debut was a most successful one, although he had some difficulty at first in confining his eccentric and ludicrous acrobatic work within a limited area. It did not take him long, however, to get accustomed to working before the camera, and his first two comedies are said to be even funnier than his sketches in vaudeville were.

In the company that has gone south with Reeves are Billy Potter, Charles Griffiths, Johnnie Doyle, Mary Hartwell, Amy Forrest and Amy Webb. A number of other well-known comedians will join Hotaling's company later.

Film Factory for Los Angeles

Perhaps Los Angeles is to have a branch of the Rochester, N. Y., concern which manufactures practically all the celluloid film used on this side of the Atlantic.

Since 80 per cent of the American motion picture output is manufactured in and about Los Angeles, the business which the branch established in that city will do should amount up into the millions. Up to the present time, except for the film actually used in making the negatives, only sample films are printed by the various producing companies in Los Angeles, the negatives in all cases being sent east in order to have the positive prints made from them and the releases are then shipped back to the west coast for exhibition.

With the establishment of a film factory in Los Angeles practically all the companies would undoubtedly manufacture their own films in that city, thus shortening the time for their distribution and cutting down the expense.

In talking of this possible establishment of the branch in Los Angeles, Carl Laemmle, while visiting that city last week, said:

"Representatives of a big Rochester company called on me a few days before I left New York, and asked my opinion as to the advisability of such a move on their part. The proposal met with my hearty approbation. I was not taken into their confidence, but I naturally presume that they would not have broached the subject to me unless they had given the matter serious consideration.

"A plant here would employ many hands and be a notable addition to your local industries. Local photoplay producing companies are entitled to a film manufacturing plant here. Directors of big companies desire to be in close touch with the end of their business which distributes the many duplicate films to their exchanges. With the only film manufacturing plant 3,000 miles away, this is, of course, impracticable."

Sunday Shows in Birmingham

Birmingham, Alabama, enjoyed Sunday motion pictures for the second time last week, thousands of people swarming to the various houses. The police department boasts of the fact that instead of the usual number of arrests of persons who find themselves on Sunday with nothing to do, not a single arrest was made that Sunday.

The storm of protest against Sunday shows which whipped over the city in all its fury on the occasion of the theaters being open for charity, a few weeks ago, was entirely missing on this last occasion and even the Birmingham Pastors' Union and the other church organizations which protested so strongly are said to have little complaint. It is understood that voters of the city will have a chance of expressing their wishes for or against Sunday theaters at a near election.

The new Strand theater at the corner of South Salina and Harrison streets, Syracuse, New York, will be formally opened to the public next week. The scaffolding on the interior has already been taken down and the installation of seats is now going on, together with final preparations for the opening of the new $200,000 theater.

The new building is said to contain every known device for the comfort and enjoyment of its patrons and is modeled after the Strand theater of New York City, being designed by Thomas W. Lamb, the architect who drew the plans for that house. Every seat in the theater affords an unobstructed view to every part of the stage.

The building is of fireproof construction, has an asbestos curtain and is so arranged that the loges, boxes and seats in the front part of the balcony are easily reached by ascending only one flight of stairs, and all are in close proximity to the many exits. The theater will be devoted evclusively to the highest class of motion pictures, many of which will come direct from the Strand theater in New York.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has issued an appeal to moving picture operators to be more careful in the handling of film.

Changes at Colonial

Decided progress has marked the actions of the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation these last few days. Additions of staff in most all departments is one of the most easily observed advances. The Board of Directors has undergone a slight change in the withdrawal of F. S. Dudley and Richard Wightman. A. K. Greenland, for many years with the Billboard Publishing Company as its general traveling representative, has been placed in charge of the sales department; Miss Clara de L. Berg has been acquired to superintend the educational department, Alfred H. Saunders no longer remaining a member of the staff; A. Van Buren Powell, of prominence formerly on the scenario staff of the Biograph-Klaw & Erlanger organization, is now scenario editor for the Colonial.

A series of distinctive comedies is already in the making and will shortly be released. Charles France has been engaged as director of these comedies, which feature Harry Kelly, star comedian of the Watch Your Step Company, now playing at the New Amsterdam theater, New York. Surrounding him is a capable cast, of which the female lead is Millicent Evans.

Enlargements are in progress at the studio where a third stage for the accommodation of a third producing company is being built. The next feature following, the highly-praised six-reel reproduction of Sir Gilbert Parker's superb "The Seats of the Mighty," is about to be launched and will repeat the grandeur and glory of its distinguished predecessor. James D. Law, president, is therefore a particularly busy chieftain these days.

Big Ince Productions

Still another announcement, affecting the plans of the New York Motion Picture Corporation for the current year, emanated from the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino studios this week. Substantially, it is that Thomas H. Ince, director-general of the company's forces, will bend his efforts hereafter to the production of three stupendous films a year.

Each picture, it is understood, will be a filmatization of a celebrated story or play by an equally celebrated author and will offer as the star a figure enviably prominent in the theatrical circles of America. The length of the big features has not been definitely determined, but it is believed each will measure upwards of ten reels.

Producer Ince intends to consume all of four months in preparing each production, so that he will no more than finish one than he will turn his attention to the next. He has not annouced, as yet, what his first effort will be, though it is learned on good authority that the scenario is from a novel of world-wide popularity.

Messrs. Kessel and Baumann have announced that they intend to spare no expense in making the mammoth productions—which, by the way, will be known as the Thomas H. Ince Features—the last word in motion picture art. Producer Ince is now—between "takes" for "The Sign of the Rose"—casting about for a suitable star to be presented in his initial work of this kind.

John Charles, one of the leading players for the Selig stock company, Chicago, has played 384 different stage roles ranging from "Uncle Tom" to "Hamlet."

To Duplicate Strand Theater

One of the largest real estate deals recently consummated in Newark, New Jersey, was closed last week by Louis Kamm with the H. C. Miner estate for the sale of the Newark Theater to the Market and Beaver Realty Company for a consideration close to $450,000. The negotiations have been in charge of Edward Spiegel who, in association with his brother, Max Spiegel, Mitchel H. Mark and Henry Waterson, will be in control of the property purchased.

It is the intention of the new owners to erect a theater even handsomer than the Strand in New York City, the name of which will be the Palace. There will be an orchestra of twenty, and the entertainments will be presented in the same artistic manner, and probably by the same director who stages the performances at the Strand theater. The Palace will have a seating capacity of 2,150. Thomas W. Lamb and William E. Lehman are the associate architects.

The Spiegel brothers are well known in theatrical circles through their association with the Mark Strand Theater Company of which Max Spiegel is the secretary. They also control the Strand theater in Newark, the Grand theater, Trenton, the Grand theater, Hartford and several others.

Horsley's Los Angeles Reception

Upon his arrival in Los Angeles recently, David Horsley, who was the first man to build a studio in Hollywood, a suburb of that city, was met by delegation led by Harry E. Tudor, manager of the Centaur west coast interests, and led through the streets in a triumphant automobile parade to the Bostock arena in the heart of the city.

A reception was held here, ending in a unique banquet in honor of Mr. Horsley and attended by sixty guests, representatives of the Los Angeles newspapers, city council and board of trade members and old friends of the motion picture magnate. The table was decorated with tropical foliage and set in African "atmosphere," which is plentiful in the arena. Surrounding the table, but behind the bars of their cages, sat twelve lions under the watchful care of Captain Batavia. The entire affair was a surprise to Mr. Horsley.

Selig Has Another Contest

The Selig Polyscope Company wishes an idea for an unusual sort of scenario. Under the direction of the Selig Company, the Selig Movie Special will leave Chicago on Thursday, July 8, for the trip to the coast and it is planned to have written a scenario of the entire trip, the scenes for which will be taken by special camera men on board the special. The motion picture will later be released by the Selig Company.

Original ideas for this scenario are wanted. If a unique working plan can be devised, the Selig Company will award as a prize one free trip to the Exposition. The Selig Company does not obligate itself to accept any one scenario, however, as the idea must be practical or other means will be taken to film the event.

New System of Booking

The Exhibitors Booking Offices, Inc., was granted a charter under the laws of the state of Delaware last week, it being an organization for the purpose of booking motion picture productions direct from the manufacturer for long periods, thus reducing the charges to exhibitors. The company is incorporated for $25,000, is said to number 30 of the largest theaters in and about Philadelphia as its members, and has as its officers Samuel F. Wheeler, president; J. M. Delmar, vice-president; M. J. Walsh, treasurer; Jay Emanuel, secretary.

It is the plan of the Exhibitors Booking Offices, Inc., to book films direct from the manufacturer for a long period and send them around to the various members.

Northwest Exhibitors' Convention

The annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the Northwest will be held in Minneapolis, Minn., on May 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 and the largest gathering in the history of the organization is expected.

The Arcadia Hall on South Fifth street has been secured and booths will be erected for the use of the manufacturers and other trade interest who will be present. Exhibitors from Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Iowa and Montana, the territory covered by this organization, will be on hand, as well as the public, for whom special entertainments have been provided.

William A. Steffes, secretary and general manager, heads the committee in charge and will be assisted by Harry H. Green, president, J. Gilosky, vice-president and O. C. Selzner, treasurer. The program committee consists of H. P. Green, A. L. Hill and F. B. Benno and the entertainment and reception committee of J. P. Agnew, Otto N. Raths, S. R. Thompson, Otto Meister, D. W. Chamberlain, William H. Carrey, Ralph W. Parker, Thomas W. Saxe, and C. E. Van Duzen. Mrs. J. V. Bryson, Mrs. Charles Thall, Mrs. Gallagher, Mrs. W. L. Merrill and Mrs. O. A. Rowe are on the ladies' reception committee.

Following is the program for the five days:

Sweeney, 1400 Masonic Temple, Chicago. Prices of booths range from $10 to $100, according to location. No space will be sold after April 20.

Maryland Exhibitors' Banquet

One of the features of the banquet of the Maryland State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which was held on March 12 at the Raleigh Hotel, Baltimore, was the report of the committee on the ball to take place on April 10. The report was made by J. H. Bennett, chairman of the commitee. The one hundred or more members that gathered about the tables were told that 40 of the most prominent photoplay stars would be present. Arrangements will be made so that each person present will meet the stars personally.

The banquet was one of the most successful ever held by the association. It was an informal affair and the members got together to discuss the ball and other movements which are under way. Marion S. Pearce, the national president of the Motion Picture League of America, presided. Impromptu addresses were delivered.

Work Begun on Serial

Mission Canyon, one of the show spots of California, affords the setting for the opening scenes of the $20,000 prize photo-serial now in production at the "Flying A" studios.

Lone Star, a full blooded American Indian, led forty of his tribe before the camera in the opening episode. This Indian atmosphere is considered by Director Jaccard an especially good omen, as this forthcoming serial is financed by the North American Film Corporation, produced by the American Film company and will be, it is alleged, the greatest "all American" picture yet produced.

The taking of the opening scenes at night proved very spectacular and through the courtesy of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the "Flying A" company, hundreds of tourists sojourning in Santa Barbara and Montecito were permitted to enjoy the proceedings from the side lines. A complete Indian village had been built in the canyon by Lone Star's people, who were brought from the Navajo reservation expressly for this picture.

The last of the scenes taken showed a great meteor hurtling its way across the heavens and striking the canyon wall with a tremendous shock, sending up a shower of fire that lighted up the entire valley, as a shout of approval from the fortunate observers echoed down the old canyon. These scenes will run in a prologue, the action of which takes place a century before the opening of the story proper.

The picture will be released in two-reel episodes. The author is now in California, summoned thither by the final awarding of the $10,000 prize. To the person who later writes a solution of the mystery which will run throughout this serial another $10,000 prize will be awarded. It was easy for Miss Damon, the winner of "The Million Dollar Mystery" prize, and it will be just as easy for someone in this case to win a substantial start in life.

The novelization of this photoplay will run in the Chicago Tribune and about 500 other newspapers throughout the country. The first episode of the picture, played by an all star cast of recognized screen favorites, will be released on May 3.

Another Important Censorship Fight

Because he was fined $100 on complaint of J. Louis Breitinger, chief motion picture censor for the state of Pennsylvania, Charles Segall of Philadelphia, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of that state, is considering instituting a suit for damages against the censor official. He claims to have evidence that the picture he was fined for showing was not "unapproved" and states that it is his intention to complain to the gvoernor.

Mr. Breitinger also claims that it was his belief that the charge was brought against him purely as a matter of spite, as he has been one of the leaders in the fight to have legal censorship repealed in that state. A repealer was introduced into the state legislature on March 2 and at the present time plans are being made to force its passage. The Pennsylvania exhibitors are said to favor the action almost to a man.

Kentucky Convention

The Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will hold its annual convention at the Phoenix Hotel at Lexington, Ky., on April 21 and 22. This gathering promises to be one of the most enthusiastic ever held by the organization, on account of the wonderful growth of the picture business in that territory during the past year, and it is expected that many of the exhibitors will join the state organization at this meeting. Louis Dittmar is president and Fred Dolle, secretary-treasurer of the Kentucky organization and both are working to bring about an elaborate display of equipment at the convention, many firms already having signified their intention of exhibting.

Nehls Re-elected

Richard R. Nehls was re-elected president of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago at the annual business meeting held Wednesday evening, March 17, and will have as fellow officers, R. E. Bradford as vice-president; W. D. Hildreth as secretary and Captain L. A. Boening as treasurer, while the board of governors, all being elected for a term of two years, will remain as they are until the election of 1916.

Richard R. Nehls

In nominating Mr. Nehls for re-election, Rapley Holmes made the speech of his life and one which probably will never be equalled for eloquence in the gatherings of the Reel Fellows. Mr. Holmes began with pointing out the particular crisis in which American affairs of state are now placed and, after paying a tribute to Woodrow Wilson and his "watchful waiting" policy, pointed out that the Reel Fellows club faced a similar crisis, and that it had grown from a membership of eleven, to its present membership of well above the hundred mark, under the leadership and guidance of Mr. Nehls, who, having proven his ability to handle the club during the most critical moments of its career, should, by all means, be permitted to go on with the good work he had begun. He then named Mr. Nehls as his candidate, and after Mr. Holmes' nomination has been seconded, a motion was made and carried that Mr. Nehls be unanimously elected by a rising vote.

President Nehls in accepting the re-election, replied to Mr. Holmes' speech in a witty manner and after thanking the club for the honor paid him, also expressed his appreciation of the tribute paid at the recent Reel Fellows' ball when his picture was unveiled on the stage alongside of that of George Washington, the father of his country.

Messrs Spahr, Early and Bradford were the nominees for the office of vice-president, and Mr. Bradford was elected on the second ballot. W. D. Hildreth was chosen secretary and Captain L. A. Boening treasurer, while the present board of governors, Messrs.

Patrick, Rothacker, Travers, Nixon and Doud has still another year to serve.

The dance committee reported that a generous sum had been raised by the recent ball, and at the April meeting of the club all members must either turn in their unsold ball tickets or pay for them, thus enabling the committee to complete its report and arrive at the exact sum the club cleared on the affair.

R. E. Bradford was given a rising vote of thanks for having sold more ball tickets than any other member of the club, and it was decided to award a life membership as a prize to the club member, who, during the coming year, secures the most new members for the organization. A life membership will also be conferred upon each retiring president.

Just before adjourning a motion was made and carried that a charter be applied for under the laws of the state of Illinois, and the club regularly incorporated as a social organization.

New Pathe Series

Not one, but two serials are to be released, simultaneously, by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., according to an announcement made this week, which relates to a new series of pictures to be known as "Who Pays?" which is a series of twelve three-reel dramas based on the most vital questions of life; twelve short, gripping human interest pictures, each one of which is intended to make the world think; each one of which it is expected will send people home to ponder, to delve into their souls, to look back on the past, to form new and better ideas for the future. The stories have been syndicated and hundreds of newspapers throughout the United States will run the series under the novel-a-week system. The novelized drama is being written by Edwin Bliss, who wrote another serial under the pen name "The Master Pen."

Each one of these twelve pictures is to be complete in itself, embracing every phase of life's drama to which the great question "Who Pays" points. The productions are being made by the Balboa firm, and the first picture is scheduled to be released on Saturday, April 17. Bookings can now be secured from any of the Pathe exchanges.

Blackwell Heads All Theaters

One of the developments during the past week in New York film circles was the purchase by M. H. Blackwell of the majority of the stock of the All Theaters Film and Accessory Company, which controls the booking rights of the Alliance program in New York state.

This deal places Mr. Blackwell in control of the destinies of the concern, and notwithstanding that he already holds the offices of vice-president of the Alliance Films Corporation, treasurer and general manager of the Favorite Players Film Company, he has assumed the presidency and general management of the All Theaters Film and Accessory Company, while S. S. Webster will remain in charge of the Buffalo office.

Mr. Blackwell is a brother of Carlyle Blackwell, and is well known in the film fraternity. It is safe to assume that his wide circle of friends in the business will extend the best wishes for success in his latest venture.

Forming Credit Association

Paul Ford, manager of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana, has called a meeting of the New Orleans film exchange men with a view to forming a film credit association for the southern territory. Every exchange man will agree that such an organization is highly desirable for the protection of the exchanges, both as to collection and as regards competition, and the exhibitors also are in favor of putting the business on a sound credit basis, for the legitimate exhibitor realizes that it is to his advantage no less than to that of the exchangeman to so establish it.

At the coming meeting it is expected a plan will be outlined that will prove satisfactory to all the members of the association and at once establish it on a permanent basis. It is hinted there will be a social feature to the new organization which may perhaps include a weekly luncheon of the exchange managers to talk things over.

Binder Still Busy

Just as MOTOGRAPHY goes to press it is in receipt of a wire from J. W. Binder, representing the National Board of Censorship, who has been campaigning through the various states in which censorship bills were up before the legislatures, and now reports that out of ten states in which censorship bills were introduced, exclusive of Pennsylvania and Ohio, to date eight of the bills have been killed, through the activities of the national board, aided by exchangemen and exhibitors. The only two states in doubt are Oklahoma and Tennessee, and indications are that the bills in these states will also be killed. There will be a hearing on the Pennsylvania repeal bill at Harrisburg on Tuesday evening, March 30.

Balboa with Alliance

Last week Andrew J. Cobe, president of the Alliance Films Corporation, and E. D. Horkheimer signed contracts which will place the Balboa Amusement Producing Company in the ranks of the contributors to the Alliance Program.

The first Balboa subject to reach the exhibitor through the new channel will be Henry B. Walthall in a six-part production of "Beulah." This will be followed by Miss Jackie Saunders in "The Ill Starred Babbie."

While in New York, Mr. Horkheimer and Mr. Cobe secured the film rights to several novels and work upon them will soon be started.

Selig Secures "Garden of Allah"

The Selig Polyscope Company has obtained the motion picture rights to "The Garden of Allah," the spectacular play made by Mary Anderson and Robert Hichens from Mr. Hichens' novel. The royalties paid by Mr. Selig are said to be the highest ever paid for a motion picture play. William N. Selig plans a production befitting the spectacular nature of the locale and it is planned to make it the peer of any film drama ever made.

"Tomorrow morning at 7:30, in make-up," is the usual "good night" at the motion picture studios these sunny days. For the man or woman who wants to be a motion picture actor or actress this is something to ponder over. Being a farm hand looks soft in comparison.

Selig's Jungle-Zoo Soon to be Opened

COVERS TWENTY-TWO ACRES

BEFORE many more months have gone their fleeting way the motion picture people and the public in general will turn their eyes toward California and give their attention to the reports of the opening of the far-famed Jungle-Zoo of the Selig Polyscope Company.

At East Lake, a suburb of Los Angeles, can be found the nearly completed animal park, which covers more ground, it is said, than any other privately owned institution of its kind in the world. It has been the ambition of William N. Selig to make this the biggest thing he has ever done—and he has done some things of no small proportion in the past. Reports from California indicate that his ambition has been fulfilled, for all those who have been privileged to see the Jungle-Zoo while it was in the course of building have said that it is a work which will long stand as a monument to its creator.

The wonderful collection of animals which have for so long appeared in Selig pictures will be installed in the Jungle-Zoo, and added to these will be numerous other rare species who will soon arrive in America. Mr. Selig is a firm believer in the animal picture and the success the Selig films of this variety have enjoyed since the introduction to the public is proof enough that this far-seeing man made no mistake. A prominent educator, after a recent visit to the Selig Jungle-Zoo, stated in a public interview: "Every school in this country owes Mr. Selig a vote of thanks for his Jungle-Zoo productions. They are clean, correct in all details, and highly educational. I know that they interest the juveniles in the habits of the wild animals and in the countries from which the animals come."

The Selig herd of camels.

Mr. Selig long has planned for a beautiful park, artistically enclosed, to house his very large collection of birds, beasts and reptiles. He is intensely interested in his collection; he knows many of the animals by name; has a story to tell about each one; considers the wild animal collection and the artistic environment of the Selig Jungle-Zoo as things contributing to his own artistic enjoyment; and also takes pleasure in knowing that he is giving pleasure to others, and presenting the Golden State with a magnificent institution of which it can well be proud.

The new Selig Jungle-Zoo garden has been built to the last corner in Mission style. The most eminent architects have planned, sculptors have schemed, and the most famous landscape gardeners have contributed to Mr. Selig's heart's desire—a magnificent motion picture studio.

The tract selected for this remarkable pleasure ground consists of about twenty-two acres. In the rear, ample land remains for the great stages and out-of-doors locations for the companies which are producing pictures. Leading to the Selig Jungle-Zoo will be a beautiful boulevard erected by the city of Los Angeles, and named in honor of the originator of the great park. The art gates leading into the park were decorated by Sculptor Carlo Romanelli of Florence, Italy.

The massive cages in which are quartered the wild beasts are built of solid concrete, reinforced. Pillared pergola effects, rare shrubbery and gaily colored cockatoos as inhabitants form an effective background.

Stretching along the eastern side of the extensive scenic grounds are the homes and feeding grounds for fifteen camels, numerous water buffalo, a black yak, a herd of sacred cows, five zebra, black deer, goats, burros, giraffes, etc. The elephant herd will also be near at hand. Among them will be the wise old elephant of Selig fame, Anna May, the tiny performing brute, and "Kathlyn."

The promenades are especially striking, for they line the banks of art lakes which are laid in winding fashion from the ancient totem pole, across the grounds to the corrals. The stables, also of expensive construction, house troupes of performing ponies and valuable horses. The same style of impressive architecture has been applied to the administration building, developing structure, offices and modern dressing rooms.

On the public grounds will be found many attractions, including cafes, bungalow rest rooms, merry-go-rounds and dance hall, with ample playgrounds for the children, if they can be attracted from the monkey pavilion with its many inhabitants, including rare black apes and sacred white monkeys from India.

In addition to these varied attractions, Mr. Selig has provided for many persons of many tastes through foreign buyers and landscape gardeners. Rare out-of-door plants, trees, shrubs and flowers have been secured from many countries. Many of these will not live even in the mild climate of southern California, and, therefore, a splendid hot house has been constructed which will shelter the rarest of exotics from one of the finest collections of orchids in this country to the almost unknown plants.

But the general gathering place for the visitors to the wonderland probably will be the wild animal cages with their Royal Bengal tigers to the number of thirteen; more than forty lions; fourteen pumas; jaguar, hyenas, black and sloth bears, civet cats, ant eaters, fifteen leopards, two black panthers; three Malay bears, nine wolf dogs, and various other animals.

More than $250,000 has been invested in animals, and the mammoth gateway with its arch of elephants leading into the Jungle-Zoo alone represents, it is said, an outlay of $50,000. There will be a colossal steel arena for the exhibition of trained animals. Everything has been done to make the wonderland attractive to visitors and also comfortable and sanitary for the wild animals.

J. M. Bradlett Passes

The following obituary was read at the funeral services of J. M. Bradlett by the Rev. J. Dallas Cope, pastor of the Northwest Baptist Church, Twenty-eighth and Lehigh avenue, Philadelphia:

J. M. Bradlett was born in 1865, and departed this life on the night of March 13 at the age of 50 years. The friends of Mr. Bradlett who have charge of his body are under the impression that there are no near relatives. It has been said that at one time he was married and had a son, both of whom preceded him from the scenes of time to the realities and mysteries of the Great Beyond.

For years Mr. Bradlett had been identified with the moving picture industry in all of its branches, and for a long time was the western editor and managing director of the Chicago branch of the Moving Picture World. Afterwards he was connected with the Moving Picture News, and recently was with the moving picture department of the Public Ledger.

F. J. Rembusch, president of the Mirror Screen Company of Shelbyville, Ind., who was intimately acquainted with the deceased and a friend of long standing, pays this beautiful tribute of respect to his memory:

Motion picture folks, let us pause a moment in tribute and reflection. A man who was a pioneer and pilgrim in our work has passed away. His was a pure life; a splendid character of highest ideals, courageous, useful, scrupulously honest and truthful. His noble influence when motion pictures were young gave great impetus towards creating our present high standard. Few emoluments were realized by him, and at last even his fine mind gave away from sorrow and misfortune. J. M. Bradlett has lived well and not in vain. Those of us who knew him intimately know full well that hereafter his sweet soul will be more appreciated and that he will find comfort, rest and reward in the bosom of his Creator.

Mr. Bryan and F. P. Bloomfield of Pittsburgh, who had been acquainted with the deceased for a number of years, and who at one time had offices with him, paid tribute to his memory. They stated that through their long acquaintance with him they found him ever to be a gentleman of the highest type, honest, honorable, charitable and strictly temperate. His private life was moral to the highest degree.

Mr. Bryan and a few other friends have arranged to place a small marker or headstone at the grave, and any friends who wish to aid in contributing may send remittances to H. F. Bryan, 1316 Vine street, Philadelphia, and due acknowledgment will be given.

President Freuler Talks of Serial

By MABEL CONDON

John R. Freuler

IT was 2:25 when Joe Finn introduced John R. Freuler into the Room of the Green Rug. And at 2:45 Mr. Freuler was to be on board the Century when it would wend its luxurious way out of the Grand Central station, Chicago-bound.

Meanwhile, Mr. Freuler would tell me the whys and wherefores of the North American Film Corporation, which is to release the serial fiction film, "The Diamond From the Sky." And, because I knew the Century would not wait for Mr. Freuler and there was not a chance of Mr. Freuler's waiting for the Century, I placed the Cameragraph desk clock in direct range of Mr. Freuler's vision. Mr. Finn brought forth his watch and placed it directly in front of him—and Mr. Freuler glanced at neither.

"A new kind of serial picture is what we are going to give the exhibitor and the fan," was the way the North American Film Corporation subject was launched by President Freuler.

"A picturized romantic novel, to be issued in chapters," put in Mr. Finn, and, by his approval of the description, quite evident in his voice and smile, I guessed that Mr. Finn was sponsor for the use of this descriptive phrasing in the double-page ad which the papers of the week had carried.

"We had to have good, live, interesting fiction as the basis of the scenario," went on Mr. Freuler, "and our choice was made from the 19,000 scripts submitted in the Chicago Tribune syndicate of newspapers in cooperation with the American Film Company. The 'Flying A' trade-mark will be used on the film so as to identify the North American Film Company with the American Film Company, though the work of one will have nothing to do with that of the other.

"'The Diamond from the Sky' will be like no other serial film that the public has yet been given." Mr. Freuler spoke quickly, yet without any intended intimation that within fourteen minutes the Century and he would be speeding westward. "It will be a romantic narrative and not a series of adventures. This," he diverged, "is said in no disparagement to the serials which have been released by other companies. But S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, was convinced that a story of romance, released as a serial, would carry with it an interest that would provide the element of newness which the exhibitor and public is ready for right now. And that the story would be sufficiently there as to theme, we did not choose it from among but ten or one hundred scripts, but from the nineteen thousand in which the Tribune syndicate contest of December and January resulted.

"The script is complete in itself, as to its beginning, its unfolding and its climax. Its solution we are going to leave to the film public to supply. The best one submitted, and we suggest that it be contained in about 1,000 words, will received the award of $10,000. So, for the first time in the history of serials, and with the exception of the solution, a complete working scenario is furnished the director and company. Unlike other serials, also, the whole story will be so closely interwoven as to prevent the elimination of any part of it. We have a plan, though, and it's a unique one, of keeping the public up to date on the story, should a chapter have been missed. The first release, which will be three reels instead of two, will reveal this plan and also will tell the public the name of the story's author. The first chapter will likewise give the details which will govern the awarding of the second $10,000 as the solution prize.

"How long—" I began, and Mr. Finn and Mr. Freuler, as though expecting the question, answered together, "Nobody is to know that."

"There will be no advance information, either from newspapers or theaters, as to how long the American's film story in chapters is to run," Mr. Freuler said. "Both Mr. Hutchinson and myself believe strongly in the natural-length picture. Because we are determined to serve the exhibitor and because we believe just as strongly in the merit of the serial that 'The Diamond From the Sky' will be, we will make no iron-clad agreement with the exhibitor. We are going to stand back of our product and would expect no exhibitor to continue to run the story if it were to prove unsatisfactory. But we feel that this serial is to be the biggest box office attraction the exhibitor will have known and are satisfied that he is going to realize this. And no matter what the theater's program affiliation, it can run this film.

"Mr. Hutchinson has been at the American studios as Santa Barbara since the first of the year arranging for the picture's making. It is to be thoroughly American and modern; love and adventure, with the necessary suspense and keen anticipation for what is to come, will be more thoroughly satisfying than if the illustrated pages of a best-seller were being spread before you."

The Cameragraph clock said nineteen to three.

Mr. Freuler made a concluding remark to the effect that the Mutual Film Corporation will give him the facilities of its offices throughout the country, and in addition he will have about seventy-five or one hundred representatives who will keep in touch with the exhibitors.

"And Mr. Freuler will direct the serial's distribution," supplied Mr. Finn, replacing his watch in his pocket.

"And the Nichols-Finn Advertising Company will handle the serial's promotion and publicity," smiled Mr. Freuler, removing his watch from his pocket.

"If you're lucky," I suggested weakly at eighteen minutes to three, "you'll only be one minute late for your train."

"I'm luckier," Mr. Freuler returned with another smile and a good-bye. He was. As the Century began its twenty-hour tear to Chicago it carried with it Mr. Freuler.

Can Films Be Preserved for Posterity?

NOW that the greatest event in world history is transpiring, so to speak, before our cameras, the historians are offered their first extraordinary opportunity to establish archives of film records, to preserve into the indefinite future the exact replicas of today's actions. It is reported that the German government is doing just that; it is taking and filing away motion pictures of every important action of the war. The British authorities, on the other hand, in spite of earnest appeals by their own countrymen, have so far refused to consider the matter. This course has been attributed, naturally, to the well-known Anglican conservatism. The British Museum officials decline to store film because of its inflammable nature and the consequent necessity for a special vault for its safe keeping.

One might suppose that even the conservative British mind would be sufficiently impressed with the importance of the occasion to overcome the trifling obstacle of proper storage space for such records. The cost of an adequate vault, and even the labor (just now a more important factor) to build it, or to adapt one already built, is surely inconsiderable in view of the opportunity to imbue future sons of England with a proper patriotism. Of course this argument has been presented to the British authorities; and in rebuttal they bring against the films a charge more serious, in the premises, than that of inflammability.

It is stated that for many years British scientists have been studying the problem of whether the existing form of motion picture film will retain its properties after years have aged it. And they claim to have made the discovery that after an unused film has been placed in an airtight vault and left untouched for five years the celluloid becomes covered with a fungus growth. They therefore dismiss at once the possibility of preserving films for a hundred years or more.

There has always been some doubt as to the permanency of the emulsion whose chemical changes make the photographic image (using the word permanency in terms of centuries rather than years). But that the passive and inert vehicle which carries that emulsion should be subject to disease is, we confess, a theory new to us.

In this country there are doubtless many reels of film which have reposed idly on vault shelves for more than five years. It will be noted that the British scientists mention an airtight vault; whether that means a vault whose door is never opened we do not know. We have no such storage places for films in this country, and cannot see why the condition is necessary anywhere. If circulation of air will remove the alleged curse, it surely could be provided for very readily. If mere darkness and time will grow fungus on celluloid some of our own scientists must have encountered it.

We would be glad to hear from any one familiar with the condition referred to, and to examine any specimens of celluloid film so afflicted.

Billiard Halls and Picture Shows

THE National Billiard Protective League has a grievance; and it is enterprising enough to make very good use of it. Its protest is aimed at the alleged predilection of motion picture producers for the use of objectionable billiard room scenes. It claims that out of eighty thousand billiard rooms operating in the United States, very few are run in conjunction with saloons, whereas the producers seem to find exceptionally good settings for villainies in the combination saloon and billiard hall or pool room. The argument of the association is, of course, that some three million reputable business men patronize the billiard rooms daily and are apt to resent the defamation of its character on the picture screen, especially when no useful purpose seems to be served by such representation.

Rightly or wrongly, the producer seldom exerts himself to avoid treading on the hypothetical toes of someone of whom he never heard. He cannot; it would take half his time if he tried to suit everybody. His field is all the world, and his observation and erudition must needs be extraordinary indeed to include intimate knowledge of everything there is. So perhaps we can admit the justice of the Billiard League's protest without feeling called upon to offer any apology.

So while the majority of producers will doubtless be glad to pay proper respect hereafter to the billiard table as an institution, the most interesting part of the protest is that it is used as a foundation for a plea for co-operation. The Billiard League wants to ally itself with other amusement enterprises to combat the wave of restrictive legislation at present sweeping the country. Its opinion is that "if the motion picture house, the billiard room and other amusement places are driven out of the country towns, the younger people will surely follow." In support of this belief, it cites the fact that several hundred towns in Iowa, Michigan and Indiana show a smaller population today than ten years ago, while the rural districts of Illinois have shrunk to the extent of some 180,000.

So the Billiard League suggests that the film manufacturer can change this condition by a campaign of constructive educational work, especially adapted for the smaller towns, to encourage local industry and amusement. For their part, the billiard people offer to supply advance information of proposed legislation inimical to the amusement interests, especially those laws which seek to restrict motion pictures.

Whether the motion picture interests care to join hands with the billiard and pool room people in an effort of this kind we cannot say. A reasonably open mind could find no ethical objection to any respectable means of gaining strength. Only it must be remembered that the picture theater is a family institution and the billiard hall is not. Properly conducted picture shows can always gain the approval and support of the mothers and wives and sisters and daughters and sweethearts. We fear the billiard rooms cannot say as much. Indeed, while the male population might wish to retain both forms of entertainment, we imagine the feminine contingent would poll a unanimous vote for more picture shows and less billiards. And it is as well to consider that side of the proposition before making any hasty co-operative agreements.

Putting Seattle On the Map

James Q. Clemmer and several associates have practically completed plans for the erection of what is said will be the finest and most magnificent photoplay house in the United States in Seattle, Wash.

"We are going to build a theater," said Mr. Clemmer, "which will cost in the neighborhood of a million dollars, but at the present time it would be unwise for me to give you the details of our new project. I can only say that it will revolutionize the motion picture business in the West. The theater which we have in mind will far surpass anything in this part of the country. We have some new ideas about theaters and the showing of motion pictures which will make the people sit up and take notice.

"Our new theater will be located in the 'coming business district' of Seattle, not many blocks from Times square. We consider this part of Seattle the safest and best place for such a theater as we have in mind, for its value as a theatrical site will improve with the coming years.

"Our theater will accommodate not to exceed thirty-five hundred people, including boxes. The equipment throughout will be of the finest. To give you some idea of what we aim to do in this line I will say that we expect to make our new theater surpass the Strand theater of New York, which at present is conceded to be the finest in the country."

Just A Moment Please

From present indications, if there is ever a shortage of actorfolk the publicity men of the various companies will be able to fill in the vacancies without any delay in production. On a page of a recent issue we presented to our readers the handsome features of Jake Wilk, who all this time has concealed his light beneath the title of publicity man, but now blossoms forth as a player in the World Film release, "Alias Jimmie Valentine." When you see "The High Hand," released by the Favorite Players Company, we trust you will not overlook that sturdy shop foreman shown in several of the early scenes. It is none other than Richard Willis, free lance publicity expert of the Pacific Coast, who enacts that role. Great stuff, fellers, 'tain't every actor who can be a publicity man, take it from us.

And them publicity fellers as can't make a place in the sun any other way goes in for such things as getting married, becoming proud papas, etc., as for instance Bill Barry, Jake Wilk, and even a few like Harry Reichenbach, L. J. Rubenstein, Hopp Hadley and H. Z. Levine changed their jobs. There's sure more ways than one to the composing room, eh fellers?

Episode One:—"The Missing Scripts."
(Part Two.)

"Well, shoot it, let's have it!" mumbled Ed Itor, as Sue Brett hinted that she had a suggestion for replacing the hundreds of perfectly good scenarios that had been stolen from the plant of the Jumbo Film Corporation, the night before. "Well, it's this way," began Sue. "I've a whole bevy of interesting girl friends, each and every one of whom has had some wonderful adventure or exciting experience. There's Kathie, who has been through some perfectly wonderful adventures; Paulette, who has undergone perils of every imaginable sort; Flossie Gay, who was mixed up in the famous "Dollar-Thirty-nine" mystery; Helene, whose hazards few would care to experience, Lucy Dove, who—but gracious, we're wasting time, why not let me bring all these girls and some more besides, into the studio and let Ed Itor, or somebody else, use the stories of their lives as plots for his scenarios?" "By Jove," gasped M. A. Gnate, the millionaire president of the Jumbo Corporation, "I believe it can be done, and from what you say the stories ought to be wonderfully interesting." "All of that, and then some," laughed Sue Brett. "I'll have Kathie here this very afternoon and she will tell you her story." "Yah," drawled "Di" Rector, "Miss Brett's scheme may be a good one, but I'd like to know who took those cussed scripts and what has become of the night watchman."

(Read Episode Two, next week, entitled: "The Misadventures of Kathie.")

We seen it in the papers the other day as how a scientific chap Down East is fearful lest all the thousands of negatives stored in the manufacturers' vaults be ruined by the fungus growth that attacks the celluloid. For awhile, we admit, we was puzzled, till all of a sudden we remembered what Rapley Holmes said at a recent meeting of the Reel Fellers Club in referring to Dick Travers and some other matinee idols as "licensed lens lice," and now we can appreciate the catastrophe that impends, in all its awfulness.

Reliance's "Runaway June"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

IN the earlier part of the Reliance serial, "Runaway June," the runaway bride was seen trying to elude both Blye, of the black vandyke, and Ned Warner, her husband. This has now resolved itself down into a struggle between Blye and Ned, and the great desire which both men have to win June, the prize, makes the serial fight one worth seeing.

The eleventh episode, entitled "In the Clutch of the River Thieves," introduces sunny Bermuda as the background for its action and that of several of the chapters to follow, and more beautiful woodland and shore scenes have seldom been seen. The photography, too, is unusually clear and pleasing. Norma Phillips plays a dual role in a small part of the picture, taking the part of Marietta, the Italian girl, as well as that of June.

Blye returns to the dock, after seeing June and the rest of his guests off to his yacht, and there encounters Ned, the deserted husband. The latter attacks him, the anger which has been pent up in him for so long getting the better of his judgment. Blye is weakening from the choking he is receiving when the local police arrive on the scene and demand an explanation. With wonderful presence of mind Blye coolly remarks that Ned is a dangerous maniac and should really be locked up. The police take Blye's word for it and place Ned in a small jail near the water.

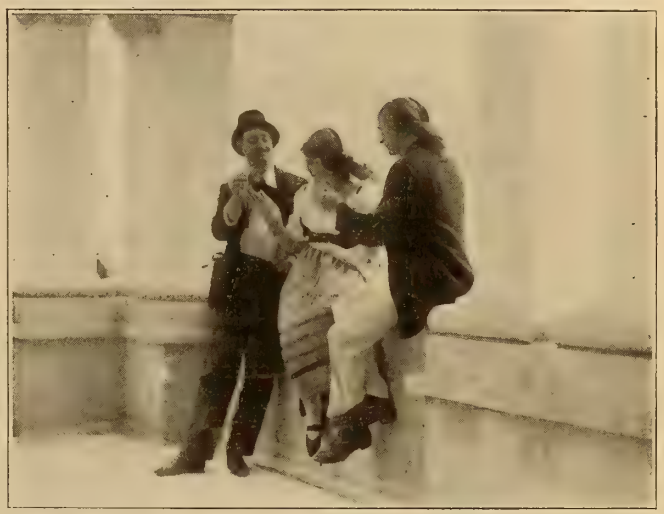
June creeps up on deck under cover of darkness, unties the tender, steps into it and pushes off, rowing towards she knows not where, but satisfied since it is away from the yacht. Daylight finds her tired out with her exertions. She hails Giovanni, an old Italian, who passes near by in his motor boat. He takes her aboard and they set the tender adrift. Blye is furious on learning that June has made her escape, and, as luck would have it, takes the right direction in looking for her.

In the meantime June and the old Italian have become firm friends, and he points out to her the skeleton of the ship in which he was wrecked years before. Giovanni is struck by a familiarity about June's face, and it finally comes to him that she resembles Marietta, the girl he loved back in Italy.



Rival lovers for the hand of Marietta.

Tony and he were rivals for the hand of the fair coquette, and Tony was the favored one because he had the most money. In a knife duel with Beppo, another of the girl's admirers, Tony kills him and leaves the country, accompanied by Marietta.

Blye's yacht sights the motor boat and gives chase, Giovanni steers his little boat towards a narrow opening to an inlet, knowing that the larger boat cannot follow. Blye realizes this at the same time and fires at the Italian, hitting him. Quick as lightning June grasps the wheel and takes the boat safely through the narrow gateway. In searching for aid for the injured man she comes upon a gang of river pirates, among whom are Tony and Marietta. One of the men quarrels with Tony over the division of the spoils and stabs him.

Tony, dying, tells the two women where to find his buried treasure. They are spied upon by Tony's assailant and his confederate, and attacked just as they uncover the treasure. Ned, who has made his escape from jail with the aid of his detective, arrives in time to rescue them. Marietta takes after the fleeing men, and June and her husband are left alone for a minute—but not for longer, as Blye comes upon the scene and his men overpower Ned.

Mutual's "The Devil"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

BESSIE BARRISCALE, famous star of the legitimate stage, and Edward Connelly, well known for his work in a dozen different difficult roles, are co-starred in the four-reel picture, "The Devil," adapted from the famous play by Franz Molnar and now released by the New York Motion Picture Corporation as the third of the series of Mutual Masterpictures.

The production is worthy of its name as a masterpicture in every way, the stage settings being deep and costly, while the players are truly wonderful in the big scenes of the popular play. Assisting Miss Barriscale and Mr. Connelly are such stars as Arthur Maude, Clara Williams, Rhea Mitchell and J. Barney Sherry, all of whom are known to picture fans the country over.

Miss Barriscale rises to great dramatic heights in the closing reels of the picture, which correspond to the climatical third act of the play. Mr. Connelly gets over his character of the Devil in a really wonderful fashion, the impersonation being fully up to the high standard set up by Henry Dixie and Edwin Arden, when those two notables were featured in the stage production.

The sub-titles used on the screen are cleverly worded, and even though one has not been fortunate enough to have seen the stage version of the story he will enjoy the pictured story in every detail.

The film begins with the arrival of Isabella and her husband, Alfred Zanden, at the studio of Harry Lang, a famous portrait painter, with whom Isabella has had a love affair, and after the departure of her husband Isabella prepares to pose for her picture. At that moment the Devil appears, and when the lovers have spent an hour in conversation instead of work and the husband returns to discover that the painter's brush has not even touched the canvas the Devil craftily explains matters and places both the artist and Isabella in his power.

In the guise of Dr. Miller, the Devil again appears to Elsa, an intimate friend of Isabella's who the latter is hoping will marry the artist, thereby quieting forever the gossip that has linked her own name with his, and suggests that she lay siege to the artist's heart by appearing demure.

The Devil then turns his attentions to the artist and convinces him that Isabella is so much under his influence that she will appear in a few moments garbed in a long cloak, but otherwise naked. When a few moments later Isabella descends the stairs, her shoulders and one arm entirely bare, the artist believes the Devil has told him the truth, but when her husband and her guests arrive Isabella throws off her cloak and reveals herself fully clad in a beautiful evening gown, much to the artist's confusion.

Late that night Isabella writes Lang that she will forsake her husband and fly with him and gives it to the Devil to deliver. Next morning, however, when Milli, one of the artist's models, with whom he is in love, shows her jealousy, Elsa arrives in time to console the unhappy model and the two declare themselves convinced of the perfidy of man.

An hour later, when Isabella appears, she begins to apologize for the letter, but learns, too late, that the Devil has not delivered it. His Satanic Majesty produces the letter and, despite Isabella's protests, hands it to Lang. Unable to resist the temptation, Isabella then throws herself into Lang's arms, while the Devil gloomingly laughs, since it is his mission on earth to tempt mortals, though he inwardly hopes that they will resist his power that he may win back the position on high from which he was cast.

The epilogue of the picture shows a scene in the infernal regions, with Isabella and Lang wandering distractedly from place to place, pursued by countless little devils. When they appeal to the Devil for mercy he replies, "You had your chance, why did you put it from you?"

Selig's "The Gentleman Burglar"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

FILLED with interest and containing a strong romantic appeal, the two-reel production entitled "The Gentleman Burglar," which will be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on April 5, will doubtless prove popular in the majority of houses.

There are three characters which can always be depended upon to hold the interest in a dramatic production, despite the fact that they have been used many times, and the Selig Company has built the plot of this film around them. A millionaire, a gentleman burglar and a girl are the triangle.

The treatment given the idea around which the story revolves is artistic and adds to the general interest of the picture. The millionaire and the gentleman burglar look exactly alike, William Stowell doing excellent work in both parts, assisted by some clever double exposure and substitution. E. A. Martin, who directed the production, has attempted some daring close-up views, showing both the characters impersonated by Mr. Stowell and, because he has succeeded in "getting past" with these successfully, the average picture patron will be more than interested to know how two men could be secured who looked so much alike.

While most of the acting in the picture is done by Mr. Stowell, Lillian Marshall, Marion Warner, Lillian Hayward and Edwin Wallock, who appear in the supporting roles, also do good work. The finish of the picture is decidedly artistic and clearly proves that an extended denouement is acceptable if handled properly. Much care is given to the settings and costumes and the "society atmosphere" is splendidly preserved throughout. The photography is clear.

The story of the picture follows: Jim Draper, society leader, reads in the paper of the robberies perpetrated by "Broadway Jim," the gentleman burglar. He jokingly tells his father that he would like to be a Sherlock Holmes and bring "Broadway Jim" to justice.

Irma Horne, a clever girl detective, who also has aspirations for apprehending "Broadway Jim," encounters Jim Draper, and thinks she has discovered the crook, as they look alike. Irma feigns spraining her ankle and Draper takes her home in his car. Irma is surprised to learn that her supposed crook is the wealthy society man.

"Broadway Jim" finds a photograph of young Draper in the society columns and is startled by their resemblance. He finds out that Draper is to attend the Trevaine reception, where the famous Armanti heirlooms are to be exhibited. Irma Horne and John Dixon, another detective, posing as maid and butler, guard the heirlooms.

"Broadway Jim" impersonates Draper. In front of the Draper home the gentleman burglar and another crook overpower the chauffeur and when Draper enters the car he is attacked by "Broadway Jim," who secures Draper's invitation and is admitted to the reception as the society man.

that "Broadway Jim" is Draper. When the jewels are shown, the crook switches off the lights and makes an attempt to secure them, but is prevented from doing so by Irma and Dixon. He is placed under arrest and the guests, appalled at "Draper's" conduct, are utterly dumbfounded when the real Draper puts in an appearance.

Irma, exhausted by the rapid succession of events, is taken home by the real Jim Draper, this time with something other than suspicion in her heart.

American's "In the Sunlight"

TRICK camera work such as has seldom been seen in recent years is in evidence in the American two-reel release of Monday, March 29, entitled "In the Sunlight."

Besides the clever camera work to recommend it, the picture has numberless beautiful backgrounds, most of them exteriors, and is an interesting story, with several of the best known American players in the leading roles.

The trick camera work referred to above occurs in a scene in the first reel, when Doctor Abbott, a drug user, in a dope dream sees himself as he would like to be. The doctor falls asleep on a little pile of hay and dreams that from his medicine case emerge rich men and women who become his patients, foreign notables and ladies fair who pay priceless sums for his services, and then awakes to discover it was all a dream. The little drama enacted by the tiny figures that emerge from the medicine case is a splendid bit of camera work and is convincing in its reality.

As the story runs, Abbott leaves a country practice to seek fame in the city, leaving behind Helen, his young wife, and a little baby daughter. In the city, Doctor Abbott soon forgets his wife and child in the country and becomes infatuated with Olga, a vampire of the city. Meanwhile, Frank Stead, a city physician of the slums, longs for the sunlight and open air of the country, and through a friend is induced to take over Doctor Abbott's neglected practice, and finally arranges to board with Doctor Abbott's neglected wife.

After a quarrel with Olga, Doctor Abbott sees her stricken with heart disease and, imagining he will be suspected of having murdered her, he flees the city and is injured when the freight train on which he is stealing a ride is wrecked.

With the passing of weeks Doctor Stead falls in love with Mrs. Abbott, though his love is not reciprocated until Mrs. Abbott learns through a newspaper that her husband was killed in a wreck, when she consents to marry Stead and start life over again.

After being dismissed from the hospital, Doctor Abbott, still with his old drug habit, sets out for his home and arrives there on the day set for the wedding of Stead and Mrs. Abbott. Approaching the house he beholds his wife in her lover's arms, and when he rushes up to attack Stead, his body, weakened by the drug, gives way, and he drops dead at their feet. As the picture closes we see Stead and his young wife starting out on the sunlight of their honeymoon.

"The Exploits of Elaine"

LONG SIN, the Chinese villain, who first appeared in the twelfth episode of the "Exploits of Elaine," become a real featured character in the thirteenth episode of this Pathe serial.

The crafty oriental arranges with a spiritualistic medium to stage a fake seance for Elaine's benefit and later, when his plans go astray, is even willing to go so far as to make away with her.

As the story begins Elaine Dodge is seen rejecting the proposal of Perry Bennett, her lawyer, or rather asking for more time in which to make up her mind. As soon as the lawyer departs she calls up Kennedy, but the conversation is interruped because Kennedy has to go to the assistance of Jameson, who has accidentally overturned a bottle of nitro-hydrochloric acid, severely burning his hand.

Elaine, believing that Kennedy has wilfully left the phone because he is angry at her, is accordingly chagrined. When Kennedy later returns to resume the conversation he finds that Elaine, at the other end, has hung up the receiver. Meanwhile, the spiritualistic medium, who is conniving with Long Sin, the Chinese adventurer, invites Elaine to visit her studio. Accompanied by Bennett and her Aunt Josephine, she goes to the studio, but though the medium claims to be able to reincarnate the spirit of Taylor Dodge, Elaine's father, she advises those present that Mr. Dodge will not appear until one called Josephine leaves the room. Accordingly Aunt Josephine departs, but goes to seek Kennedy.

After she has gone, what appears to be the ghost of Long Sin, who Elaine believes she has killed, appears, and while Elaine is shivering in terror accomplices of the Clutching Hand enter the room through the fireplace and convey Elaine from the spiritualist's home into another room that adjoins the oriental's own apartment.

Kennedy being absent, Jameson returns with Aunt Josephine to rescue Elaine, but is told that the girl has departed with Bennett. Jameson, however, finds a handkerchief which Elaine has dropped and suspects that all is not well with her. Accordingly, he secures the assistance of a squad of police and the spiritualist's home is raided.

By chance they discover the secret passage through the fireplace and are able to smash through into the apartments of the celestials, just in time to interrupt a battle between Craig Kennedy and a horde of Chinamen. Kennedy, disguised as a Chinaman himself, has been present at a strange oriental ceremony at which Long Sin has attempted to make Elaine the wife of a Chinese god, Ksing Chau, one part of this ceremony consisting of pouring molten gold over her body.

The moment that Kennedy objects to the proceedings he is set upon by the Chinese and is about to be overcome by the celestials when the police and Jameson come to his assistance. As the picture closes Long Sin, who has been captured by Kennedy, promises to disclose to the detective the identity of the Clutching Hand if Kennedy will spare him from punishment. Kennedy agrees, and as the picture fades from the screen Long Sin whispers the real name of the Clutching Hand into Kennedy's ear.

William Faversham, at present starring in "The Hawk," has agreed with the B. A. Rolfe Metro Pictures Corporation to appear exclusively in its screen productions in the future.

"The $20,000,000 Mystery"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine.

A THRILLING chase in motorboats and a series of rescue scenes that are even more thrilling, keep the interest alive throughout the nineteenth episode of Thanhouser's "The $20,000,000 Mystery," and at the close there is the same feeling of suspense which has existed in the majority of the preceding installments.

James Cruze, the adventurous "Jim Baird" of the serial, gets into a rather tight place, and is saved only by the timely arrival of Sidney Bracy, who, in his character of "Detective Hunt," is ever watchful. When the last scene of episode eighteen faded from the screen, we left Hunt and Baird pursuing three of the conspirators toward the harbor in a motor boat. The two craft speed toward the mouth of the river and the conspirators suddenly become lost among the many small barges in the gathering dusk.

Baird suspects they have hidden near the place where they were lost to sight, and gets off on an island, sending Hunt back to protect Zudora. The reporter then hides and awaits the coming of the night. In time he sees several of the conspirators go to a little hut near his hiding place and leave the diamonds. He attempts to secure the jewels but is captured and, after being bound hand and foot, is locked in the pilot house of an old vessel anchored off the island. The conspirators then set fire to the boat and his chances of escape seem limited.

Hunt, however, fearing that Baird might fall into the hands of the conspirators, returns to the island and arrives in time to rescue him alive, but too late to stop the conspirators from making away with the diamonds. Upon returning to the city Baird and Hunt learn that Madame Duval has succeeded in taking the coveted document away from Villier, though Storm has carefully guarded it until this time. At this point the film skips two days and we see Captain Radcliffe receive the rubber bag containing the diamonds from Bruce as the picture fades out.

"The Black Box"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

THE third episode of Universal's detective serial, "The Black Box," which was released on March 22, is, if anything, more interesting than the two installments which have preceded it. Herbert Rawlinson again makes "Sanford Quest" a character of extraordinary interest and the incidents which make up the two reels furnish him with plenty of material with which to electrify his audiences.

The element of suspense runs a close second to the mystery in this episode, which is entitled "The Pocket Wireless," and one never knows what danger the wizard of the law will be confronted with next. The acting of the other players, notably Anna Little, William Worthington, Frank MacQuarrie and Laura Oakley, is also deserving of mention.

The plot deals with the finding by Sanford Quest of a skeleton and a wild man in a hut on Professor Ashleigh's estate and the confirming of his suspicions that John Craig had something to do with the Reinholdt robbery. In the opening scenes Quest is seen instructing his two women assistants, Leone and Laura, in the use of a pocket wireless he has invented, when a black box is delivered by mysterious hands.

Upon opening the box Quest finds a note telling him that he is now embarked on a new study, that of anthropolgy, and that the necklace might be where the skeleton is. The signature is a pen drawing of two hands, which appear about to throttle some enemy. Miss Quigg, a Salvation Army lass, enters and asks

Reading Laura's message from the Servant's Club.

Quest to help her cause and Leone, who is watching outside the room, sees Craig listening.

When the lass has been promised help the following day she leaves. Professor Ashleigh, who has also called, takes Craig with him when he visits Mrs. Reinholdt to tell her of the progress Quest is making. Although the professor has told Quest that Craig could in no way have been implicated in the robbery, the detective listens to Leone's story and then decides to learn more of the suspect. Laura, disguised as a man, is sent to the Servants' Club.

Quest uses his hypnotic powers on the wild man.

A bit of bone is found by the police and, by using his phototelsme, Quest is able to examine it without delay. This sends him on a new clue and he visits the professor's estate with Leone. There they discover the man-ape and also the missing skeleton. They then enter the professor's home and await his return.

Craig drives Professor Ashleigh home after a time and then leaves. Quest tells the professor of what he has discovered and asks an explanation, which the latter supplies by saying that he has been hiding both the man-ape and the skeleton because if other anthropologists learned of his discovery they would attempt to steal it. Quest realizes the importance of keeping the professor's secret and is about to leave when Leone and he receive a message from Laura at the Servants' Club, via the pocket wireless, stating that Craig had once been an officer of that organization.

The mysterious hands again appear and set fire to the hiding place of the man-ape and the skeleton, both being burned. While the professor is grieving over his loss Quest suddenly receives another black box. A card within it advises him to drop all investigation. Looking into the box again he is more than surprised to find Mrs. Reinholdt's jewels.

Edison's "The Stoning" which exiles her as a social outcast for the rest of her years. On the other hand, some of the most gripping dramas yet produced have this same story as its basis. The difference lies in the scenario and direction, the basic principles of the plots being practically the same. One of the pictures belonging to the latter or commendable class is "The Stoning," a three-reel Edison feature directed by Charles Brabin and to be released on April 9.

It tells clearly and concisely the story of a young, innocent girl who elopes with an irresponsible young fellow, realizing too late that his love for her is not of the kind that prompted her to meet him secretly in the face of her parents' objections and warnings. The subtle powers of suggestion bridge the delicate spots, but nevertheless the story is all told, and in such a way that everyone can see and appreciate its strength and simplicity without taking objection to them. Repulsiveness and sensationalism play no part whatever.

throughout is well worthy of praise, and unobtruding double and triple exposures are used with good results. The studio work is good as also is the effect obtained in the scene in which the girl's body is discovered floating in the river.

In putting on the picture the director saw that realism must be here if anywhere, and the result is that when the last scene fades out one has a vivid recollection of the poor girl's trials climaxed by her tragic ending.

The part of Ruth Fenton, the little country girl, is taken by Viola Dana. The role is a difficult one, calling in turn for sweetness and wholesomeness, deep emotion, moral callousness, and untold anguish, but she proves more than equal to each occasion and holds the spectator's sympathy from beginning to end. Harry Beaumont takes the leading masculine part as Alec Peters, the deceiver. Charles Sutton as Mr. Fenton, Robert Conness as the minister, and Helen Strickland as Mrs. Fenton take the principal parts in the balance of the cast.

The opening scenes are given to the development of the acquaintance between Alec Peters, a brakeman, and Ruth Fenton, a passenger on his train. Peters is assigned a new run which enables him to spend two hours each night in the town in which Ruth lives. Her secret meetings with him become known to Mr. Fenton, who warns his daughter to have no more to do with Peters, who, he declares, is worthless and a scamp.

Ruth informs Peters of her father's ultimatum, and he proposes that they elope, secure a license and be married later. After some hesitation she accepts, leaving a note to her mother telling her of her elopement with the man she loves. The child's foolish act nearly kills Mrs. Fenton, who is taken seriously ill as a result. In the meantime Ruth's faith in Peters has been shaken by his neglect in obtaining a marriage license, and one day when she pleads with him to fulfill his promise he renounces her for being babyish and leaves her to shift for herself.

As Mrs. Fenton grows steadily worse her husband's desire for Ruth's return increases. The minister offers to find the girl, and succeeds after several days of constant searching. He convinces Ruth the only thing to do is to return home and live down the scandal which has risen about her. She finds it hard to face the relentless gaze of the narrow-minded villagers, but perseveres under the minister's encouragement. On Sunday he escorts her to her old place in the choir, and preaches a sermon on taking the lost sheep back into the fold, but it is of no avail. Before the ceremony is half over Ruth stands alone in the choir, and even the people in the pews begin to leave.

The next morning Ruth's body is discovered floating in the river. The act needs no explanation—the fear of contamination exhibited by the church-goers has proved too much for her. The final scene shows the minister preaching over the dead body, accusing each of his parishioners of being participants in stoning the girl to death.

Essanay's "The Lady of the Snows"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

TUESDAY, April 6, has been selected by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company as the date for release of its three-act feature entitled, "The Lady of the Snows," adapted from the book of the same title by Edith Ogden Harrison, wife of Mayor Carter H. Harrison of Chicago.

Edna Mayo and Richard C. Travers have the leads in this splendid production of the Canadian Northwest, and both are cast in roles which give them a wide opportunity to display their art, Mr. Travers appearing as Charlton Trevelyan, an English society man, who becomes a member of the Canadian Northwest mounted police, and Miss Mayo interpreting the part of Patricia Sutherland, a wealthy Canadian girl, who as "Gloria Templeton" is a secret agent for the government, and known to the Indians as "The Lady of the Snows."

Portions of the picture, which are laid in Ottawa, and in the first reel in England, are splendidly mounted and the many exteriors filmed against a background of snow and typical Northwest Canadian scenery are satisfying in every detail.

As the story opens we learn that Charlton Tre-velyan, English society man, who has declared his love for Helen Mason, a calculating girl of his set, has been rejected because the girl fears his income will not be sufficient to support her in a satisfactory manner. The girl accepts instead the proposal of the honorable Travers Langdon, a Canadian member of parliament, and leaves with him for Ottawa.

Helen tries to place Trevelyan in a wrong light.

Trevelyan reads in the same paper that contains the announcement of Helen's marriage to Langdon a story to the effect that Patricia Sutherland, a Canadian girl whose father had been well acquainted with Trevelyan's father, has been left a fortune on condition that she marry Trevelyan. Though amused at the story Trevelyan is so embittered by Helen's treatment that he determines to visit Canada and see the girl.

He arrives at the home of Archbishop de Betrand, who is Patricia's uncle, and finds that Patricia, learning he was en route to Canada, has left her uncle's home for parts unknown. After a brief chat with the archbishop, Trevelyan suggests that the latter secure him an appointment as a member of the Royal Northwest mounted police, and within a few weeks after being appointed a trooper in that organization he wins high praise from his superiors by closing Pete's gambling place, a notorious den.

Trevelyan learns that Gloria Templeton, a secret agent of the government and an authority on Indian affairs, is in his vicinity, and will perhaps aid him in running down other members of Pete's band. In order that Trevelyan may be disgraced, Pete plans to wreck a fast express in the territory over which Trevelyan has charge, but Gloria warns him of what is to occur and suggests that he take prompt action to prevent the wreck.

It happens that Travers Langdon and his wife are aboard the train, and when it is stopped by Trevelyan, who flags it to prevent the catastrophe, Helen comes face to face once more with the man she had rejected. Upon seeing Trevelyan Helen wishes she had accepted his proposal, a fact which becomes more apparent when she sees him in company with Gloria Templeton, and suspects a love affair between the two. Weeks later both Trevelyan and Helen become lost in a blizzard and find shelter in Gloria Templeton's cabin. Helen takes advantage of the situation to maliciously ask Trevelyan regarding his approaching marriage to Patricia Sutherland, and Gloria, on learning he is the famous Mr. Trevelyan whom the newspapers had credited with being the suitor of Patricia, shows her disgust for him.

Trevelyan is summoned back to Ottawa and at the archbishop's home Helen tells the prelate that Trevelyan cannot marry his niece, since he is in love with another woman. At that moment, however, Patricia Sutherland enters and both Helen and Trevelyan discover that she and Gloria Templeton are one and the same.

While Helen beats a hasty retreat to cover her confusion, Patricia yields to Trevelyan's embraces.

"The Heart of Maryland"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

THE largest playhouse in the world became the home of moving pictures on Saturday, March 20, when the New York Hippodrome opened with "The Heart of Maryland" and an accompanying program of operatic soloists, organ and instrumental virtuosi, orchestral selections, large chorus and unique water spectacles. Some idea of the enormous size of the theater may be conveyed by the fact that it seats fifty-two hundred persons, has a stage two hundred feet wide and one hundred and ten feet in depth, and a back curtain drop measuring eighty-five by two hundred and twelve feet. The average picture house screen would look like a speck of white on this drop.

It is a distinct tribute to the Metro Picture Corporation that one of its features should be chosen for the formal moving picture debut of this mammoth house. "The Heart of Maryland," a five-reel subject, is the product of the Tiffany Feature Film Company, and features Mrs. Leslie Carter in her original character, Maryland Calvert. This picture stands high as a Civil War subject, containing all of the essentials necessary to interest. Romance pervades the story, set off by daring raids, thrilling cavalry charges, pitched battles and the exciting experiences of a Northern and a Southern spy, both of whom are prominent in the story.

Mrs. Leslie Carter's proven ability speaks for the way she impersonated Maryland, the noble southern girl. The other principals in the cast are William E. Shay as Alan Kendrick, J. Farrell Macdonald as Colonel Thorpe, Matt Snyder as the Confederate general, Raymond Russell as the spy, Marcia Moore as his sweetheart and Vivian Reed as the mother. Herbert Brenon directed the picture and also played one of the characters in it.

In spite of Maryland Calvert's entreaties, for her sympathies are with the South, Alan Kendrick joins the Federal forces at the opening of the Civil War, although his father becomes a general in the Confederate army. Maryland's brother, Floyd, is secretly in sympathy with the North, and joins the Confederates to spy upon them.

Alan Kendrick is among the prisoners sent to the Rebel headquarters in Maryland for exchange and is recognized by Colonel Thorpe, a discredited Union officer, who has joined the Southern forces out of a spirit of revenge. Thorpe sends him to the Union camp at Charlesville, hoping that he will be killed in the attack to be made by the Confederates that night. The Federals learn of the proposed surprise and rout the enemy.

Later, Alan is captured in a daring attempt to visit Maryland Calvert, and is court-martialed before his father. Floyd in the meantime has been shot while trying to make his way through the lines with a copy of General Kendrick's plans, and Maryland, in trying to clear her brother's name, innocently furnishes the information which convicts Alan of being a spy. The manner in which she makes reparation furnishes a fitting close for the story. One of the most stirring scenes in the picture follows Alan's dash for liberty. To prevent the signal bell's putting the pickets on their guard, Maryland climbs up into the bell tower, grasps the tongue, and is swung back and forth, but the bell remains silent. Alan makes his way back to his regiment and captures Thorpe's command a few days later just in time to prevent the villain's executing Maryland. A touching reunion between the lovers brings the drama to a close.

Majestic's "The Lost House"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

A FOUR-REEL dramatization of Richard Harding Davis's novel, "The Lost House," released March 25, is the second of the Mutual Master-pictures. It is from the Majestic studio, and features Lillian Gish in the role of a pretty heiress whose wealth is coveted by her uncle and who, because she refuses to marry him, is declared insane and imprisoned in the villainous Dr. Protheroe's house. The story is typical of its author's style, and finds a fitting type for its infallible hero in the person of Wallace Reid, who is seen as the reporter, Ford. The supporting cast is comparatively small for a picture of this length, but the players prove themselves fully capable of holding one's interest. H. D. Sears plays Dr. Protheroe; E. A. Turner, Dosia's uncle; and Elmer Clifton, Ford's friend.

The most thrilling part of the picture comes in the last reel when the police attempt to raid the doctor's house, but change their minds and decide to lay siege to it instead, after several of their number have fallen before the unerring fire of the desperate defenders within. With the arrival of the militia the fight grows hotter than ever, ending finally in the death of the criminals, and the rescue of the prisoners in the blazing structure. The entire fight comes as a fitting close to the story, putting just the right amount of strength and realism into it without making it melodramatic or interfering with its spirit of romance. William Christy Cabanne was the director.

He proposes to her, but she will not think of marrying him. As a last resort he appeals to Dr. Protheroe, crook and charlatan, who offers to do away with the girl. Dosia is examined by Protheroe, declared insane, and is confined in one of the upper rooms of his house.

She manages to slip a note through the bars, and the man who finds it takes it to the Press club nearby. Here Ford, a reporter, sees it, and decides to investigate. He arranges to have the place raided if he does not return by a certain time, and then proceeds to the doctor's. He complains of suffering from a nervous breakdown, and is taken in. He escapes from his room, and makes his way to the one occupied by Dosia.

The police arrive, and Protheroe, Dosia's uncle, and one of the servants defend the house. It catches fire, and Ford and the girl make their way to the roof,

Lubin Man Talks Foreign Conditions

J. Franklin Brockliss, European representative of the Lubin Company, and a widely known authority on film conditions abroad, has arrived in this country for a brief visit and is making his headquarters at the main office of the Lubin company in Philadelphia.

J. Frank Brockliss.

Asked concerning film conditions abroad, Mr. Brockliss said: "The war, naturally, hit everything on the other side hard. Take the allied countries—France, Belgium and Russia, for instance. In France, cinematograph business is practically nil because of the war. When I was in Paris recently the general air of sadness prevented one from even thinking of cinematographs or any other amusement. In Belgium, which has always been a good field, business is dead. Russia has always been a difficult country to handle because of its great distance from London, and the Russian method of doing business with long extended bills which are hard to collect. We did a good business there with Lubin films before the war, but when war was declared business was cut down. At present, however, it is beginning to pick up again. I can tell you little about Germany or Austria, for all our business there was cut off short and I lost quite a lot of money by it. I am doing business in Spain. In Scandinavia business is possible, but transporation of film is difficult. Switzerland is in about the same class with Spain. Business with Italy is dead—the loss of parcels in transportation renders the shipment of film impossible. China is beginning to use the Lubin pictures and in Japan and India business is about the same. The Lubin Colonial business is quite as satisfactory as it was last year."

Kriterion in Detroit

Under the general management of Ralph E. Peckham one of the interested parties in the Detroit Kriterion Film Service, Inc., that local branch of the Kriterion Service which will handle the Michigan territory will open about the middle of April. Another active member of this company is Charles J. Wesch; both of these gentlemen have had a thorough schooling in the motion picture business and are especially familiar with the territory which is covered by Detroit, and the upper portion of Ohio.

As soon as the Detroit office is thoroughly established, it is the expectation of the Detroit Kriterion Film Service to open branches in Toledo, O., and Grand Rapids, Mich. This will be of greater convenience to the exhibitors adjacent to these cities. Also, it will work for greater co-operation between the exchange and exhibitor.

Use These Advertising Helps

Advertising of a decidedly novel and unique sort has been prepared by Paul Kuhn of the copy department of the Nichols-Finn Advertising Agency for the North American Film Corporation's new serial, "The Diamond From the Sky," which is being made by the American Film Manufacturing Company at its Santa Barbara studios.

These advertising helps are now available and will be mailed to any exhibitor who will write to John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Corporation, 222 South State street, Chicago, Ill.

The first flash consists of a triangular booklet which is mailed in a large triangular envelope, bearing on its face the message, "The 'Flying A' has something to say." Opening the right angled triangle, one finds a general announcement of the nature of the serial and the people making it. The turn of the next page reveals an equilateral triangle and one finds the prize announcement of a $10,000 offer for the best sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky" serial, an amount which the Chicago Tribune and 500 allied newspapers are to give. One more turn of the page gives one a diamond-shaped page, bearing in its center the photographs of Messrs. John R. Freuler and S. S. Hutchinson, together with a view of the "Flying A" Chicago studios, the Santa Barbara plant of the same company and the London, England, offices, together with some details regarding the big production soon to be released. When the fourth page is turned one finds the book again assumes a right angled triangular shape, with an arrow pointing to a post card which is to be torn off and returned by the theater manager who is interested.

The second advertising booklet is of four pages, the first made up to represent the front page of the Chicago Tribune and detailing the help which this paper is prepared to give exhibitors running the film. Page two makes the $10,000 offer for a suggestion for the most acceptable sequel to the unfinished film. This offer is to appear in the Tribune and in the 500 newspapers allied with it and who are to run the story. Page three of the booklet contains the first chapter of the fiction story prepared from the film scenario by one of America's foremost authors, while the last and fourth page bears a telegraph form, already made out, which the exhibitor has only to tear off and hand to the nearest telegraph office to receive bookings when it is released.

New Chain of Theaters

A. J. Gilligham of Gilligham and Smith, operators of motion picture houses in Grand Rapids, Mich., has purchased the Monroe Vaudette, the Idle Hour theater, the Ideal theater and the Original Vaudette, together with all the theaters at present operated by Gilligham and Smith, under the name of the United Theaters Company, and will operate all these houses in the future under the name of Gilligham and Smith Enterprises.

Fifty per cent of the new stock being issued is said to have been sold to local investors, and headquarters of the new concern will be established immediately in the Orpheum Theater building, with Charles H. Seaman as general manager. The new Strand theater, to open this summer on Monroe avenue, Grand Rapids, will be another house added to this chain of theaters.

Guests Lavishly Entertained

As briefly related last week, Universal City is now formally open for the production of motion pictures, and the entertainment of thousands of visitors who are arriving from all directions to behold this wonder city on the Pacific Coast, the only city in the world built and used exclusively for the filming of motion picture subjects.

Fully 20,000 persons were present at 10 o'clock Monday morning, March 15, as President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company unlocked the gates to the main entrance with a massive gold key, which was presented to him by Laura Oakley, chief of police of Universal City. With cannons booming, fireworks blazing and thousands of the guests cheering, President Laemmle unlocked the gates, while P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Company, unfurled a huge American flag over the gates as the band played "The Star Spangled Banner." The waiting crowd, led by the party who had journeyed all the way across the continent on the Universal special train to participate in the occasion, passed through the gates, marching between lines of Universal cowboys, cavalry, Indians and players, showered en route by carnations thrown by hundreds of pretty girls.

After a luncheon served to the guests of honor in the spacious white stucco restaurant, the throng adjourned to the studio lined street, where the Universal producing companies were at work on the various stage settings on the big main stage, claimed to be the largest open air studio in the world. After a brief pause here, the throng spread itself over the green hillside to witness Henry McRae's 101 Bison Company produce a thrilling flood scene, by releasing the water accumulated in a large reservoir on the hillside and permitting it to sweep away a set representing a western mining town, while the Universal cowboys rescued Marie Walcamp from a band of Indians. Later Francis Ford's Company staged a huge battle scene and there were productions put on by Nestor and Joker Companies, in which such prominent individuals as Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers and Robert H. Cochrane participated.

In the early evening the Universalites in full custom gathered at a barbecue held for the guests and the electric studio was later in the evening the scene of a grand ball, attended by all of the players on the Universal west coast roster.

Tuesday's program proved an equally thrilling day, beginning early in the morning with a conference of Universal exchange managers and visiting exhibitors, followed by a luncheon at the Western restaurant on the Universal grounds. This day was marked by the only accident of the festivities, the death of Aviator Frank Stites, who lost control of his machine while attempting to drop bombs from his biplane in the taking of a war picture.

"Road 'O Strife" a Model Serial

The new Lubin serial, "Road O' Strife," written by Emmett Campbell Hall, produced by John Ince, featuring Mary Charleson, Crane Wilbur and Jack Standing, supported by the strongest and largest cast that has ever appeared in a Lubin production, will undoubtedly attract wide attention. These stories, the first of which will be released on April 5, brings the installment story to the highest degree of perfection, being, in form, the concrete result of regarding every serial and series heretofore produced as an experiment, and, by analysis and deduction, reaching a logical and absolute conclusion, both as to dramatic possibilities and the basic elements of popularity.

"Road O' Strife," as the true serial must be, is a narrative unhampered by incidental unit-plots, bearing only a casual relation to the main plot, as in the case of the serial-series, a form established by the Lubin Company's "Beloved Adventurer," and which, while permitting of great diversity of action, situation, and environment, precludes the continuous featuring of the real principal characters.

The plot of "Road O' Strife" concerns only the principal characters, whose participation in the action is practically continuous, a fact which will afford satisfaction to the many admirers of Miss Charleson, Mr. Wilbur and Mr. Standing. The story is of a highly dramatic nature, the suspense being maintained until the very end, and many startling situations serve to keep the interest intense. As in the case of a skillfully constructed magazine serial, and for the same sound reason, each installment of "Road O' Strife" ends in acute suspense of such nature as will cause speculation, and a fixed determination on the part of the picture patron to see the next part.

John Emerson Joins Mutual

John Emerson, recently starred in "The Conspiracy," a popular New York success of which he was both author and producer, has become one of the Mutual's stars. He has arrived at the Hollywood studios in Los Angeles and begun rehearsals in an original four-reel feature photoplay. It was prepared especially for Emerson, but the title has not yet been selected. Emerson made his motion picture debut in "A Bachelor's Romance" and "The Conspiracy." Always noted as a sterling actor while on the speaking stage, he also scored in pictures. He is the fourth prominent actor to join the Mutual forces at Hollywood recently. All four abandoned the stage for the films.

Selig Signs Mestayer

Harry Mestayer, now playing in Chicago, in "On Trial," has been engaged by the Selig Polyscope Company to play the lead in "The Millionaire Baby," a film version of Anna Katherine Green's mystery novel. The story was adapted for the screen by Gilson Willets and the play has already been put in production at the Chicago studios of the Selig company. Mr. Mestayer will probably join one of the Selig west coast stock companies as leading man late in the spring.

Brevities of the Business

In order to accommodate the rapidly increasing business at the Chicago studios of the Selig Polyscope Company an addition is being built to the large structure.

Samuel Goldfish has announced, on behalf of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the engagement of the distinguished romantic star, Donald Brian, to make his photodramatic debut under the Lasky management. Mr. Brian, who acquired world-wide fame as the prince in "The Merry Widow," is now starring in "The Girl from Utah," but will positively pose for his first photodrama immediately after the end of his present season.

Jesse L. Lasky, president of the Lasky Feature Play Company, who has spent much of the winter supervising the enlargements and productions at the studio in Hollywood, California, returned to his New York office last week and will remain for a considerable period planning the work to be done at the studio during the spring and summer months.

"The Once Over," a rollicking one-part "Beauty" comedy, has been substituted for the drama "Dreams Realized," which was announced by the American Film Manufacturing Company for release April 6.

Lois Meredith, Theodore Roberts, James Neill and Mabel Van Buren are the players who will make up the all-star cast in the Lasky production, "The Woman," adapted from the stage success.

Viola Allen, the well-known star of the speaking stage, has been added to the Chicago stock company of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company and will soon be seen in productions released by it. Her greatest successes on the stage were scored in "The Christian" and "The White Sister."

Anthony Kelly, formerly scenario editor for one of the big regular program companies, is now with World Film Corporation and will prepare special scripts for Director Emile Chautard.

Mary Pickford has been declared winner of the Ladies' World motion picture popularity contest, which has been conducted for the past few months.

Nathan Anderson has been appointed scenario editor of the western branch of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company and will look after the scripts for the Niles (Calif.) companies of that concern in the future.

Arthur Shirley, the noted Australian actor, has joined the Kalem company and is now at work in its Glendale (Calif.) studios under the direction of James W. Horne. He will work in features.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Before leaving the Universal west coast companies for the American company at Santa Barbar, Calif., Archer McMackin gave a dinner to a number of his friends. Those who were present were Ernie Shield, Eddie Boland, Queenie Rawson, Jane Bernaudy, "Buck" Cooner, Charles Rosher, Assistant Director Roy McCray and Mr. Isidore Bernstein, general manager of Universal City.

The Lasky Feature Play Company has issued oil paintings of Blanche Sweet, 36 by 60 inches, for the use of exhibitors who wish to make their lobby displays attractive. This concern has also provided a series of 14 by 11 inch photographs of all their stars for the same use.

Catherine Countiss, whose work in "The Avalanche" and other recent film successes made such a favorable impression, is the latest addition to the galaxy of the Alliance stars. She will appear in the title role of "The Grey Nun of Belgium," which is now nearing completion at the studios of the newly organized Dramatic Producing Company at Los Angeles.

J. W. Starbuck, the man behind the Saturday Evening Post advertising copy on "Runaway June," is now laying out all of the advertising matter on the big Reliance campaign, and has his headquarters at 29 Union Square, New York City.

John P. McGowan, the well-known Kalem director, has purchased a train of three railroad coaches at a cost of $5,000, for no other purpose than that of deliberately wrecking them.

One big event is to take place at Universal City, Calif., within the next few weeks that film fans will not have the privilege of seeing on the screens. The "speed demons" at the big motion picture ranch are to have a Vanderbilt cup race all of their own. Half a dozen curves in the road that winds around the San Fernando hills will furnish the scene for the thrills and spills that will probably exceed in excitement anything ever shown in the pictures.

On Saturday, March 27, sixty pupils of Parker high school, Chicago, Ill., accompanied by their instructors will visit the Selig Polyscope Company motion picture studios for the purpose of studying the technique of the photoplay. They expect to become acquainted not only with the technical arrangement of motion picture scenarios, but also with the technique of production, developing rooms, etc. On Friday, April 2, a class of seniors from Lane Technical School will pursue similar studies at the Selig studio.

Adolph Hilderbruner, trainer of wild animals in the exhibit of Selig Jungle-Zoo wild animals, at the San Francisco exposition, and his assistant, Gus Werner, grappled in a life and death struggle with an enraged tigress last week. They were trying to teach the tigress some new "stunts."

David Thompson left the Thanhouser studio recently, after four years' continuous work, for a much needed rest. One restful day last week Dave became—one event taking place within forty minutes of the other—exalted ruler of the New Rochelle Lodge of Elks and the father of David Thompson, Jr.

By special request of the entertainment committee of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing Prison, which but a short time previous was known as the Golden Rule Brotherhood, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company presented last Sunday its second performance of moving pictures to the inmates within the past month. This time, however, the inmates had the pleasure of listening to King Baggot, leading star of the Imp brand of the Universal program.

W. R. Scates, central division manager of the World Film Corporation, has just returned from a ten days' trip throughout the East.

General Film Company—There was an active demand for this stock during the past week, but with little change in the market quotations that have ruled for the past 3 or 4 months.

Biograph Company—This stock has had rather a dramatic career during the last two or three months, with a drop from 80 to 49, and back again to bids of 65 this morning.

North American Film Corporation—The first announcement was made in the film trade papers during the past week, in which an offer of $10,000 was made for a sequel to an unfinished story called "The Diamond from the Sky," which is featured as a picturized romantic novel in chapters. It is claimed that more comprehensive plans have been worked out for the distribution of this photoplay than any like production during the past several years.

American Film Manufacturing Company—The demand for this stock has naturally broadened owing to the heavy requirements in connection with the "Diamond from the Sky" and also the production of "The Quest," the first of the "Master Films" released by Mutual and also an extension of their regular business. This company now ranks among the leading manufacturers in point of film output.

The fifteen female candidates for the honor of being the Los Angeles festival queen during a planned celebration in Los Angeles, paid a visit to the Reliance and Majestic studio last week and were entertained in a royal manner. Each candidate represents one of the fifteen prominent industries in Los Angeles.

Edna Maison is doing some specially strong work in her part in the oriental series being produced by Burton King at the Universal studios, Universal City, Calif.

Harry Reichenbach as publicity promoter for the Metro Film Corporation, which is releasing "The Heart of Maryland" under the Tiffany Film Company's name, has the success of the Hippodrome's big first night showing of this picture, to his credit. The showing was a truly artistic one.

Leon J. Rubenstein, who has charge of Thanhouser publicity at the New Rochelle, N. Y., studio, came into New York last week and secured Gimbel Brothers' fashion promenade (both the models and the gowns) to appear in a forthcoming Thanhouser picture on the regular program.

C. J. VerHalen, of the Kriterion Film Corporation, while all but voiceless for the last week owing to a sore throat, still reported for duty every day and directed the work that went out from his desk.

Harry Horsley, superintendent of the Centaur factory and brother of the famous David Horsley, has done original things in his life, but he pulled the winner the other day when he ran his new Ford across his lawn and half way through his front door. The little "Flivver" was not badly hurt, but Harry's feelings were when his friends accused him of trying to take his car to bed with him.

The Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, N. J., was the scene of gay festivities on the night of March 17. A large dance was given in the studio, to which all the prominent motion picture actors and actresses were invited. During the dances a motion picture camera clicked constantly and when in the intermission an exhibition dance was held, two cameras were on the job getting every move.

Those who have been accustomed to seeing William Clifford and Marie Walcamp in films will be surprised to learn that henceforth Mr. Clifford will play character roles in the company headed by Pauline Bush. He will replace Lon Chaney, who in turn has been engaged as director of the J. Warren Kerrigan company.

Max Levey, of the Chicago offices of the World Film Corporation, is on a six weeks' trip through Indiana, Illinois and Iowa. William Weiss, another road man for the same firm, has been gone on a six weeks' trip through Wisconsin and Michigan, and is not expected back for another thirty days.

Back from a ten days' vacation, Harry Weiss, of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation, is back at his desk trying to lose the nine pounds that he gained on the trip. In New York he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Selznick, and spent five days trying to realize how big the firm has grown since he was last in New York in June.

A marriage with the contracting parties standing on a huge steel girder of the twelfth story of a skyscraper in course of erection and a fight in a caisson 150 feet below the surface of a densely populated part of a city are the thrillers in which Maurice Costello and Estelle Mardo are the principals in "The Man Who Couldn't Beat God," the Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature that is now reaching the last stages of completion under the direction of Mr. Costello.

The California Kriterion Exchange opened offices at 734 South Olive street, Los Angeles, Calif., last week.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 23—Selig—March 22.—Gasoline blast wrecks plant of Crew-Levick Company, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Collier Vulcan sails from Philadelphia with food supplies to relieve famine in Palestine; fashions posed for by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; Inventor Lawrence Sperry tests new stabilizer for aeroplanes for officers of Italian navy, New York City, N. Y.; Chicago White Sox play practice game with Pacific Coast League team in Los Angeles, Calif.; Pennsylvania, biggest dreadnaught of all the world's navies launched at Newport News, Va.; war section contains views of the European struggle.

The Little Straw Wife—Essanay—(Three Reels)—March 23.—Zoe Ballentyne, a nine-year-old girl, falls in love with "Tuppy" Holt, a neighbor's boy of about the same age. He writes a proposal on an old piece of writing paper and when Zoe has reached womanhood she still treasures it. A scheming aunt forces her to marry Dudley Holt, who is really "Tuppy" grown up, but Zoe cannot forget her childhood sweetheart and cares nothing for her husband. She runs away from home and secures a position as social secretary to a St. Louis family and they are brought together again when Holt visits the family who employ her. When he assists Claire, the daughter of the house, to elope, Zoe's jealousy is aroused, for she thinks he is in love with Clare himself. Her husband notices her jealousy, and when he tells her that he is the "Tuppy" of her childhood, she admits that she loves him. A review of this picture appeared on page 477 of the March 27 issue.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 24—Selig—March 25.—Alfred Saunders climbs to top of Prudential building, Newark, N. J., to win bet; Moulin Rouge, famous old Paris theater, is destroyed by fire, Paris, France; with dogs as their only companions, three girls start to walk from Chicago to San Francisco; New York Giants in training at Marlin, Texas; new rescuing squad armed with various life saving devices becomes part of the New York City fire department; Grace Darling visits the Panama Canal zone; views of the accident in which Lincoln Beachy, the world's most daring aviator, met his death in San Francisco; war section, including views from Bolimow, Russian-Poland; Niedenburg, East Prussia; and Lowicz, Russian-Poland.

Lifting the Ban of Coventry—Vitagraph—(Three Reels)—March 27.—Despite the pleadings of his widowed mother and his sweetheart, Mary, Worth Stuyvesant goes to West Point where he studies to become a soldier. Mary visits him and meets Cadet Hanks, who falls in love with her. When she shows preference for Worth, Hanks quarrels with him and a fist fight follows, after which the men become good friends. Upon leaving West Point Worth is sent to the 39th infantry in Texas and, when Mary says he must either give up the army or her, their engagament is broken. Worth takes to drinking and is sent to an outpost by the commander of the infantry. His low life brings him in contact with Lola, an adventuress, who forces him to marry her while drunk. In time both realize the life they are leading and do all they can to help each other reform. The officers of the post decide to keep Worth in coventry as long as he remains under them and he and Lola are ostracised. A little girl is born to them and they are happy for a time, but the worry over their social position causes Lola's death. Worth goes to the Philippines with the troops, sending his child to his mother and Mary to care for. He is wounded and his dying words are that he has at last lifted the ban of coventry.

The Sister's Solace—Biograph—March 29.—A short time before the date set for his marriage to Rose, John Neville learns that his fiancee cannot live through the fatal illness with which she has been stricken. She passes away and as the wedding day approaches he loses his mind. The doctor announces that he will die unless the memory of Rose can be taken from him. The girl's twin sister dresses in Rose's bridal costume on the day of the wedding and goes to John. The sight causes him to lose consciousness and when he recovers the sister is nursing him. All memory of the past is erased and he loves only the sister. She has learned to love him and a short time later they are married.

Killed Against Orders — Edison — (Three Reels)—March 29. Miriam Nesbitt, as the girl whose wealthy father is suddenly found to be a common thief, is powerful in this picture. Tricked by her lawyer lover into evidence that sends her father to life imprisonment, she turns master thief herself. A review appeared on page 485 of the March 20 issue.

Curiosity—Essanay — March 29. — A pleasing little comedy in which Ruth Hennessy, Robert Bolder, Leo White and Ben Turpin will draw many laughs from almost every audience. It deals with the curiosity of a number of persons to know who mailed a note to the girl in the case, asking her to come to a certain bench in a certain park. Both the girl's aunt and uncle visit the bench, the former to spy on the girl and the latter to spy upon his wife and the man he believes to be her lover. A lunatic escapes from the asylum and gets into the affair and, for several hundred feet, the girl's lover, the uncle and the lunatic are scarcely able to themselves tell which is which, but in the end all is straightened out. C. J. C.

Poison — Kalem — (Two Reels) — March 29.—Jack Webb, son of a manufacturer of adulterated foods, enters his father's business without knowing of the great harm it is doing. He learns that the conditions in the factory cause suffering among the working class, Mary Hart, his sweetheart, is saddened because her mother is taken sick after eating some of the foods which his father sells. He learns of the wonderful work being done by Professor Lewis B. Allyn of Westfield, Mass., and visits him, securing a great deal of information regarding the manufacture of impure foods. Webb, however, refuses to listen to his son and says he can secure Professor Allyn's approval by bribery, but an attempt to do this fails utterly. The truth is brought home to Webb when his little six-year old daughter is taken ill from eating jam which he has put on sale and as he watches through the night at her bedside he learns that his factory is burning to the ground. The doctor announces that the little girl will live and Webb says that he does not care for the old factory and that he will build a new one in which nothing but foods of the highest class shall be manufactured.

Patsy Married and Settled—(Fourteenth of the Patsy Bolivar Series)—Lubin—March 29.—This closing episode shows Patsy after four years of married life. He is the father of twins and is assisted in caring for them by grandfather. Sykesey has no end of trouble with Tilly and, being out of work, applies to Patsy for help. Our hero, who is now the owner of a big berry farm, gives him work picking berries. The stork again hovers over Patsy's household and he almost collapses when the nurse tells him that he is now the father of five children, triplets having been born to Jane. However, as she is rapidly recovering her health and all the youngsters are well and happy, Patsy is seen happy and prosperous as the picture closes.

Ma's Girls — Selig — (Two Reels)—March 29.—A Tom Mix picture in which that popular Selig star is seen in the role of the villain. Sensational riding and one scene in which Mr. Mix is dragged by the heels through a river and up the opposite bank of the stream form the features. Eventually the villain and his renegade assistants are brought to justice while the plucky young sheriff wins the heart of the girl he loves. See review on page 485, issue of March 27. N. G. C.

Cutey Becomes a Landlord—Vitagraph—March 29.—Because he has proved a spendthrift during his college career, Cutey is left in charge of a tutor while his parents go South. He determines to get some money and, after feigning illness to get rid of the tutor, rents his house to Mr. Harley, whose family consists of one daughter. The butler forces Cutey to give him half the rent to keep quiet and then announces that he is off for a vacation. Cutey is forced to act as butler and when Rose Harley arrives he recognizes her as a former acquaintance, but she pretends not to know him and takes advantage of his awkward position. Numerous comical and embarrassing incidents follow one after another until Cutey is finally discharged by Mr. Harley after trying to steal some of his own clothes. He determines to confess all to Rose, with whom he has fallen in love, and returns minus his butler make-up on the same day his parents have selected to return from the South. They arrive as he is talking to Rose and he tells her they are lunatics. Then he goes to the door and makes them believe he has been sick, but when they find woman's clothing in the house things begin to happen. Mr. Harley returns and when everything is in a turmoil Cutey is forced to step up and confess all. Both his parents and Mr. Harley approve of his marriage to Rose, however.

The Americano—Biograph—March 30. A story of early California. Madison, an American, has become the leader of a band of pirates making their headquarters on his ship, the Falcon. He learns that the famous mission El Refugio contains treasures which have been stored up for years by the monks and determines to raid it, when his crew insist that he lead them in one more expedition before he retires. Donna Isabella de Ortega, the daughter of a wealthy landowner, visits the mission on the day the pirates attack it and is rescued by Madison, who double-crosses his followers when they attempt to insult Isabella. The others of the band make their escape, but Madison is captured by Isabella's father. When he proves a genius for directing the reconstruction of the mission he is given his liberty and employed by de Ortega to do similar work. He falls in love with Isabella and, after again rescuing her when she falls from a cliff, proposes marriage, but this is curtly refused because he is an Americano, and she is a daughter of noble birth. He continues his work, however, and when the pirates attack the de Ortega estate once more and he again proves himself a hero by saving Lady Isabella the pride of lineage goes down before the admission that the Americano is a man worth more than any of those about him. When he again asks for Lady Isabella's hand he finds that the barrier has been removed.

Music in Flats—Edison—March 30.—This comedy is of a more strenuous nature than previous Wadsworth-Housman comedies and has one big feature—the characterizations of these two comedians when the screen is not filled with flying chairs, dishes, and fists. Artie takes singing lessons. His teacher's voice arouses the admiration of the woman downstairs, and she sends him a "mash-note." By mistake it is given to Artie. He, of course, decides to follow it up and a general mixup freely scattered with fights follows. C. R. C.

The Man in Motley—Essanay—March 30.—One of the best one-reel pictures for the week, in which Ruth Stonehouse, Richard C. Travers and Harry Dunkinson have the leading roles. Mr. Dunkinson has probably never been seen to better advantage on the screen. He plays the role of Smith, whom fate has fitted to play the fool. The action takes place in India. Smith and Captain Howard both love Ruth Devereux. Through a misunderstanding, Smith attends the Rajah's ball dressed as Romeo and finds himself the only one present in costume. Later, humiliated, he is leaving, when Ruth sympathizes with him, but refuses to marry him. Some natives attack Ruth and Captain Howard and Smith saves them, though Ruth, who has fainted, believes it was Howard who rescued her. Howard continues this impression by request of Smith who does not want to disillusion the girl. N. G. C.

Ham in the Harem—Kalem—March 30.—Ham and Bud in the Orient find themselves out of place, as they had planned to be bootblacks. They follow the Sultan's favorite wife, Fatima, and enjoy themselves to the fullest extent in the harem. They are captured and told that unless they make the sultan laugh within ten minutes they will die. Several things fail to make the sultan laugh, but an imaginary poker game finally produces the desired effect. The sultan becomes interested in poker and they take his entire fortune away from him. He calls in his money lender and when that worthy refuses to loan him more money he knocks him over the head and dumps him into a chute leading to the river. The sultan tries to treat Ham and Bud likewise, but they throw him into the chute instead. The adventurers then go to the harem to look for Fatima and when they learn that she has eloped with her lover they return to the chute and, after bidding the world farewell, plunge in.

The Writing on the Wall—Kalem—March 30.—An episode of the girl detective series. Webster, a multi-millionaire, is stabbed and the girl detective and Warrington, her assistant, are assigned to the case. The rich man who has recovered tells of a letter he received from "For Our Brothers' Association" a few days previous to the assault which threatened his life unless he agreed to share his riches with them. The girl detective finds a knife on which the letters F. O. B. A. are burned, and this serves as a clue. When another attempt is made on Webster's life he determines to flee the city and persuades Warrington and the girl detective to accompany him. They leave in an automobile but are followed by the ruffians of the blackmailing society in another car and the three are overpowered. The girl detective, however, manages to escape and returns to the headquarters of the F. O. B. A with help in time to rescue Warrington and Webster. The would-be murderer makes a final attempt to take Webster's life, but a bullet from the girl detective's pistol fells him before he can accomplish his purpose.

Monkey Business—Lubin—March 30.—A young man, who has just returned from South Africa, finds that the monkey he has brought with him for his sweetheart in his home village is not welcomed in the New York hotels, so he sends it to the girl by express. He also writes her a note saying she must take good care of the "little thing," as he killed its mother. The monkey arrives in the village about the same time a nigger lady and her little pickaninny are about to leave and in no time the pickaninny is inside the monkey's cage and the monkey running loose. The girl receives the pickaninny—also the note from her sweetheart—and this, together with the trouble the monkey causes, supplies laughs on a wholesale basis until the young man arrives and manages to explain matters. Joseph Kaufman and Ethel Clayton featured.

The Legal Light—Selig—March 30.—A one-reel western picture that will cause many laughs. Eugene Ford appears in the role of a woman lawyer who hangs out her shingle in a small western town. Tom Mix and a lot of other cowboys, smitten with the lady, at once plan to get into trouble that she may defend them. All rob the village general store the same night, leaving evidences of their presence behind, but when arraigned for trial and they send word to the lady lawyer, to secure her services, they learn with surprise, that she has married another man and it is he who volunteers to defend them. N. G. C.

The Enemies—Vitagraph—March 30.—Captain Waverlie, a rugged ugly-looking man, returns to his ship after burying his sister, Minnie, who was once beautiful but who, after a tragedy in her life, went down grade. He vows to be revenged upon the man who caused her ruin. He is loved by Irene, the shipowner's daughter, but keeps his distance because of his position. To spite him she accepts the attentions of Sargent, a prominent lawyer. When he meets Sargent he instantly recognizes the man he has determined to kill. Captain Waverlie has a dermatological operation performed, transforming his facial characters into those of a handsome man, as well as one whose personality affects all those he meets. He rises in position almost immediately and gathers together a band of rough sailors. His plan progresses and he has Sargent shanghaied and puts him through all the tortures known to the lower class of seamen. At length he reveals his identity and leaves Sargent dying in one of the lower decks with three pictures before him—those of Waverlie, his sister and the daughter of the shipowner. That night the moonlight reveals to the captain that is enemy is dead.

A Lucky Loser—Edison—March 31.—Carleton King is seen here as a man who determines to get all the joy possible out of his "night out." All the trouble comes as a result of his wife's picking his pocket while he is on the way to a quiet little game. He nabs the wrong "thief," but does not get away with it. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Demand That Must Be Supplied — Essanay — March 31. — Gerda Holmes, Bryant Washburn and Richard Travers have the principal roles in this table which is built upon the theory that when a girl is romantic, romance must enter her life or she will not be satisfied. The heroine, Alice, is a girl of this type, and is tired of the love-making of her sweetheart, Harvey, who is just an everyday fellow. When she tells him of her desire, he arranges with her parents, her brother and her pretty cousin to give her a whirlwind romance which will satisfy her fondest desires. The plan works out to perfection and, after many hardships, Harvey manages to bundle Alice into an automobile at midnight and rush away, while the "conspirators" from a safe hiding place enjoy the escape of the elopers. There are many points in this film that are deserving of mention, but space forbids. However, it may be said that it will prove pleasing to the average audience. C. J. C.

The Unmarried Husband—Lubin—(Two Reels)—March 31.—John Loyal, a hard working and simple living bookkeeper, adopts Elsie, an eight-year-old orphan, and cares for her as though she were his own child. He inherits a fortune and his unscrupulous employer, Scruggs, determines to get it from him. Scruggs' niece, Nell, a chorus girl who is out of work, is taken into the crooked man's confidence and she agrees to marry John and get all the money she can from him, dividing the spoils with Scruggs. John, feeling the need of a mother to care for Elsie, marries Nell but soon finds that she cares little for him. Hill, a man who has figured in Nell's past, meets her again and asks her to return to the stage. She attends a supper with Hill one evening when Elsie is ill and John, discovering what she has done, follows and forces her to return home, knocking Hill down when he attempts to interfere. When they reach home Nell locks herself in her room. Hill follows and is about to shoot John when little Elsie runs into the room to ask why her "papa" and "mamma" quarreled. She receives the bullet meant for John and Hill is arrested. In the weeks which follow the child's struggle with death wakes Nell to a realization of her true self and she begs John's forgiveness and asks if she may become a real mother to little Elsie. He happily tells her she may. Ethel Clayton and Arthur Matthews featured.

Chains of Gold—Selig—March 31.—Guy Oliver and Stella Razeto are featured in this one-reel picture which has for its moral that love is more valuable than the greatest sum of gold ever collected. As David Bailey, Mr. Oliver has the part of a city business man, whose craving for wealth preys upon his mind until he is compelled to visit a brain specialist. This doctor advises complete rest if he is to be cured and the two repair to Rest Island, where David meets and falls in love with Susan Moore, the poor but pretty daughter of an old soldier. When Susan's father meets death by accident, Susan's mind becomes unbalanced, but David, who has learned to value love more than gold, decides to remain, in the hope of curing her, though the doctor is about to return to the city. Eventually love restores her reason and she becomes David's wife. N. G. C.

A Fortune Hunter — Vitagraph — March 31.—Rupert's uncle tells him that he has to go to work in the tannery and quit story writing if he wishes to live, but Rupert gives up all for art's sake and goes to the city. Because of his ability to write fine phrases he is hired as an ad writer for a fake rubber plant company and all is well for a while. His job is swept from under him, however, when the fake rubber plant company is raided by the police, but he is cheered up when he learns that his uncle has died and left him a fortune. He returns to his uncle's home and is handed the fortune by his uncle's lawyer. To his dismay, however, it consists of stock held in the fake rubber company, for which he formerly worked. Sadly he makes his way to the tannery.

Just a Lark—Biograph—April 1.—Lucille Bond, a daughter of wealth, is bored by society life and when she reads that a prairie schooner is for sale she plans a diversion by taking a trip in the woods in it. Accompanied by her maid she goes into the woods and is terrified to learn that a convict has escaped from a nearby prison. Don Herrick, an artist, sees her in the woods and later comes upon the prairie schooner. She mistakes him for the convict and covers him with a pistol, but he manages to explain his presence. For several days he is a regular visitor at the prairie schooner home of Lucille and one day appears dressed in the convict's garb, as that worthy has met him and forced him to change clothes. The sheriff's posse are close on the convict's trail and Lucille is forced to hide Don. He is discovered, however, and placed under arrest by the posse, but Lucille and her maid manage to explain his presence with the assistance of his dog, who recognizes him. The convict is captured and when they are alone again Don tells Lucille he is willing to become her prisoner for life.

A Coat Tale—Essanay—April 1.—The wife insists on purchasing a coat worth $100, but hubby refuses to buy it and he sends home a $6.95 coat with a $100 bill tucked in one of the pockets. Wifey is satisfied until she learns that the lady across the hall has a coat just like it for $6.95. She throws the coat out of the window and a negro street cleaner picks it up and takes it home to his wife. Later when hubby tells wifey about the $100 bill tucked in the pocket, they both start out in search of the coat, and hubby gets arrested while the wife who has found the colored woman starts a fight with her that results in both being brought to the station. The $100 bill finally pays the fines of all. N. G. C.

The White Mask — Lubin — (Three Reels)—April 1.—Yvonne, a duchess, is an exceptionally clever dancer and at the death of her husband, places their little son with friends and goes on the stage, concealing her identity behind a white mask. The king falls in love with her and she allows him to learn who she is, but he keeps her secret. When Prince Nordoff learns who the white mask is, however, he immediately makes it public through jealousy of the king, and Yvonne is socially ostracized. She takes her son and goes to America. Years pass and she is living among new friends who know her as Mrs. Dean and is engaged to a man named Emerson. Her son is now a young man and is in love with the daughter of a capitalist. Nordoff and another noble come to America with a plan which the former knows to be crooked, but which the latter thinks is all right. Nordoff again meets Yvonne and tells her that unless she helps him get her fiance into the plan, which he admits to her is crooked, he will expose her. She is desperate, but refuses. He exposes her, and when Emerson says he is through with her, her son angrily struggles with him. In the fight Emerson is killed. Yvonne, when she learns of her son's act, forces him to allow her to assume the guilt of the murder. When she is sentenced for the crime, however, the boy declares that he did the deed, but not soon enough to save Yvonne, for the strain has been too much for her and she dies. The partner, whom Nordoff tricked, locks him in a hotel until the police come for him, and the hotel takes fire, Nordoff perishing in the burning structure. Yvonne's son is eventually freed and is received with open arms by his sweetheart. Lillie Leslie featured.

Moonshines—Mina—April 1.—Harry, a real sport, arrives home after an unusually strenuous evening and falls into bed. He dreams that he has gone to the country, which is a mixture of the far North and the Kentucky hills, and that he is the hero in a three-cornered love affair in which fair Lunette and Tom the moonshine king are heroine and villain.

Another woman enters the dream in the form of Cordelia Broad-Face, a descendant of Pocahontas, and is the means of saving Harry's life. When he turns to Lunette, after Cordelia has disposed of Tom, the Pocahontas-like woman raps him over the head with a huge club. At this point Harry wakes with a start and finds it is morning. He at once sets out to take the pledge.

The Sheriff's Dilemma—Biograph—April 2.—Mollie, a school mistress in a western town, loves the minister, but he does not appear to return her affection. The sheriff loves Mollie and she attempts to help him to overcome his fondness for drink. An unjust suspicion of the relations existing between Mollie and the minister causes the latter to hand in his resignation. The sheriff under the influence of liquor quarrels with the minister and they come to blows. The mayor of the town takes the sheriff's badge and gives it to the minister and the latter immediately appoints the former sheriff as his deputy. The former minister, now sheriff, learns about this time that Mollie's father who is soon to visit her, is an outlaw whom he has orders to arrest. He promises Mollie he will not arrest her father, but sends his deputy to apprehend him, thus satisfying both love and law. The deputy wounds her father and when he dies in her home Mollie is convinced that the man she loves has broken his word to her. The sheriff, however, seeing that the minister now loves Mollie and realizing that she has always loved him he tells her that it was he who killed her father. About the same time the congregation learns that their suspicions of the former minister were unjust and ask him to return. He agrees to do this and at the same time asks Mollie to become his wife.

The Boston Tea Party—Edison—(Two Reels)—April 2.—Thrilling patriotism and exciting reproduction of historic events fairly surge through this film. Aside from its historic value this picture is above the average as a romance. Carleton King, Maxine Brown, and Pat O'Malley are seen in the principal roles. The photography is fine. In one scene a clever triple exposure is used with good effect. Most everyone is familiar with the story of how the colonists, goaded by England's unlawful and frequent taxations, ordered the "Monmouth," carrying a cargo of tea, removed from the Boston harbor. The British refused, and the colonists, disguised as Indians, boarded the ship while its crew and officers were enjoying themselves on shore and threw the boxes of tea into the water of the harbor. This was one of the indirect cause of the Revolutionary War. The scenes were taken in the exact locales in Boston. C. R. C.

Countess Veschi's Jewels—Essanay—(Two Reels)—April 2.—Alfred Tisdale, an employee of Mr. Soper, is invited to a week-end by the merchant and is glad of the chance to be with Ruth Soper, the daughter, whom he loves. On the train he meets a man named Rawdin who is also on the way to the week-end social, and their suitcases become mixed. Tisdale wears Rawdin's dress suit, as it fits him, but finding a black mask in the pocket makes him believe Rawdin is a crook. The first evening in the Soper home the family's silverware is stolen and Tisdale ,is accused of the theft largely because he has a black mask in his pocket. Ruth believe him innocent and, when her father locks him in a room to await the coming of the police, she helps him escape. When the automobile in which they are making their get-away breaks down, they take refuge in a barn and find the real thieves. Mr. Soper and the other guests who are following them arrive in time to help Tisdale overcome the crooks. As the police arrive to take charge of the thieves Tisdale runs into Rawdin and declares his suspicions of him. Rawdin, however, gives him the laugh and tells him that the black mask will be worn at a social the next evening.

The Siren's Reign—Kalem—(Three Reels)—April 2.—Upon the death of her brother, Marguerite Morrison takes his place as a member of the firm of Blake & Morrison. She secretly loves Blake, but he is blinded by the beauty of Grace, a chorus girl and marries her. A year passes and the firm is in financial difficulties, due to Grace's extravagance. Even her child does not interest her and upon pretense of visiting relatives she goes to New York, where she again takes up stage work. Blake, taking a business trip to New York, learns the truth and when he meets his wife with another man in a cafe he orders her to return home, but she spurns him scornfully. Later that night he forces his way into he apartment and, when she again mocks him, he throttles her. Leaving her dead body he returns home and after arranging his affairs takes a pistol from his desk. Marguerite fears that all is not well and calls up Blake's residence. As the butler is talking to her she hears a shot over the 'phone and hurries to his home to find him dying from the effects of the bullet wound he has inflicted in his temple. For the first time he learns of her love for him, and places his child in her arms, asking her to care for it.

In the Background—Lubin—April 2.—Estranda, a poor Italian laborer, gives practically all the money he earns to a professor in order that his son, Pietro, may become a famous violinist. One day the boy's chance comes and he secures an engagement at a social affair given by Mrs. Dayton, a society leader. It is then that Estranda learns that only by remaining in the background can he expect to have Pietro gain fame, as his lowly position would reflect on the boy's popularity. A year pases after Pietro has made good and the boy is in love with Mrs. Dayton's daughter, Lucy. A rival for the girl's hand learns of the work Pietro's father is doing and though the boy disowns him the rival threatens to expose him. Estranda learns of the affair and tries to prevent the rival from telling what he knows. This act arouses Pietro's manhood and he takes his father in his arms and tells who he is. The society leaders turn away from him in disgust, but one remains true to him—Lucy. Together the three plan for the future.

When Gratitude is Love—Edison—April 3.—Margaret Prussing and Thomas MacEvoy are seen in this drama of the North woods. Jack Howard, a young city chap, obtains work in a lumber camp. He meets Maud Clark, daughter of one of the lumber-jacks, and is greatly attracted to her. One day as he stands watching his partner, Tibeau, wrestling with one of the other men Tibeau challenges him. He accepts. The French-Canadian is thrown to the ground in no time, to the great amazement of the watchers. Tibeau resents this, and determines to be revenged on Jack. He attacks him on their next meeting, and only Jack's tightly laced high shoe saves him from an ugly cut from Tibeau's axe. He is taken to the Clark home, and soon falls in love with Maud, his nurse. The affair ends with their engagement.

Ingomar of the Hills—Essanay—April 3.—G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton have the leading roles in this picture which, though it is based upon an old theme, is treated in a refreshing manner, and will be popular with those who enjoy western pictures. At many points throughout the film the action holds one's interest strongly, while at all times it is of sufficient merit to please. The plot deals with the kidnapping of a girl who is on her way to her father's ranch, by a band of outlaws led by Ingomar. When the outlaw chief meets the girl he falls in love with her and manages to effect her escape, risking his life to accomplish this purpose. When he sees her safely started towards home, he sits down upon the hillside with the Bible she has given him in his hand.

A Life in the Balance—(An Episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Series Featuring Helen Holmes)—Kalem—April 3.—King attempts to tighten the brake of a freight car standing near the summit of a steep grade at Lone Point, but the brake chain snaps and the train commences to roll down hill. King loses his head and, instead of jumping, sticks to the car. As its flight rapidly increases he cannot jump without endangering his life. Helen sees his peril and mounting a pony rides to a point just before a curve, as she knows that if the car reaches this curve it will mean the death of King. She stretches a rope across the track and crawls hand over hand to the center of it and as the car passes she snatches King from it with her free hand and a moment later the car is dashed to pieces as it leaves the rails of the curve.

Mother of Pearl—Lubin—April 3.—John Diggs, a scientist, is so interested in his experiments that he completely neglects his wife, Pearl. The "mother of Pearl" makes her appearance and a week of suffering follows in which John is made to neglect his work almost entirely. Then mother goes away and Pearl attempts to apply her methods, but without success. She does succeed in taking John to a lecture, however, but he breaks this up by experimenting during the talk and causing an explosion. A panic follows and he is badly hurt. Pearl thinks she will have him to herself while he is ill, but instead he orders more research books. She is about to leave him forever when he suddenly realizes that he has been neglecting her and catches her just as she is leaving, after pursuing her about the house in his wheel chair. They are reconciled and John promises to do all his work at his laboratory and give all his time at home to his wife. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured.

Destiny Decides—Biograph—April 13.—The girl is a stranger in the town and when she meets the man they realize they are in love. She tells him that he must know he past before they can marry and then unfolds to him the secret she has always kept, telling how another man tricked her into a mock marriage and then deserted her. The man, however, says that this is nothing to him and marries her. The man of her past learns of the marriage and comes to blackmail her. He tells her that though she thought the marriage a mock it was real and that she is his lawful wife. She prepares to leave her true lover and go away forever, but he learns her secret before she can do this and starts out to find the man who caused all her unhappiness. Just before he locates him the man is killed by a greaser in a dispute over a card game. All evidence points to the fact that the girl's true lover is the murderer and the girl herself believes that he committed the deed. Just as he is about to be led away the greaser is caught and forced to confess his guilt and the man and girl begin life anew.

Mutual Program

Joe Harkin's Ward—Princess—March 19.—On the death of his partner, Ned Lawson, Joe Harkins becomes guardian of the other's four-year-old child, Barbara. When he strikes it rich he sends Barbara east to be educated, and then, finding life intolerably lonely, he moves to a city where, being still a young man, he can enjoy life. Barbara returns from school and Harkin realizes that he loves the girl, not as a child and ward, but as a sweetheart. Feeling that it would be compromising for her to live with him, he tries to explain to her why they should part. Her ingenuous, "but could we not marry?" solves the situation. Boyd Marshall and Rene Farrington in the leading parts.

The Skinflint—Princess—March 26.—The "skinflint" refuses to help his son when the boy gets into a tight place, and turns a deaf ear to his daughter's pleadings for help for her sick husband and needy children. In a dream Silas Keene sees himself as he might have been, a kind father and a genial companion. He decides that it is not too late to, in some degree, make the dream a reality, and goes to the aid of his son and his daughter and her family, then buys a big house and surrounds himself with his kith and kin. He lives out the rest of his days as a happy, grandfatherly old man. Ernest C. Ward, David Thompson and Carey L. Hastings head the cast.

Bubbling Water—Reliance—(Two Reels)—March 27.—Bubbling Water is wooed by Chief Young Bull, but Gordon Lee, a white man from the East, comes between the lovers and wins the girl for his bride. They are married according to Indian custom and live together in contentment on Lee's ranch for about a year. Then Lee is seized with a longing to return East. Shortly afterwards Young Bull visits the deserted wife, confesses that he still loves her, and offers to take her away, but she hesitates to consent. Finally she confides to him her secret—she is to have a child. Fearing that her loneliness and grief will kill her, the Indian sets out to find Lee. He locates him in a gambling den, and tells him of Bubbling Water's condition. Lee breaks down at this and hurries back to his ranch. Young Bull witnesses their reconciliation and his face darkens with hate for Lee, then fades into the stoicism of his race.

Journey's End—Royal—March 27.—Harry stole Charlie's girl when they were children. After forty years the enmity increases, though both have become ministers. Charlie's son loves Harry's daughter, but neither of the fathers will consent to their marriage. Polly and Paul elope and wire back that they are married, but a little too soon, for the justice of the peace refuses to marry them until morning. The marriage license blows out of Paul's room into the hands of a thief who is arrested the next morning, and the license is restored to the distraught couple. By the time that the fathers arrive the ceremony is over.

The Old Chemist—Majestic—(Two Reels)—March 28.—Frank Barker is accused of the murder of his uncle, an old chemist, on the strength of a letter which he wrote to the old man, threatening to strike him for his overbearing and niggardly ways. The only person who believes Frank innocent is his sweetheart, Leila Wilson. She engages Walter Kemp, scientific detective, to unravel the mystery. A few days before the trial Kemp visits the district attorney and relates the result of his investigations. On one of the pantry shelves he found, half eaten, a poisoned sandwich, and on the table where the bread was cut particles of a deadly drug. These and a few other little bits of evidence prove that the chemist died of the effects of the poison left by his own carelessness on the table, where he cut and made himself a sandwich. The indictment is quashed and Lelia and Frank become married.

Mixed Values—Komic—March 28.—Roy Van Dyke and Jimmie, his clerk, forget the difference in their stations in discussing their prospective engagements, and also forgetting, on concluding the conversation, that they have each other's rings. Wealthy Alice Lewis' receiving a cheap imitation diamond from Van Dyke causes as much trouble as Emily's receiving a good one from Jimmie. The restoration of the rings brings about the release of Van Dyke and Jimmie from jail.

The Spirit of the Uplift—Thanhouser—March 28.—After the death of Blinky, his pal, Whitey discovers that the dead man has an old blind father, whom he has made comfortable with $25,000. Whitey persuades Muggs to impersonate the son to the blind man and try to get the money. Muggs tells May, the girl who has been taking care of the old man, that he is impersonating Blinky in order that the dead man's father may not die of a broken heart. Later, under May's influence, Muggs determines to give up the game. Whitey calls him to account and they quarrel. Whitey makes up his mind to get Muggs, but in robbing a store he is caught by the police and Muggs is left to continue his new life. Starring Morris Foster and Minnie Berlin.

In the Sunlight—(Two Reels)—American—March 29.—A beautifully photographed story of two doctors, one of whom becomes a drug slave and seeks fame in the city, while the city doctor visits the country, acquires the practice of the other, and when the drug victim finally dies, marries his wife. See review on page 525 of this issue.

The Jeweled Dagger of Fate—Reliance—March 29.—Larry Fiske loves Marion Giles, daughter of an old curiosity shop keeper. She is betrothed by her father, however, to Travers, a rich curio-hunter. A poor Italian girl, sorely in need of money with which to clothe herself and feed her child, sells Martin Giles an antique dagger with a jeweled hilt. She is suddenly taken ill in the shop and Marion helps her back to the rooms behind the store where she and her father live. Knowing that Marion admires the dagger Larry, who works in the shop, buys it for her for a wedding present. Travers sees the dagger laying on the table and recoils as though struck. Remorse and fear cause him to confess to Larry the story of how he wronged a girl in Italy who, on his attempting to leave her, threatened his life with this very dagger. Marion overhears the confession and she and her father lead Travers to the bedside of the Italian girl, where they extract from him a promise to marry her. The jeweled dagger completes its mission by bringing together the hearts of Larry and Marion. Winnifred Allen, Alfred Fisher, George M. Marlo and Gordon de Maine.

The First Stone—Beauty—March 30.—Irving Cummings and Virginia Kirtley in a dramatic one-reel picture in which both have splendid opportunities for acting. Mary Carr, deserted just before the birth of her child by a man who has misled her, finds refuge with Doctor Hardy, at the time when Rev. Arthur Johnson orders his son Ernest from home on account of disgraceful behavior. Years later, Mary becomes a governess of the children of John Steel, a wealthy widower, but when Steel begins to show her attentions, Rev. Arthur informs him of the girl's past and tells Mary that she has no right to win the love of an honest man. Next day the Rev. Arthur learns to his horror, by the confession of his dying son that it was his own boy who had brought about Mary's ruin and, after confessing all to Steel, rights the wrong he had done Mary by marrying her to Steel.

An Image of the Past—Majestic—March 30.—Jessie Curtis elopes with Jack Dexter. Her wealthy father, in a fury, disinherits her. Ten years later finds Jack very ill, the family penniless, and the three children out singing on the street, masked and costumed. In this fashion they wander beneath the windows of their grandfather's house. The lonely old man calls them in, listens to their story and promises to aid their sick father. Suddenly one of the children rushes across the room to a picture painted of Jessie when she was seven years old, and demands to know why his sister's picture in the old man's home. The little girl unmasks and Curtis sees the great resemblance. He learns the children's identity and returns home with them to forgive and help his daughter and her husband. J. H. Allen, Signe Auen and Charles Cosgrave featured.

The Magnet of Destruction—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—March 30.—Arthur Ashley and Mignon Anderson featured. Lyell, head of an organization whose object is to injure the rich members of society, interests old Professor Hilton in his cause and persuades him to join the association. Arthur Grennell, the son of a wealthy manufacturer, joins also, thinking it a reform movement. Lyell falls in love with Hilton's daughter, Mignon, but she prefers Grennell. To put his rival out of the way, Lyell selects him to kill a wealthy capitalist. Realizing the nature of the organization, Grennell flees the city. Some months later Lyell, Hilton and Grennell all meet in a factory town. Lyell and Hilton are working in one of the big mills. The former handles a large rail-carrying magnet. Knowing that Grennell and his friends are to visit the factory, Lyell plans to drop the rails upon his victim. Mignon saves her lover by pulling the lever, causing the magnet to drop its load a few seconds too soon. The plot is discovered and Lyell is killed in trying to escape. Grennell and Mignon marry.

Reformation—American—March 31.—Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood in a melodrama showing how a burglar and his sister, who is a shoplifter, finally reform, though, the sister is hounded for many months by a detective who formerly had failed to convict her. When the brother escapes from prison and visits his sister, he is recaptured by the detective, but returns to the penitentiary to serve his sentence. When rejoining his sister once more the two make their reformation complete.

Shorty Among the Cannibals—Broncho—(Two Reels)—March 31.—Shorty, after reading "Robinson Crusoe," falls asleep and dreams of hair-raising adventures on a cannibal isle. He is about to meet his fate in the boiling pot and be served up for the cannibal king's supper, when he wakes—to find the underbrush around him on fire from a lighted cigarette he has dropped, and the cowboys rushing to his rescue with buckets of water. Jack Hamilton featured as Shorty.

The Primitive Spirit—Reliance—March 31.—Tom Fuller is made a coward by his mother, who teaches him that any exercise of physical strength against an opponent is brutal. Mildred Duncan marries him for financial reasons, but in her heart she despises her husband for a weakling. The manlier Hugh Gates attracts her, and she believes herself in love with him. Tom, scenting estrangement and scandal, takes Mildred to the mountains. Gates follows. Roughing it has a remarkable effect on Tom, and he begins to realize that he never has been but half a man. When he catches Gates on the point of running off with Mildred he astonishes his rival by trouncing him. Tom then orders his wife into a canoe and paddles off with her. Mildred is completely subdued and for the first times loves and respects her husband.

The Fakir—Domino—(Two Reels)—April 1.—Mlle. Florine runs away from Dr. Ronaldo, a fakir and hypnotist, and is found by Tom Waldron, a young man prominent in society. He takes her home to his mother who adopts Florine. Later, Waldron and the girl become sweethearts and are married. Dr. Ronaldo, robbed of his chief attraction in the person of Florine, disguises himself as a Yogi and becomes a fad in society. He meets Florine at a fashionable reception, learns that she is the wife of the wealthy Tom Waldron and that night pays a visit to the house, where he uses his old power to make her rob the safe. The butler sees his shadow in the garden and notifies Tom, who sends for the police. The latter arrive just in time to see Florine hand the loot to Ronaldo. They shoot the fakir and arrest his accomplice, but quickly free her when they realize that she has acted under her former persecutor's hypnotic influence. Walter Edwards, Rhea Mitchell and Frank Borzage featured.

The Spirit of the Bell—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—April 2.—Miguel Galvez, a Federalist, loves Dolores, whose heart is with Pedro, a young rebel captain. Miguel and his men demand that Dolores be surrendered to him, but the house has been warned and the girl has been taken to a mission for protection. Thither, after killing her father, Miguel goes, demanding the girl. The fathers refuse to deliver her over. At night, the mission being in great danger of an attack, Dolores disguises herself in white, hides behind the great bell and rises from it like a spectre, thus frightening the superstitious soldiers. Pedro arrives in time to save his sweetheart and the mission from the Federal blackguard, who is killed and his band routed. Enid Markey, Charles Ray and Jack Nelson starred.

The Artist's Wife—Majestic—April 2.—Adair, an artist, is engaged to his model, Jean, but puts her aside for his new love, a society beauty whose portrait he is painting. The girl's suitor, mad with jealousy, enters Adair's studio and fires at him. Jean flings herself between Adair and the weapon and receives the bullet in her hip. She is made lame for life. But the artist, cured of his infatuation, marries Jean and devotes himself to making her happy. Miriam Cooper takes the leading part.

Sympathy Sal—Reliance—(Two Reels)—April 3.—Charley Latimer from the East wins the affections of Sympathy Sal, who keeps the eating house at the station. Seth Selby, also in love with Sal, learns that she and Charley have planned a secret marriage, and notifies Latimer's father. The proud old gentleman starts West. Nearing his destination he is taken ill and arrives at the station in an almost unconscious condition. He is put into a wagon and the driver is instructed to take him to the nearest doctor. He is told that the man has smallpox. Immediately he unhitches the horse and gallops away. Sal, on her way to be married, comes upon the wagon and takes the old man to a shack nearby. Young Latimer, jealous, shoots at his "rival," but hits Sal instead. He nurses both back to health and receives his father's blessing on marrying Sal later.

A Corner in Babies—Royal—April 3.—Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Brown each have twins. They meet one evening to prepare a paper for their Mothers' Club and their husbands also convene to play cards in the opposite apartment. Two burglars enter the house. They hold up the women, take the infants, escape across the court on an ironing-board and hold up the men in the opposite apartment. The women follow over the ironing-board. The babies' cries bring the police and the burglars are captured. The twins, fathers and mothers are then reunited.

Ethel's Deadly Alarm Clock—Komic—April 4.—This is episode number twenty of the "Bill" series. An Italian person named Sylves causes a lot of unpleasantness by bringing Ethel's employer a bomb in the shape of an alarm clock. Ethel also receives an alarm clock as a present from a devoted admirer who grieved when she was called down for being late. The two clocks get mixed. However, when it seems as if the spectator can bear no further suspense, help comes. Ethel is saved and Sylves gets the benefit of the bomb which he designed for others.

Doctor Jim—Majestic—(Two Reels)—April 4.—Doctor Jim Hilton becomes involved with Dave Farley, the reckless son of Sheriff Farley, in a gun fight with Steve Boyle. Steve is shot and the doctor helps Dave get away with him to the hills. Mary Farley, who loves Hilton, helps him leave the vicinity. Later, her father follows Hilton into the wilderness and uses Mary as bait to catch him by spreading the report that the girl is ill at his camp. Mary worries so for the doctor's safety that she develops a high fever. Her father, frightened, goes out in earnest to hunt a physician. When he returns he finds Hilton taking care of Mary. Under the circumstances Farley feels responsible for Hilton's safety and shields him from the vigilance committee. The next day he accompanies Hilton to his camp, where they find Dave caring for Steve, who is far from being a dead man. Fred Burns, Catherine Henry and Vester Perry take the leading parts.

The Winning Hand—Reliance—April 5.—Tom Fleming, at the end of his rope financially, lays siege to the affections of a fair widow with a snug fortune and an only child. They become engaged. Little Evelyn, however, disapproves of the match from the very first. Partly on her account, the mother puts off the wedding. Meanwhile, Flynn, a creditor, presses Fleming unmercifully. He, in desperation, steals his fiancee's jewels. Evelyn holds Fleming up with a pistol and reveals to her mother the character of the man she was about to marry.

Universal Program

Too Many Bachelors—L-Ko—March 21.—Two bachelors, Moses and Abe, consider themselves ladykillers and try to charm pretty Peggy, but she scorns them both. They decide to abduct her, and, arriving at the house at the same time, become engaged in an awful fight which continues in a fastly-drawn wagon and ends in the mud, after they tumble over the edge of a cliff.

Animated Weekly No. 159—Universal—March 24.—Twenty-ninth infantry leaves New York for three years' service in Panama Canal Zone; Moulin Rouge, celebrated Paris theater, destroyed by fire; the funeral of Mrs. John D. Rockefeller; St. Patrick's Day celebration in New York City; the launching of U. S. S. Pennsylvania at Newport News, Va.; soldiers of the 38th Royal Ottawa regiment are presented with swagger sticks at Ottawa, Canada; Field Marshal von Hindenburg, commander of Germany's Eastern armies, and his bodyguard in Northern Poland; cartoons by Hy Mayer of Puck.

The Supreme Impulse—Imp—March 29.—Violet Mersereau and William Garwood featured. Ann Donnelson and Earl Graham, her lover, are seriously considering entering into matrimony, so seriously, in fact, that they read articles on the subject and investigate into the home life of married couples. Neither of these prove very promising and they decide that, as they are now happy as sweethearts, to remain so all of their lives. One of the articles of their agreement is that each can enjoy the society of other girls or boys if he or she so wishes. A few days of this proves that it will not last, as each becomes jealous of the other's friends. Ann's widowed chum is the mother of a little girl. The mother becomes ill and Ann nurses her, assisted by Earl in the evenings. They become greatly attached to the little girl, and long for one of their own. They visit another married couple and receive a new impression of married life. Happiness and contentment are the most noticeable factors in this home. Ann and Earl decide that married life isn't so bad after all, and hasten to get married.

Around the World in Ten Minutes—Joker—March 29.—This is one of the ever-popular animated cartoons. Views of the Swedish National Park of Lapland complete the reel.

Playing with Fire—Victor—(Two Reels)—March 29.—Marja, a gypsy, is stoned out of the camp, and fearing death, she places her little baby girl on the Roberts doorstep. Mr. Roberts finds the waif and decides to keep her. Years later Mr. Roberts' son, Bruce, returns from college and at a ball meets Cora, a bewitching beauty, who charms him. In the meantime Marja has seen Bruce and fallen in love with him. Cora tires of Bruce and casts him off, but he determines to see her again and gains entrance to the house through a window. A burglar who is in the house at the time, shoots Cora, and Bruce, being found beside the body, is accused of the crime. Marja claims that she shot the girl through jealousy. When the burglar, who has also attended the trial, hears this he determines to confess. On his way back to the station he is struck by an automobile and before dying writes a confession. Marja is released and returns home to find Bruce awaiting her. Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby and Brinsley Shaw play the leading parts.

The Love of Mary West—Big U—March 30.—Edna Maison and Ray Gallagher featured. David Warren, a wealthy stock broker, loves but one thing in the world—his little child. When she dies suddenly he is prostrated with grief. One day, about a month after the little girl's death, a little child runs into him as he is walking down the street. Looking down he seems to see his own baby, and pushes the child aside, almost roughly. Mary West, a widow, witnesses the incident and attributes Warren's action to dislike for children. The friendship between her and the broker ripens into love. She keeps from him the fact that she has a little girl and refuses his proposal, thinking that it would mean parting from her baby. A lucky accident, though almost fatal at the time, reveals Warren's true love of children to the widow, and she accepts his proposal without delay.

The Duchess—Gold Seal—(Three Reels)—March 30.—Dennis Delaney, being a stern man, has a great deal of trouble with his tenants, who are led in their opposition by a man named Maloney. Dennis visits his cousin, Nora Delaney, known as the Duchess of Ballyhinch, and falls in love with her. While visiting at Squire Delaney's, Dennis receives a note from his mother inviting him to bring his cousin back with him. The old squire is more than delighted to have his pretty daughter mingle with society, and gladly consents to her going. Nora learns that Katherine Cazalet, who is staying with Dennis' mother, is the young fellow's fiancee, and her love gradually turns to hatred. One night Dennis wanders out into the country. It happens that on the same night Nora seeks the solitude of nature, and walks in the same direction taken by her cousin. She hears a shot and comes upon Dennis and Maloney struggling. Picking up a heavy piece of wood she deals Maloney a blow over the head, knocking him unconscious. Dennis, she finds, is seriously wounded. She gets him home, and nurses him back to health. Katherine marries Sir Brandrum Boileau, leaving Dennis free to marry Nora, whom he now loves more than ever. Cleo Madison and Joe King featured.

In a Jackpot—Nestor—March 30.—Mr. Newlywed cannot resist a trip to the club even the night following his marriage. He promises his wife to return at twelve, but just as he enters the clock cuckoos twice. He cuckoos ten times more himself to fool wife, but in vain. In the morning she preaches a sermon to him, and makes him promise not to go to the club any more. She goes to her mother's and that night hubbie brings the club to him, as he cannot go to it. He spies his wife returning and hustles his friends out. The detectives, watching the Lovejoy apartments from down in front, think that the hurrying men are the gamblers that they are after and arrest them. They plead not guilty and ask the judge to call up the Newlyweds for proof. Mrs. Newlywed answers the phone and clears them, but reads the riot act to her husband later. Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde and Neal Burns featured.

His Last Trick—Laemmle—March 31.—Henry Penrose learns that his chaffeur, James Mordon, is an ex-convict, and is about to discharge him when his wife intervenes and induces him to give the man a fair chance to make good. Alma, Penrose's wife, has had a previous love affair with Herbert Manning, an unscrupulous fellow. She writes him, asking that he destroy all of her letters, and he, in reply, writes back that he is in need of money and makes an appointment with her for that night. Mordon comes upon them quarreling and learns the reason for the dispute. Manning has failed to keep his agreement. Mordon breaks into the latter's apartment and obtains the letters, but is killed in trying to escape. The next morning Mrs. Penrose reads the note left her by the chauffeur, stating that he is going to turn his last "trick" out of gratitude to her. The husband reads the account of the killing, but the reason for it is not given in the newspapers.

Hearts and Flames—L-Ko—March 31. —The girl loved the plumber, and was loved by him, but her father couldn't see the match and rudely kicked the plumber out of the house. Later the girl plugged up the sink with her blonde hair and father was forced to call for a plumber. Of course the daughter's suitor was the one who responded. In his confusion the plumber connected the water pipe with the gas pipe and vice versa. Meanwhile father had guests to dinner. When they want gas they get water and when they want water they get gas. Finally someone makes the mistake of lighting a match near the escaping gas. Fire departments, life nets and thrilling rescues play a prominent part in the rest of the picture, which ends by the plumber's falling into the cellar where there is five feet of ice cold water. Billie Ritchie, Louis Orth and Henry Bergman featured.

The Cameo Ring—Big U—(Two Reels)—April 1.—Mary Phillips, loved by both John Brown and Charles Bowers, chooses the former. Two years later finds them the parents of a little girl, Helen. Mary and Charles have carried on a friendly correspondence ever since the marriage. Clara Melbourne tells John that his wife is untrue and he, finding one of Mary's letters written to Charles, becomes convinced of the fact and leaves her. Years elapse. John is now a rich man in the city, and Helen Brown, a young girl endeavoring to earn a living in the metropolis. She appeals to a loan agecny for an extension of time, and meets the owner of the place —her father. He recognizes her through a cameo ring which he gave Mary years before. Through their daughter, John and Mary become reunited. Murdock MacQuarrie and Agnes Vernon starred.

The Maid of the Mist—Rex—April 1. —Rex, a young novelist, sets out for the mountains in search of local color. By the terms of his father's will he is forbidden becoming married until he is twenty-five years old. Ray meets Pauline and falls in love with her. He receives a letter from the city telling him to return at once, but before leaving is secretly married to Pauline. She receives no mail from him because her former lover is postmaster. He, likewise, does not hear from her. The girl and her father move to a distant mining region. Ray returns to the mountains, but cannot find any trace of Pauline. He publishes his book, "Maid of the Mist," with an original picture of Pauline on the cover. A baby is born to Pauline and her father swears vengeance on Ray. A party of tourists leave a copy of the novel which the old man finds. Going to the city he locates Ray through the publisher and forces him to return with him to the mountains. Ray produces the marriage certificate and is only too glad to claim his little family. Pauline Bush and Ray Gallagher featured.

The City of Terrible Night—Imp—(Two Reels)—April 2.—King Baggot, Ned Reardon and Frank Smith featured. Jack Van Rensselaer, a wealthy bachelor visits the slums in search of excitement. He precipitates himself into it in short order by defending a pretty girl, whose refined and quiet ways have aroused the enmity of the other girls. Jack escorts the young girl home, which is resented by her father. He tries to reason with the old man, who is a foreign nobleman, but Rudolph will not listen to him, and attempts to thrash him with his stick. This Jack seizes and breaks over his knee. The argument is witnessed by a passing policeman, who stops Jack and questions him, but finally lets him go. Half way home, Jack decides to return and convince the old man that he meant no wrong to Olga, his daughter. He arrives at the shop just in time to intercept a man who has stabbed Rudolph as punishment for a part he took in a revolution in his native country. The assassin escapes and Jack is arrested for the crime. He escapes from the officers and returns home but is rearrested, this time his valet also being taken into custody. In the meantime, the real assassin, delirious from the blow Jack gave him while trying to capture him, is arrested as being drunk, and is thrust into the cell with the valet. The latter learns from the man's babbling that he is the murderer. Jack is released and he and Olga are married.

His Only Pants—Nestor—April 2.—The artist is having a hard time of it in the city. Miss Brownlee gives a reception to all the artists, intending to pick out one of them to paint her picture. The artist and his chum attend, but do not mix with the crowd. Miss Brownlee spies them sitting alone, takes a liking to the artist, and chooses him. The next day the artist sends his trousers to the tailor's to be pressed, but when he sends for them the shop is closed. Miss Brownlee and her chum arrive, and the artist dons a tablecloth, explaining that he always wears the queer costume while painting. When the chum comes in the artist divests him of his trousers and later goes out to lunch with the ladies, leaving his chum in a hungry, disconsolate heap in the other room. Miss Brownlee's friend, who has taken a great liking to the artist's chum, returns to the room and, not receiving any answer to her knock, enters. The chum flees to the fire escape, where he is spied by the policeman on the beat. Things are finally straightened out, however, and the artist at last begins to see prosperity for his chum and himself. Lee Moran, Billie Rhodes and Jack Dillon featured.

The Law of Love—Victor—April 2.—Ada Meade objects to her father's marrying a second time, and leaves home. Her uncle, a rich miner, sends Meade $20,000 to be given to Ada. Meade engages Graves to find his daughter, and later sends him a photograph of the girl. In the meantime Ada has secured employment in Graves' office as stenographer. She intercepts the photo mailed by her father, and replaces it with one of another girl. Graves' partner, Hastings, whom Ada dislikes, recognizes the picture substituted by Ada as that of one of his friends, and schemes to have the girl claim the money. Graves receives a demand from his broker for more money, but cannot meet it. Hastings and the imposter enter and claim the $20,000. Graves is about to give it to them when Ada interrupts with the remark that the money is not in the safe, but in the other office. She rushes out and returns with an envelope full of blank paper which she gives to the girl. The broker's clerk again calls for more money, and Ada gives him the $20,000. Meade arrives in answer to Graves' telegram and, to everyone's surprise, embraces Ada. The broker's clerk returns with the good news that Ada's money has brought Graves through safely.

Gentlemen:

Am enclosing check for a renewal of my subscription to "Motography." I am an exhibitor in about the smallest way possible, yet I find Motography to be more real help to me than all the advertising, heralds card, etc., the feature houses send out. I sure do enjoy it, and as there is a sort of club in the building and as I keep Motography on my desk which is in the room, it is in as much demand and read as extensively by members of the organization as any of the current fiction found in the place. I always supposed country exhibitors had a kick coming yet I've never seen any howls published in any picture magazine, why is it? Can't they write?

Truly yours,

The Oak Lawn Handicap—Bison—(Two Reels)—April 3.—John Deering buys Liberty Belle, a mare of fine breeding and speed but looked upon as an outlaw by the jockeys, none of whom can be tempted to ride her. One day "Pudge" Hill, a strange little fellow, drifts into the Deering stable and proves that he can handle the notorious Liberty Belle. He is employed as stable boy, and each day puts Liberty Belle through her daily paces. The mare is entered in the celebrated Oak Lawn Handicap. Ed

Hovey, a scheming bookmaker, hires "Shang" Baker to help him and together they bribe the blacksmith to put crooked shoes on Liberty Belle. Their scheme is discovered by "Pudge" and he is the next to receive their attention. On the day of the race Hovey's men abduct Jockey Wells, who was to ride Liberty Belle, causing a panic in Deering headquarters. Hovey then makes his big mistake in mistreating "Limpy" Joe, once a successful jockey but now a crippled hanger-on at the track. Joe releases Wells, who arrives at the track just in time to mount and ride to victory. The schemers are ruled from the track and Joe is established for life in the good graces of Deering. Marie Walcamp, Sherman Bainbridge and Rex De Roselli have the principal parts.

Love, Fireworks and the Janitor—Joker—April 3.—Young Griggs, private secretary to I. Gottawad, a millionaire, takes a book from his employer's library and strolls leisurely to a nearby park. Mrs. Clymer, who has social aspirations and a pretty daughter, seeks to entrap Griggs, and, returning a card which he has dropped out of the book, she insists on his calling the following evening, believing him to be Gottawad. Griggs is impressed with the girl's looks and accepts. After knocking several times Griggs opens the door of the Clymer home and enters. He discovers that he has forgotten his dress suit waistcoat, and, hearing someone approaching, he dashes into the library adjoining. His retreat cut off, he is an astonished witness to the dress rehearsal gone through by the family for his reception. Mike, the janitor, accidentally lights one of the roman candles which he has obtained "as a proper send-off" and in a moment the room is full of flying balls of fire and other fireworks. Gottawad arrives and demands explanation for a note which he received from Mrs. Clymer, disillusioning her as to Griggs' identity. In the end the young fellow succeeds in winning the girl, and the excitement of his first visit is forgotten.

Love o' the Parent—Powers—April 3.—Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn featured. Joe Saunders, bad man, lives in a crude log cabin with his little daughter, Billy. Out of food and money, he holds up the Overland stage, buries the gold and his mask under the blankets of his bunk, and takes to the wilds. He meets the sheriff's daughter and they fall in love. Shortly afterwards Nan is informed that her father has been shot by the outlaw. She swears vengeance. A wedding is planned between Saunders and Nan, and for the first time the girl enters the outlaw's cabin, and there sees his motherless child. Billy brings out the mask and bags of gold and places them in her lap. Then she realizes that she is about to marry her father's murderer. She accuses Saunders of the crime and he confesses, knocking the rifle from her hands and running to mount his horse. Just as he is about to swing into the saddle the sharp crack of a rifle rings out and the outlaw drops dead. Nan then devotes her life to the raising of Billy.

The Pinch—Laemmle—April 4.—Spider Dale, a crook, rescues Anne, a factory employee, from the foreman and then hastens to get out of sight of Officer Weldon, who is approaching. Weldon, who is in love with Anne, later receives strict orders from headquarters to round up Spider Dale and his gang. They raid the gang's rendezvous, but the crooks escape. Spider, wounded, stops in a doorway and there, to his surprise, meets Anne. Without asking any questions she takes him upstairs and proceeds to bind up his wound. Weldon drops in and notices the blood stains but can get no information from Anne. He leaves, but returns shortly accompanied by another officer. This time they catch Spider. Weldon, when he hears Anne's story of Spider's kindness, is perfectly willing to allow the crook to escape, even though he and Anne had planned on being married on the reward for Spider's arrest, but the arrival of his fellow officers necessitates his turning the crook over to justice. Upon Spider's release, Weldon and Anne, now married, hunt him up and invite him home for supper.

A Lesson from the Far East—Rex—(Two Reels)—April 4.—The Reverend Hobart Ross, home on a vacation from his mission in China, finds that his father has married a second time. His wife, Fanny, a young girl, takes a liking to Hobart, and he, unconsciously, encourages her affections. Holiday season arrives and with it Fanny's sister, Ann, fresh from school. Fanny's efforts to keep Hobart to herself result in Ann's being thrown into the company of Nelson, a former college chum of Hobart's. Nelson and Anne go skating and on the way back stop at a roadhouse for supper. In the meantime, at home Fanny has attempted to place Hobart in a compromising position, but has failed. Hobart receives a suspicious note from Nelson and decides to investigate. It is as he feared. Just as he finishes marrying the sobbing couple, he receives a note from his little friend, Wee Sin, in China, telling him that unless he hurries back she will have to marry someone else. He hurries to answer it in person.

Alliance

The Lone Star Rush—Alliance—(Five Reels)—Climax.—The film is founded upon the novel of Edmund Mitchell. After rescuing Rhodda, a prospector, from the desert, Harry Murray is promised a share in a rich claim, but Potosi Jim jumps the claim and the shock of this act kills Rhodda. Later Harry succeeds in interesting his brother Jack in the claim and the two start to seek it, while Potosi Jim and Blaxland, his partner, bring to the gold field Colonel Baylor, a capitalist named Cuthbert and the latter's daughter, Hilda, who also start for the claim. Potosi Jim and his party secure the Lone Star claim, the name given by Potosi Jim to Rhodda's find, but it proves to be only a small pocket and when goldseekers arrive they are disappointed. Meanwhile Harry and Jack have found a new Eldorado and the miners rush to their claim, where all become rich. Potosi Jim and Blaxland are shown up as villains, the colonel joins Harry and Jack on their claim, and eventually Harry marries Hilda.

Fox

Anna Karenina—Fox—(Five Reels).—A famous story by Count Leo Tolstoi done in motion pictures with Betty Nansen in the leading role, ably assisted by Edward Jose and Richard Thornton. Anna becomes the wife of Baron Alexis Karenina and for a time both are exceedingly happy. Shortly after the birth of her child, however, Anna yields to the love pleas of Prince Vronski, and when her affair is discovered the baron drives her from his home despite her pleas that she be restored once more to his love and her place as mistress of his household and the mother of his child. The baron has been trained in the diplomatic service and is frigid to all her protests of innocence. She spends most of her days longing to be with her child again, and Alexis, too, suffers, but sternly represses his feelings. At last, driven desperate by her sufferings, Anna hurries to a nearby railroad station and throws herself in front of a fast express train. In death her body is admitted to the house, from which in life she was barred and Alexis bends over it, able at last, to open the flood gates of his sorrow, as he kneels by the woman that was.

Mutual Master Pictures

The Devil—New York Motion Picture—(Four Reels).—The famous play of Franz Molnar splendidly done in pictures with Bessie Barriscale and Edward Connelly featured, supported by such players as Arthur Maude, Clara Williams, Rhea Mitchell and J. Barney Sherry. See review on page 524, this issue. N. G. C.

Paramount

The Commanding Officer — Famous Players—(Four Reels).—Alice Dovey is featured in this adaptation of the celebrated military drama by Theodore Burt Sayre. The commanding officer, played by Donald Crisp, is a fighting man not interested in social life. When Captain Waring, the second in command, tries to borrow money and is refused, he appeals to Brent Lindsay of an adjacent mining town, and the latter accepts his note for the loan. Major Bingham and his daughter, Floyd, live at the post and both Waring and Lindsay are courting her. Lindsay utilizes the note to force Waring to withdraw his attentions, but when the girl learns of Lindsay's affair with a dance hall girl called "Queen" she accepts the commandant's proposal of marriage. The commandant is the guardian of two children left by his dead sister and after marrying Floyd he learns that Lindsay is continuing to pay his wife attentions. He quarrels with her and leaves on a hunting trip. While out walking with Lindsay, Floyd is photographed by Captain Waring and the photograph is used by Waring to recover the note from Lindsay. They quarrel and when Lindsay is found dead circumstances point to the commandant as the murderer. He believes his wife guilty. When the infuriated men of the mining town attempt to lynch him, his name is cleared by "Queen," who has witnessed the murder and who tells the true story of the tragedy.

Pretty Mrs. Smith—Bosworth—(Four Reels).—Fritzi Scheff is featured opposite Owen Moore in a thoroughly enjoyable comedy drama. To escape the monotony of home life, Drucilla marries Ferdinand Smith, a missionary and she meets Forrest Smith with whom she falls in love, and after learning that goes with him to Africa. Later she leaves him and return to America to visit her friend, Letitia Proudfoot, when Ferdinand has been lost at sea, she marries him. Still later, Forrest, threatened with suit for non-support, departs, and Drucilla, free once more, falls in love with, and marries Frank Smith, a wealthy clubman. Too late, she discovers he is extremely jealous and finally divorces him. While at a small hotel, Ferdinand, Forrest and Frank all appear and Drucilla is only able to avoid them with the assistance of Letitia. Eventually she decides to resume her life with the husband whom she really loves best of all, the last one.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 18—Pathe.—Views are given of the relief ship sent to Belgium by the state of South Carolina; Governor Walsh of Massachusetts holding a reception to 8,000 people; Cornell athletes preparing for the baseball and track season; the departure of the Brooklyn Federal League baseball team for spring practice; wreck of a Boston and Maine train at Claremont, N. H.; the opening of the Panama-Pacific Exposition and, in the war section, scenes taken at Plymouth and London, England, and at Terbasse, Algeria.

Pathe News No. 19—Pathe.—This issue of the weekly contains views of the juvenile farmers receiving their diplomas from the assistant secretary of agriculture at Washington, D. C.; New York City's newspaper artists inviting the mayor of New York to their banquet; a fashion parade at Chicago; the breaking of ground for the new memorial chapel at Arlington, Va.; scenes along the Dardanelles where the Turkish forts are being destroyed by the fleet of the Allies, also war scenes taken at London, England, Vincennes, France, and along the Aisne in the same country.

The Devil Worshippers—(Thirteenth Episode of the "Exploits of Elaine")—Pathe—(Two Reels).—Elaine Dodge is lured to the home of a spiritualist by Long Sin, the Chinaman, and while there is captured by the members of the Clutching Hand's band and carried away through a secret passage. The Chinaman plans to wed her to a gold image of a Chinese god, but Kennedy, who is present in disguise, interferes at the critical moment and the Chinamen attack him. He is saved by the arrival of Jameson with a squad of police, however, and Long Sin, being captured, agrees to reveal the identity of the Clutching Hand to Kennedy if the latter will spare him from punishment. See review on page 526, this issue. N. G. C.

Too Much Bull—Pathe.—A slapstick comedy dealing with the troubles of a theatrical manager who has a "dead" show on his hands. Elsie Panque, the stunning leading lady, captures the hearts of all of the village cut-ups, but casts them aside lightly. One of the farmers decides to work into her good graces through the leading man and the press agent. He invites these two gentlemen out to his farm to go hunting. They find that they cannot shoot game from a distance, so disguise themselves as a bull and get up close. Their appearance angers a real bull, and he gives chase. They run through the village streets, attracting everyone's attention. The chase ends at the door to the theater. Just as the crowd is about to mob the bull impersonators, the show manager blandly informs them that this is a part of the show. Eager to see the rest of such a wonderful performance, the people file into the theater. C. R. C.

A Famous German Resort—Pathe.—This is a series of splendidly photographed views of Wusbaden in Germany. On the same reel is:

A Visit to Spain—Pathe.—Showing the beautiful "Gulf of Rosas." A short scenic on "The Fjords and Mountains of Norway" completes the reel. C. R. C.

The Quality of Forgiveness—Pathe—(Three Reels).—Jack Tutt, Roy Watson, Margaret Nichols and Joyce Moore take the principal parts in the story of a woman who drank Life's cup of bitterness to the dregs—who went through a hellfire of treachery and deceit,—and came out illumined with an unearthly light. Deceived by a man she adored,—struck blind in the green spring of her youth,—married to a man she mistakenly believes to be her lover, she lives a long life of darkness. Then comes the unmerciful light, and with the restoration of her sight the hideous truth of a life of lies is the first thing she visions. For a moment she yearns for the comparative happiness of her blindness; then with a soul-stirring struggle she throws off the cloak of injustice in which she so long been mantled, and emerges radiant with the quality of forgiveness.

Pathe Daily News No. 20—Pathe.—This issue of the topical shows the departure of Francis de Lackeo from Washington, D. Runaway June — Reliance — (Episode Ten)—(Two Reels)—March 17. — Ned and his detective manage to board the steamer carrying Blye and his party. Seeing June alone Ned approaches her, and is received with open arms. Blye discovers the two together, and has the deck hands overpower Ned, telling them that he is a dangerous lunatic. From then until the end of the voyage Ned is kept a prisoner in one of the staterooms. The detective secures a chisel, and slips it to Ned, enabling him to make his escape just as the steamer enters the harbor. Ned jumps overboard, is picked up by some fishermen, and taken ashore. There he rejoins Burton who has seen Blye and his party board a yacht. He knows the yacht's name and where it is bound but how are he and Ned to get on board? C. R. C.

Runaway June — Reliance — (Episode Eleven)—March 24.—Ned and Blye meet on shore, and the former is arrested for attacking the man with the black vandyke. June escapes from the yacht in a tender, and is taken aboard a motor boat, manned by an old Italian, Giovanni, who tells the girl of the romance of his youth, and how his sweetheart, Marietta, ran away with Tony, becoming a member of a band of pirates that preys upon the neighboring islands. Blye misses June, and gives chase in his yacht. Ned, who has broken out of jail, follows in a motor boat. The Italian steers his boat through a narrow inlet and Blye, unable to follow, shoots him. June starts inland in search of aid for the wounded man, and falls in with the island pirates. In a quarrel over the division of spoils one of the men stabs Toney. Dying, Tony directs June and Marietta to some hidden treasure. Tony's murderer and his companion find them unearthing the gold, and threaten their lives. The women are saved from the pirates by the timely arrival of Ned Warner. Marietta, knife in hand, chases the pirates, and Ned and June are left alone together—but only for a moment for Blye and his men appear and overpower Ned. C. R. C.

Universal Special

The Black Box—Universal—(Episode Four)—April 4.—This installment is named, "An Old Grudge," and begins with Quest's efforts to locate Ian MacDougal. Taking up the trail from where the crook leaped from the train he follows it to a cave near the railroad, where he finds the dead body of the former butler. Red Gallagher, one of the section men, recognizes Quest as the man who had him sent to prison, and determines to get even. He and his pal capture the detective, and lock him in a section house, intending to burn it, but Quest escapes before their return. They follow him to the tower where he again foils them. The detective attempts to stop the passing freight, and, failing, grasps the signal arm, and swings himself onto the top of the last car. In the meantime strange things have happened in the city. Inspector French and Mrs. Reinholdt call at Quest's house to see the jewels, but receive no answer to their knock. They enter, and are horrified to see stretched out on the floor in Quest's study the dead bodies of the Salvation Army girl and the detective's under-study. Lenora notices that Craig is queerly affected by the sight. The inspector does not want to suspect Quest, who has just arrived, breathless, but in the absence of other evidence he falteringly states that "it looks bad."

World

What Happened to Jones—World—(Five Reels)—Brady.—Fred Mace is featured in this picture based upon George H. Broadhurst's play of the same name, which relates how Ebenezer Goodly conducts an academy for young ladies. He and his wife, two daughters and sister-in-law are eagerly awaiting a visit from the professor's brother, the Bishop of Timbuctoo. When Jones, a traveling salesman, follows Cissy Vandergould, an heiress, to the academy, he is mistaken for the bishop by the professor and his family. Meanwhile Dick Heatherly, engaged to Marjorie, the professor's daughter, induces the professor to attend a prize fight in the interests of science. When the place is raided and the professor and Dick are saved by Jones, who has also been present, he demands their protection under threat of exposing them to the police and so he is foisted upon the family as the real bishop. When the real bishop appears, he is mistaken for an escaped lunatic and has much trouble in finally explaining matters, after Jones and Cissy have eloped.

The Arrival of Perpetua—Shubert—(Five Reels).—Vivian Martin is featured in this first picture produced by Monsieur E. Chautard the new French director. Perpetua is a rich little girl with a guardian very much older than herself. Though she longs to remain with her guardian, who is an absent-minded dreamer, she is sent to her father's half-sister, Miss Majerdie, with a predilection for monkeys, parrots, cats and dogs. Though Perpetua runs back to her guardian, Thaddeus, she is shipped back to his sister's. The pretty girl is pursued by innumerable suitors, whose ardor cools when she is declared to be penniless, but the moody guardian who has loved the girl all the time, steps in to claim her, when she believes herself poor, for it was only her previous wealth that had prevented his declaring his love for her. Miss Martin is said to be at her best in this picture.

The Press Agent Says—

That Vivian Rich, the American-Mutual star, recently had a stenographer come to her apartment. It was a Sunday afternoon, the time this popular actress sets apart for answering correspondence. "Previously," Miss Rich explained to her friends, "I had made it a practice to answer in my own handwriting every letter which seemed sincere and nice, but that Sunday I was three weeks behind and so I thought I'd dictate my replies and catch up that way."

MOTOGRAPHY

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED THE NICKELODEON

Vol. XIII CHICAGO, APRIL 10, 1915 No. 15

Four Big Companies Open Own Offices

AND OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS

THE many rumors which have been afloat for some time that several of the licensed manufacturers were to unite in a new feature combination have materialized.

Announcement made in the East shows that the Vitagraph, Selig, Essanay and Lubin Companies will, in the future, release all their special feature productions direct to the exhibitor through offices of their own, and a story on a different page in this issue of MOTOGRAPHY contains a definite announcement as to the policy of the Lubin Company, which has opened offices in the Mecca building at 1600 Broadway, New York City, and will handle all the Lubin masterpiece films from there and other branches which the Lubin Company will establish, renting films direct to the exhibitor.

The Broadway Star Features, releasing the big multiple reel productions of the Vitagraph studios, has taken headquarters in the same building, and it is expected will soon announce the opening of other offices throughout the country for the handling of those Vitagraph films considered too long to be put out through the General Film Company.

It is also understood that Essanay and Selig are to open offices, either by themselves or in conjunction with the other manufacturers, for the purpose of releasing direct to the exhibitor all the big films made under those brands. Estimates as to the capitalization of the new combination run anywhere from $5,000,000 to $50,000,000, though the exact figure is a matter that has not been made public.

Emphasis must be laid on the fact that the new plan of operation will not in any way interrupt the regular releases of Vitagraph, Lubin, Essanay and Lubin on the General program, since these four manufacturers will as before put out their regular one and two reel pictures in the usual fashion, and the big features only are to be handled independent of the General Film Company.

Manufacturers Favor a Federal Censor

At a meeting held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on the afternoon of March 24, which was attended by representatives of practically every big film manufacturing company in the country, it was decided that, while there was no need for any censorship of motion pictures, it was advisable, in deference to public opinion, to institute a movement for the appointment of a federal board of censorship.

Marc Klaw presided during the meeting and the committee which reported upon conditions in regard to censorship consisted of J. J. Kennedy, H. E. Aitken, P. A. Powers, Adolph Zukor and J. E. Brulatour. After the committee had declared that they believed the movement to establish a federal censor board was advisable, a vote was taken, which resulted in the unanimous approval of the committee's decision.

Those present at the meeting were: J. J. Kennedy, General Film Company; H. E. Aitken, Mutual Film Company; Joseph Brant, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players Film Company; Mark Brock, Paramount Film Company; J. E. Brulatour, Peerless Film Company and Raw Stock Supply Company; William Fox, Fox Film Corporation; C. Livingston, Thanhouser Film Company; W. W. Irvine, Vitagraph Company; J. A. McKinney, Universal Film Company; Richard A. Roland, Metro Film Company; E. D. McGovern, New York Motion Picture Corporation; Robert T. Kane, Prohibition Film Company; William Steiner, Photo Drama Company; William Schimpf, General Film Producing Company; A. Polacoff, Quality Feature Film Company; P. A. Parsons, Pathe Exchange; P. G. Melies, Melies Manufacturing Company; William J. Lee, Picture Playhouse Film Company; Harry R. Raver, Itala Film Company; Samuel Goldfish, Lasky Feature Film Company; F. E. Kahn, Mutual Film Company; J. R. Freuler, American Film Manufacturing Company; J. P. Dunning, Reliance Film Company; A. J. Cobe, Alliance Film Company; Aubrey Mittenthal, Mittenthal Film Company; D. W. Griffith, Majestic Film Company; Charles S. Jamison, Equitable Film Producing Company; A. Blinkhorn, Blinkhorn Photo Play Corporation; E. M. Saunders, Metro Film Company; D. MacDonald and H. G. Kosch, Alliance Film Company; E. D. Horkheimer, Balboa Amusement Company; H. J. Streyckmans, Progressive Motion Picture Company; F. C. Liebow, Liebow & Apple Feature Film Company; E. J. Doolittle, Blinkhorn Photo Play Company; M. E. Marsh, E. & W. Laboratory, and Philip Lewis, Lewis Pennant Features.

Back with the Universal

A telegram received at the New York offices of the Universal from President Laemmle indicates that that busy individual has taken a few moments off from the festivities and functions marking the formal opening of Universal City as a municipality, to transact a little outside business.

Mr. Laemmle expected to see the Smalleys when he reached California, and they had made plans to see him. It did not take them long, therefore, to come to an understanding after a conference between Messrs. Laemmle, Cochrane and Powers. Mr. Laemmle announced that the Smalleys will resume their place on the Universal program, except that they will be used for making feature pictures rather than one-reelers.

The acquisition of Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, as Mrs. Smalley is known in filmdom, brings back once more to the Universal a combination of personality, directing, playing and scenario writing genius which have seldom been seen in the industry. Mr. Smalley, besides being an extremely handsome and brilliant leading man, is a thoroughly tested and competent director. Miss Weber is one of the best scenario writers and actresses in the world today. For three years she never failed to write at least one scenario a week, which was accomplished while playing the leads in films, and sometimes even directing them herself.

Signs Up Big Stars

Harry Woodruff, Dustin Farnum, H. B. Warner and Lewis J. Cody, stellar lights of the theatrical world, recently affixed their signatures to a New York Motion Picture Corporation contract to appear in Thomas H. Ince features.

Mr. Woodruff, who is well known to the theater-going public of America for his interpretation of different Shakespearean roles, and also for his wonderful success in "Brown of Harvard," received many offers from film manufacturers but rejected them all, until he finally succumbed to the inducements of Thomas H. Ince and Ad Kessel. This will also be Mr. Cody's first appearance in pictures. Cody was persuaded to join the ranks of photoplayers a few days ago following his appearance in Los Angeles in "The Whirl of the World." Of Dustin Farnum and H. B. Warner there is little to be said, as their work in the silent drama is well known.

Mr. Ince says that now he has the greatest collection of stars ever gotten together by one company, for in addition to the aforementioned players, there are now at the studios playing George Beban, William S. Hart, Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman and Walter Edwards, and with these players working in large productions it looks very much like the New York Motion Picture Corporation intends doing big things, for it is only recently that the corporation took over the large Willat studios and laboratories at Fort Lee; the building of large studios at Hollywood, Calif., is now in operation, and the Keystone and Santa Monica studios are being rebuilt.

Pennsylvania Fighting Censorship

The war against censorship in Philadelphia seems likely to be fought out to a finish on Tuesday, March 30, when a public hearing will be held in the House of Representatives at Harrisburg, Pa., with George Quintard Horowitz, an attorney representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and Samuel F. Wheeler, counsel for the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia, on one side, and Attorney General F. Shunk Brown on the other side.

As everyone knows, J. Louis Breitinger, state censor, has been the object of severe attacks by both exhibitors and exchange men for many weeks past, all efforts to have him moderate his rulings or even "be reasonable" having failed.

Exhibitors have joined with the exchange men in their fight against Mr. Breitinger and such prominent men as J. W. Sahner of Pittsburgh, J. W. Bennethum of Philadelphia, Ben H. Zerr of Reading, George Levinson and H. B. Miller of Pittsburgh, and H. J. Schwalb of Philadelphia have been among the most prominent in a campaign against Breitinger. Leaflets containing extracts from the Pennsylvania daily papers anent the arrest of Exhibitor Segal by Mr. Breitinger have been scattered broadcast throughout the state and a postal card campaign is now being waged on every senator and representative by the picture theater owners in their districts. Slides depicting the famous Liberty Bell and the statement that censorship is in direct opposition to the spirit of 1776 are being shown in theaters all over Pennsylvania in an endeavor to arouse the public to the seriousness of the situation.

The exchange men, in their battle with Mr. Breitinger, have called for itemized bills for the services he claims to have rendered, so far having failed to receive a reply. Specifically the charges that the exchange men will file against the censor in the public hearing are as follows: That Mr. Breitinger prepared a bill for censoring motion pictures and voted for it while he was a member of the legislature; that while a member of the legislature he acted as counsel for the Exhibitors' League and received pay for influencing legislation; that he illegally forced exchange men to maintain a censor's office at their expense, despite the fact that the Pennsylvania law specifically states that the state shall pay for all censoring out of the fees of $2.50 collected for the viewing of each film; that he bought expensive furniture for his Philadelphia office and installed his own brother-in-law as chief clerk, and forced the film men to pay for the illegal maintenance of the office; that he issued hundreds of exhibitors' cards to personal friends, members of the legislature, bartenders and elevator men in the city hall, and that as many as thirty-six of these passes were presented at one theater in one day; and that certain film exchanges in Philadelphia advanced money to the censor's office for current expenses when the state failed to provide the needed money.

One of the opening shots in the campaign of the exhibitors and exchange men against Mr. Breitinger was the following telegram sent to Governor Brumbaugh:

> The arrogant, narrow-minded, suspicious and unlawful methods of J. L. Breitinger, as chief censor of motion pictures, have caused a public scandal to which your attention has doubtless been attracted by the accounts in the daily papers during the last week. We feel it our duty to lay before you the facts in our possession and with that purpose in view, respectfully request an appointment with you at your earliest convenience. Pending a thorough investigation we are asking you to suspend Mr. Breitinger from office, in order to prevent him from carrying out the several retaliatory measures he has threatened against the exchanges and exhibitors, which will be enforced because they have turned on him the searchlight of publicity. Mr. Breitinger is absolutely drunk with power and if he is not restrained by your excellency our business will be ruined.

The governor, after receipt of this telegram, referred the matter of the complaint against Chief Censor Breitinger to Attorney General Brown. "My idea is the censor and the heads of the moving picture theaters should get together and talk things over. I have asked Mr. Brown to find out what each side has to say and will learn from him later about the matter." Both the governor and the attorney general have expressed their approval of censorship, and both the exhibitors and the exchange men feel that not only the governor, but also the attorney general will be against them in the public hearing. However, they feel their cause so just that they look forward to a decision in their favor when their side of the story has been heard.

Leads in American Serial

Miss Lottie Pickford, sister to "Little Mary," will play the lead in "The Diamond from the Sky," the $20,000 prize novel now being picturized at the "Flying A" studios for the North American Film Corporation.

Miss Pickford, the exact type wanted by the author, was selected after more than twenty-five of the best known women of the screen had been considered for the part. Working opposite Miss Pickford in a dashing young heroic role will be Irving Cummings, the "James K. Hackett" of the screen.

The cast of the North American serial, "The Diamond from the Sky." Lottie Pickford in the center, with William Russell and Irving Cummings. Top row: Lillian Buckingham, Orra Humphrey, Eugenie Forde, Charlotte Burton, George Periolat and W. J. Tedmarsh. Director Jacques Jaccard in the foreground, flanked by his assistants.

To the part Mr. Cummings will bring an abundance of heroic masculinity and a wealth of real dramatic ability. He has a part that a matinee idol on the speaking stage ought to play for nothing—one of those swashbuckling lover's roles so needful to the best of melodramatic situations. This, coupled with Miss Pickford's sympathetic appeal, makes a wonderful combination for the two leads, who will be given the strongest supporting cast thus far offered in a serial production.

Imagine Charlotte Burton and William Russell, for instance. They are recognized leads. Miss Burton is admittedly one of the best "heavies" on the screen, and to those who know and admire her work, the strength she will lend to the dramatic action will be readily apparent.

Mr. Russell's giant physique is well known to motion picture fans. He is one of the biggest men physically on the screen and this bulk added to an unusual ability to interpret even the most subtle situations has made him a dominant factor in the many feature productions in which he has appeared for Famous Players, Lubin, Thanhouser and other companies.

To Miss Eugenie Forde has fallen a most remarkable characterization. She was engaged especially for this role, that of Hagar, a gypsy woman, whose son—but we mustn't tell the story. Suffice it to say that Miss Forde with George Periolat, acknowledged to be one of the best character actors on or off the screen, will lend a touch of character work of tremendous import to the story and presented in a way that makes the interest doubly compelling.

Mr. Periolat is an old Mutual favorite, although when engaged for the cast of "The Diamond from the Sky," was leading man to J. Warren Kerrigan. Lillian Buckingham in a role offering a peculiar setting to her talents, Orra Humphreys in a serio-comic part, and W. J. Tedmarsh in an eccentric role, complete the cast of principals which will carry "The Diamond from the Sky" to the country's motion picture fans.

Jacques Jaccard is the producing director. While this $20,000 prize photoplay will have many thrilling situations it will not be a mere collection of stunts. It will present a story of genuine heart interest with the thrills so interwoven that they will give a logical emphasis to this stirring narrative of today. The first chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky" will be released May 3.

Lubin to Release Direct

The announcement recently made by Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company of Philadelphia, that his company would release its big special feature productions direct to exhibitors has created much interest in the motion picture world. A New York office will be opened in the Mecca building at Forty-eighth street and Broadway within the next few weeks and at about the same time distributing offices will be opened in other large cities.

The Lubin Company has a number of important productions, in which distinguished stars are featured, ready for release as soon as distributing plans are arranged in detail. Among these masterpieces are "Eagle's Nest," by Edwin Arden, in which Arden and Romaine Fielding are featured; "The Sporting Duchess," Cecil Raleigh's comedy drama, with Rose Coghlan and Ethel Clayton and supported by George Soule Spencer; "The Valley of Lost Hope," a spectacular drama by Shannon Fife in which Romaine Fielding is featured; "The District Attorney," Charles Klein and Harrison Grey Fiske's well-known drama, with George Soule Spencer and Dorothy Bernard; "The College Widow," George Ade's sparkling comedy, featuring Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer; "The Evangelist," Sir Henry Arthur Jones's powerful drama in which Gladys Hanson is starred, supported by George Soule Spencer, and "The Climbers," by Clyde Fitch, in which Gladys Hanson will be featured and supported by an all-star cast of Lubin players.

Among the other big features now in the making or shortly to be produced are "The Light Eternal," by M. V. Merle; "Mrs. Dane's Defense," by Henry Arthur Jones; "The Great Divide," by William Vaughn Moody; "The Woman in the Case," "The Truth," "Captain Jinks" by Clyde Fitch, and a number of other famous plays.

In every production a distinguished star will be featured, according to Mr. Lowry, and neither time nor expense will be spared in making the release a masterpiece in every sense of the word.

New Brand for United

It is announced that the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation has secured a franchise to release a weekly one-reel comedy on the United Film Service Program. The contract is said to extend for a period of two and one-half years and stipulates that the first release must be made the latter part of April. The Colonial Motion Picture Corporation has chosen the trade name of "Cameo" as its releasing brand.

Attention is also called to the fact that this activity marks the beginning of a new era for the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, which will in no way interfere with its manufacturing of feature film subjects, such as its release of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Seats of the Mighty."

Muriel Ostrich Joins Vitagraph

The newest addition to the forces of the Vitgraph Company is Miss Muriel Ostrich, who began work last Monday. Miss Ostrich will be seen in a number of roles that are distinctly different from any work she has done previously. Her first appearance for the Vitagraph Company will be in a three-reel feature. Miss Ostrich recently was stricken blind while at work on a film and for a time it was feared that she would never recover her sight, but she is now prepared for active work.

Berst Hints at Future Activity

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, has just completed his first official inspection of the three Selig studios on the Pacific coast. As a result, Mr. Berst states that more features are to be made than in the past and new stars are to be engaged.

"Not only will we put out even more pretentious features than in the past," he said, "but Selig strength in all releases will be made greater. We are after more quality and will attain it. The remarkable facilities at hand at our Coast studios are astonishing. I had no conception of the beauty and completeness of the Mission studio at Edendale or the locations, equipment and splendid acreage of the Selig Jungle-Zoo, which adjoins beautiful Eastlake Park.

"The western studio at Glendale is also very complete. With such studios, and a country round about which seems created for motion picture purposes, we certainly will be able to advance our products in every way."

No details of the plans of Mr. Selig and Mr. Berst for the immediate future have been announced, but indications are that the three Selig studios of the Pacific colony are going to become unusually busy places in the near future.

Rolfe Secures Faversham

After having been announced as signed by almost all the big motion picture producers, William Faversham, at present starring in his most recent success, "The Hawk," announces this week that through the office of Alice Kauser he has agreed with the B. A. Rolfe-Metro Picture Corporation to appear exclusively in screen productions for that producing and distributing concern. William Faversham, perhaps one of the spoken drama's most dignified and attractive stars, has long held a foremost position among the highest class stage artists. His wide popularity, great vogue during the past fifteen years and his exceptional dramatic ability have created for him a name such as few attain. For the Rolfe-Metro organization, Mr. Faversham is writing the scenario of his first subject, from the manuscript of a play that was written for him some time ago, but which he deferred producing owing to a contract calling for the immediate production of "The Hawk."

William Faversham.

The Rolfe-Metro Corporation interests are said to have agreed to pay Mr. Faversham $15,000.

From Vaudeville to Pictures

An offer to join one of the foremost film companies has been made to Minnie Allen, the vaudeville impersonator, and the end of her present tour will in all probability find her a stock member of the company in question. Miss Allen is the daughter of Dan W. Allen, New York representative of the Morgan Lithograph Company, and the description, "The Little Volcano of Mirth," follows her name on whatever program it appears. She was born in Canada, educated abroad, and began her theatrical work in America. Her first application for a position was in answer to an ad for a ragtime pianist. After securing the place she wrote home: "Daddy, you used to think I could play 'rag.' But I never played such raggy 'rag' in my life as I do now!" Next she added dancing to her piano-playing accomplishment and impersonations, together with her playing and dancing, made her act a head-liner. The accompanying impersonation shows her in an impersonation of Sarah Bernhardt, in which she sings "Tipperary" in French. It was this bit of work which really brought her the invitation to act as comedy character type lead in films, in which role the screen will probably claim her in a few weeks.

Robinson Wins Suit

William J. Robinson, promoter, of 14 East Sixtieth street, New York City, who sued Louis C. Van Riper of the Vanoscope Company for $2,000,000 in three actions arising out of Mr. Robinson's connection with the company, was given a verdict for damages in the amount of $100,000 on Saturday, March 21, by a jury in Judge William Hunt's part of the United States District Court, says the New York Herald.

The jury had before it the facts in the action in which Mr. Robinson alleges his reputation was injured by Mr. Van Riper ousting him from the presidency of the company. Mr. Robinson alleges that statements made to the stockholders by Mr. Van Riper reflected on him and were false and it was in this matter that the jury returned the verdict of $100,000.

In another phase of the action in which Mr. Robinson alleged that Mr. Van Riper violated the terms of a commission contract by disposing of the European patents for $1,500,000 without rendering an account, the jury found for the defendant.

Still another phase touching on Mr. Robinson's allegation of breach of contract and in which he asks for $1,000,000 will be called for trial next month.

The Chicago office of the World Film Corporation set a new record for itself recently when it signed up nineteen contracts in four days.

New Plant to be Erected

Expansion of the motion picture industry in Southern California goes on apace. Thomas H. Ince announces that the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which already has one of the best plants in the country at Santa Monica, has closed a transaction by which it will take over sixteen acres in Los Angeles bounded by Sunset boulevard, Santa Monica boulevard, Fountain avenue and Hoover street.

On this ground the company will expend about $150,000, and the new plant will be ready within a few weeks. This will be in the nature of an extension, as Inceville, the present location of the Kay Bee, Broncho and Domino films, still will be maintained.

Two companies, possibly three, will continue to utilize the Santa Monica territory for the production of western pictures. The new studio will serve as the plant for the making of all modern pictures, for the four-reelers now being made for release twice a month and for the twelve and fifteen-reel Ince features which are contemplated by this producer.

Plans respecting the new property call for the erection of eight outdoor stages, an indoor glass-covered studio, 100 dressing rooms, a wardrobe building, property building, scene docks, garage and the divers other smaller structures essential to a complete plant.

Consummation of this is the outgrowth of the annual tour of inspection now being made by Adam Kessel, Jr., and Charles O. Baumann, heads of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, who has been in Los Angeles for more than two months, visiting their Inceville and Edendale plants.

John Hardin Joins Kleine

John Hardin, formerly manager of Pathe's Chicago office, has joined the Kleine forces and will assume charge of George Kleine's Dallas office. He succeeds Harry Scott, resigned. John Hardin is one of the best known film men in the United States, and has been actively identified with the business for many years. He was one of the first men in Chicago to enter the film business, having handled the department for Montgomery Ward & Co. in the early days when that institution formed an important factor in the distribution of machines and pictures. He spent ten years with the Edison company in the capacity of Chicago manager, and later as assistant to Mr. Plympton in the studio.

To Produce "Fine Feathers"

"Fine Feathers," by Eugene Walter, the photoplay version of which is to be produced by the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation, enjoyed a huge success as a play. It ran for three months in New York City with the S. R. O. sign displayed continuously, after which it met with equal success in Chicago, running for over six months at the Cort theater, and meeting with like success throughout the cities of America. In the photoplay version of "Fine Feathers," there are several thrills which are sure to delight. The main thrill of the picture consists of the flooding and subsequent breaking of a dam, the flooding of a town,

The following artists have been decided upon to complete the cast of "Fine Feathers": Jane Reynolds, the wife, Janet Beecher; Robert Reynolds, the husband, David Powell; John Brand, the business man, Lyster Chambers; Mrs. Collins, the neighbor, Alberta Gallatin; Dick Meade, the friend, Henry Gsell.

Pernicious Bill Introduced

Senator Herbert Slater of Santa Rosa and Assemblyman Harry Encell of Oakland, California, have simultaneously introduced bills in the California legislature to "stop the torturing of the lion's den and the brutalities of the tiger's cage."

These legislators have been encouraged in their action by a San Francisco newspaper, which, under flaming headlines, announces "Ban Proposed on Tamed Beast Shows. Fatalities and Manglings That So Many Times Attend Such Practices Inspire Two Bills. Are Likely to Go Through."

One of the articles in a series being printed by this newspaper says in part:

"Every few days the headlines tell how some lion or tiger or panther turns against the cowing revolver, or red-hot bar and rends his torturer in the presence of fainting women, shrieking children and stampeding men. . . . So extra hazardous is the occupation of the animal torturer, so frequent are the blood-lettings, the rendings and the killings, that the accident and liability insurance men will not take a risk on the life or limb of the man or woman who enters the care of the fretful, half-cowed beasts."

The art of cinematography is the target for all unjust legislation that can be conjured up in this day and age. This latest legislative action, if it is not buried in legislative committee, will deal a terrific blow to the motion picture industry. It would seem that while times are hard in this country, while capital is in a state of fear, that attempts of some unknown legislator, inspired by a sensational newspaper to cripple a great industrial enterprise, should be checked.

The printed stuff about "half-cowed beasts," "torturings," etc., are pure bumcomb. Any motion picture actor will tell you that every precaution is taken to guard against danger, and there is less risk taken in animal picture plays than in many other motion pictures daily released to the public.

The wild animal pictureplays are deemed elevating, and only the other day a prominent educator wrote the Selig Polyscope Company congratulating that concern because of its Jungle-Zoo single-reel releases, which were termed educational for the school children.

Millions of dollars have been invested by motion picture manufacturers in the golden state. The Selig Polyscope Company alone has invested a million dollars in a beautiful zoological garden, which is not only utilized to film wild animal pictures but is open for the pleasure and profit of the public. It is an ill return to these motion picture concerns that they must now be compelled to combat unjust legislation that would forever bar the performances of wild animals in motion pictures produced or shown in the state of California.

If this bill becomes a law, the state of California will suffer along with the motion picture companies. It will mean the closing down of large industrial enterprises; it will mean the loss of employment to thousands; it will mean that the free advertising the golden state has obtained through motion pictures will be lost and that other localities will profit thereby.

It would seem that the business men of Los Angeles and elsewhere would immediately put their shoulders to the wheel of progress and bring pressure to bear to kill this pernicious bill, which, backed by a sensational newspaper and fathered by rural legislators, threatens to become written in the statutes of California and cost that state millions of dollars.

To Buy Films Direct

The Michigan Theaters Corporation, with capital stock of $5,000, has been organized at Detroit, Mich., with the object of buying moving picture films direct from the manufacturers instead of through the distributors and film exchanges. The new concern is said to number among its members 100 owners and managers of picture theaters in the state of Michigan. Its officers are: A. W. Blankmeyer of the Grand Circus theater, president and general manager; A. Arthur Caile, vice-president Majestic Theater Company, secretary, and Henry J. Guthardt of the Museum theater. These and William F. Klatt, who owns a chain of theaters in Detroit, are members of the board of directors.

When being interviewed by a Detroit newspaper, Mr. Blankmeyer said: "Michigan is the first state to have an organization of this kind, but inside of two months we hope to see similar combines or circuits operating in Illinois, Ohio and Indiana, for exhibitors will have to go out of business unless they can get their feature films for less money, and the only way they can save money is to cut out the film exchanges and deal directly with the companies who make the films."

New Film Plant

Plans are under way for the construction at North East, Pennsylvania, this summer, of a motion picture manufacturing plant to be built by the Niagara Film Company, the offices of which are located in the Marine Bank building.

General Manager W. B. Brigham of the company announced last week that the probable cost of the new building will be in the neighborhood of $100,000, and that the plant will be erected on the site of the North East race track, which includes nearly five acres of land. It is expected to include a studio, power plant, assembly hall and a laboratory, and work will begin on or about June 1. The company also plans operating a film exchange and a chain of theaters. The officers of the company are: John McClelland, Albion, president; J. L. Meldon, Erie, secretary; W. B. Brigham, treasurer and general manager, and D. C. Walter, assistant manager.

Essanay Players in Southland

A company of fifteen Essanay players has gone South to make several special feature photoplays requiring a southern atmosphere. The first scenes are being taken at Chattanooga, Tenn., and after completing work there the players will go farther into Dixie for other scenes.

The first company will return in about a month, when another will go South. This will be kept up for several months, until the features are finished. Among those in the first company are E. H. Calvert, Bryant Washburn, Lillian Drew, Mabel Forrest, John Cossar, Grant Foreman, Eugene Acker, Bertram Bates, Betty Scott, May Skinner, Jack Meridith and Charles E. Ashley.

Breese Engaged

Edmund Breese, until recently starring in the big dramatic success, "Today," left New York last Friday evening for Saranac Lake, New York, in company with the members of the organization composing the Popular Plays and Players, where work was immediately begun on the production by that concern of a motion picture feature, based on Robert W. Service's great poetic classic, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Runaway Juners Home

"Runaway June" has run away home and all the young subalterns of the British garrison in Bermuda as well as the "winter boys" at the hotels are in mourning. During the five weeks of their stay on these beautiful islands they were the life of the place. They organized all sorts of athletic contests and unique entertainments and not the least interesting things they did were contained in the five episodes of the big George Randolph Chester photoplay serial which were produced there.

When the steamer Bermudian pulled out of her pier it was aglow with the red dress coats of the officers, and as the merry Juners waved their farewells a great cheer went up from the military men and the guests of the hotels. The actors are thoroughly tanned from their constant exposure to the tropical sun. The last notable social event was the entertainment of the "Runaway Juners" by Capt. Grant-Suttie of "The Queen's Own," in his sumptuous residence. It was a brilliant affair—a dinner of forty-seven covers, supplemented by a dance.

The final or fifteenth episode in two reels will be produced immediately upon arrival in New York. It will contain the solution of the many baffling mysteries in this interesting comedy-drama of the screen. There you will learn why June, the runaway bride, was so relentlessly pursued by Gilbert Blye, "the man with the black VanDyke," why she and the other members of Blye's party did so many amazing things, and why poor Ned Warner, the deserted husband, was kept in the dark as to the motives of all concerned. It will be a surprise, indeed.

Joins Bosworth-Morosco Forces

Charles Whittaker, who came to the coast with the Lasky Company, has joined the Bosworth-Morosco forces in Los Angeles to act as assistant to Oscar Apfel. Mr. Whittaker's experience in the motion picture business has been long and varied and makes him a particularly valuable asset to Mr. Apfel.

Alfredo Gondolfi, one of the best known and most capable cameramen in the film industry, has also been secured to "turn the crank" for Mr. Apfel. Mr. Gondolfi has been in the motion picture game practically from its inception, having started with Pathe Freres in Paris and working at various times with the Gaumont and Italia companies in Europe before coming to the United States to assume the position of head cameraman for the Pathe Freres' American company.

"The Eternal City"

On Thursday evening, April 1, the Studebaker theater in Chicago was the scene of a private invitation showing of "The Eternal City," the famous photoplay adapted from Hall Caine's story of the same title, which was produced in Italy and England under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, with Pauline Frederick featured. This is the first release of the Select Film Booking Agency, recently organized to distribute "The Eternal City" and a series of selected film attractions to theaters equipped to present de luxe motion picture offerings for long runs.

Baltimore's Ball Next Week

Baltimore, Maryland, is planning on the greatest Photoplayers' ball ever held, the date set for the affair being Saturday, April 10. J. Howard Bennett, chairman of the dance committee of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, under whose auspices the ball will be given, visited New York recently to make arrangements for the co-operation of eastern film people in the affair, and feels sure that in addition to Siegmund Lubin he will have present Arthur Johnson, Lottie Briscoe, Crane Wilbur, Mary Charleson and Florence Hackett, while the Universal Company will be represented by Rosemary Theby, Harry Myers, Mary Fuller, Ben Wilson and King Baggot; the World Film Corporation by James and Clara Kimball Young; the Vitagraph Company by Hughie Mack, Flora Finch, Dorothy Kelly, Edith Storey, Norma Talmadge, Lillian Walker and Wallie Van, and it is expected Edison will send Mabel Trunnelle, Herbert Prior, Marc McDermott, Gertrude McCoy and Miriam Nesbitt, while it is hoped that still other companies will be represented by prominent players.

Show Folks in Chicago Politics

The "show folks," including those in the motion picture industry, have organized a political club to take part in the mayoralty election in Chicago, and are backing William Hale Thompson, the Republican candidate for the office.

A meeting has been called on April 2 at the Cort theater, in the heart of the theatrical district, at which the majority of those interested in the various branches of amusements are invited to attend.

The object of the organization is to secure fair treatment against adverse legislation, and in Mr. Thompson the backers of the "Show Folks' Thompson-for-Mayor Club," as it is known, believe they have found a worthy champion.

New Name for Selig News Bulletin

The name of the newsy little press bulletin issued weekly by the Selig Polyscope Company has been changed from Selig Weekly Press News to Paste-Pot and Shears. At the time of its first appearance it was described in these columns and since that time it has increased in value from the news-editor's point of view with every issue. It treats subjects of interest in a manner which cannot help but hold the reader's attention.

Mysterious Feature Coming

Hobart Henley, Imp star, has been allotted the star part in an Imp feature that has just been started and the nature of which is not disclosed by the studio. Nor is the nature of Mr. Henley's part. It is the lengthiest Imp to ever be made, being one reel longer than Imp's famous "Traffic in Souls," and is expected to create a similar nationwide sensation, the tip states.

New Detective Series

Wharton, Inc., announces the purchase of the picture rights to the great Lloyd Demarest detective stories written by Fred Jackson. These stories the Whartons will probably begin to film sometime this summer.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

ALTERNATING CURRENT.

WHEN it is necessary to use "alternating" current for the projection of pictures, it is also necessary to use certain special precautions if satisfactory results are to be obtained.

In the first place, the current itself is not steady, which might be expected from its name, but it is far from being the kind of unsteadiness you would expect, and there are several other kinds of peculiarities which are well worth looking into, which we shall attempt to do without getting lost in a maze of technical terms.

We have seen how the electrical current flows along a wire or other conductor, just as if it were some extremely refined fluid with the strange quality of being able to travel through solid substances easier than through empty space. In fact it acts as if space were solid, and solid things were holes and streaks in space, some of them being clear openings, offering little obstruction to the current (such as copper, silver, etc.), and others (such as rubber, wood, water, etc.) being more or less filled with obstacles (perhaps little specks of empty space), thus causing more or less "resistance" to the current.

The best resister or "non-conductor" is a perfect vacuum which means a portion of space from which everything material has been exhausted, even the air and other gases, so that when we try to send a current through such a piece of space it simply cannot penetrate it any more than water would flow through a piece of flawless glass.

In Figure 22 is shown a photograph of a "spark" of a so-called "static machine," which generates electricity at extremely high pressure or voltage but low amperage (several million volts, perhaps, and only a small fraction of an ampere). This spark marks the passage of the current or "discharge" from the "terminal" marked + to the one marked —. You can see what a hard time it had getting across, and if it had not been for the dust in the air it never would have made the jump unless the pressure had been much increased or the terminals brought closer together. The particles of dust served as stepping stones, or rather acted just like relatively big holes in a space that was already dotted with myriads of little "holes," which is what the "molecules" of air act like to the electric current. Now all these "vacancies" in an otherwise perfectly good chunk of space provide a fair chance for the high pressure current to break through, so as soon as the pressure exceeds the resistance, the air is literally ruptured by the passage of the spark, which also burns up the dust which it encounters, splits up the molecules of oxygen (which with nitrogen and small quantities of other gases makes up the air or "atmosphere") into their constituent "atoms" and recombines these atoms into special molecules of "ozone."

EFFECT OF ELECTRIC SPARK.

At the same time it manufactures dozens of other chemicals by combining the gases of the air with what is left of the dust particles (for dust is made up of a little of everything), and incidentally, if any disease germs happen to get in the way they stop working right there, for it would be useless to try to get out of the way, as it takes only a few millionths of a second to make the entire trip, and the heat is great enough to vaporize any known substance. The healthful effect of a thunder storm is mainly due to the production of ozone by the discharges of lightning acting on the oxygen of the atmosphere. This ozone kills germs by setting free atoms of "nascent" or fresh oxygen which "oxidizes" them or slowly burns them up. Thus many more germs die this way than are struck by lightning.

The kinds of electricity with which we are chiefly concerned just now are those currents which have voltages low enough to be of use for making an "arc" and for this purpose they must also be at least 45 or 50 volts. In practice we either buy the current, or make it with a boughten dynamo, so we have to take it the way it comes and make the best of it.

We have already learned that the best current for an arc is a direct current of voltage 45 to 50, and amperage 20 or more. Commercial currents are usually 110 or 220 volts, and if it is already direct it is put through a rheostat to reduce the voltage so that over half of the current is wasted. There are many places, however, where direct current is not to be had, and this has led to some very interesting developments.

Let us consider first why the direct current is most satisfactory. In Figure 23 the upper carbon is shown with a slight hollow in its lower end, while the lower carbon is more pointed. This hollow is where the "crater" is formed and where the carbon is literally boiled away. It always forms at the positive "pole" and, on account of its intense brilliancy and small size, is ideally adapted to throw the necessary concentrated beam of light.

POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE ARCS.

Now when the current is "alternating" (which simply means that it flows first in one direction and then in the other or opposite direction) both carbons will be alternately positive and negative, and hence no definite crater will form, and instead there will be a relatively large "arc" or arch, spanning the space between the carbons. This arc is present also with direct current, but is not so noticeable.

The boiling carbon is scattered throughout the arc, instead of staying in one spot, and hence there is produced a diffuse instead of a concentrated beam of light. When examined closely (usually by permitting it to project itself on the wall through a pin-hole) it looks like a bluish-violet ball held between two white-hot carbons. Therefore, with alternating current we have to try to concentrate light coming from two separate white points and a blue ball many times bigger than a direct current crater.

And this is not the only difficulty, for when we come to project pictures with an alternating current arc, we find a new kind of a flicker, which is due to the fact that the shutter of the projecting machine cuts off the light so many times each second that the flashes so produced bear a near relation to the "alternations" of the current. Thus when using so-called "60-cycle" current (which means that the direction of the current changes 60 times per second) if we equip the projector with a "three-wing" shutter, Figure 27, and run at the rate of 20 pictures per second, there would be 3x20, or 60 flashes each second, which would be one flash for every change of current. This might do if both remained constant, and the flashes came when the current was at its greatest intensity, but of course this would not be the case, and the very slightest variation would bring the light flashes of the shutter and the dark intervals of the current together, with the result that the picture would fade away, only to come back again to full brilliancy as soon as the current and the shutter caught up to each other again. This might be in a tenth of a second, or two seconds, or rarely, a couple of minutes, the result being a most exasperating and irregular flicker past all control.

TWO-BLADE SHUTTERS.

Some currents are 25-cycle, and here a projection speed of 17 pictures per second with a three-blade shutter would make 51 flashes, or about two to each alternation of the current, causing another kind of confusion but fully as bad. To make the best of this condition, two-blade shutters are used. They make around 40 flashes per second, at the usual speed of projection, and as 40 is neither a factor nor a multiple of either 25 or 60 there is less of that particular fault.

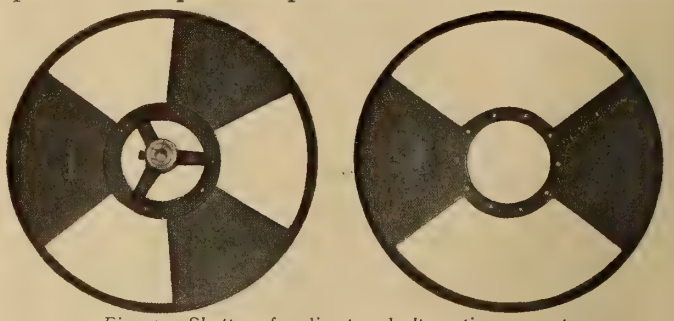

Fig. 27. Shutters for direct and alternating current.

This does not remedy the other difficulty of the large faint arc produced by the alternating current, which can only be done by converting such a current into a direct current, several methods of doing which will be described later on. However, the alternating current is in use in many theaters, and the demand for apparatus adapted to it has led to the development of some interesting devices.

TRANSFORMERS.

Any kind of current, whether direct or alternating, can have its voltage reduced by passing through a rheostat, a special form of which is shown in Figure 25, in which the customary wires have been replaced by thin sheets of metal, the effect on the current being precisely the same. There is another property of the alternating current which enables us to do things that cannot be done with direct current. Every time a current changes direction or strength, there are set up in the surrounding "ether" what are known as "magnetic waves," and these waves have the peculiar property of "inducing" other currents in wires or the like that happen to be anywhere in the neighborhood, so that by alternating a current passing through one wire and simply bringing another "idle" or "dead" wire in proximity to it there will be found to be a current in the erstwhile dead wire, but this new current dies the instant that you stop alternating or changing the other current.

If the original alternating current is high voltage and passing through a fine wire, and the "secondary" wire is comparatively large in diameter, the new current will be lower in voltage. Now this happens to be just what we are looking for when we buy alternating current at a pressure of 220 volts and want to use it at 50 volts, so inventors have been busily developing what are known as "transformers" to take the high-pressure, unusable currents and transform them into lower pressure currents. The principles have long been known, but the problem has been to design a practical and convenient transformer exactly suited to the needs of the exhibitor.

One of many types is illustrated in Figure 26, its construction and use being very simple. One pair of wires shown at the top carries the original alternating current at 110 or 220 volts pressure, and between these two ends of wire there are thousands of feet of comparatively fine wire, wound in coils. Inside of this "primary coil" is another or "secondary coil" which has its terminals in the other pair of wire connectors. This secondary coil is of coarser wire, and within it the magnetism, generated by the alternating current in the primary, causes a brand new current of a voltage of about 55 (for it is well to have enough to allow for fluctuations in the supply) the difference between this and the needed 45-50 volts being taken up by a small resistance.

CARBON "LAMPS."

In Figure 24 the positive or upper carbon is shown slightly out of alignment with the lower or negative carbon. This is to bring the crater to the front as in Figure 23. With alternating current it is customary to place them in line, as there is no definite crater and one carbon acts just like the other, except as "heat rises" the upper one will be some hotter and hence burn away a little faster.

With direct current the upper or positive carbon burns away about twice as fast as the lower, hence it is usual to have it extra long, as in Figure 24, or some larger in diameter. A "cored" carbon is one which has a center part or core of softer material, so as to coax the crater to form in the middle where it is wanted, as it has a bad habit of wandering all over the point of the carbon, especially if the latter be not uniform in quality.

There does not seem to be much similarity between the long ragged "spark" in Figure 22 and the small round crater of the projection arc, but the difference is of degree and not of kind, and it comes about in this wise.

High pressure can easily overcome great resistances, even though the total current is small in quantity. It is just as a very fine needle will penetrate where a blunter and larger instrument would not. So with the electric current. A weak current of high voltage will go long distances over fine wires almost undiminished, but a much greater current of lower voltage will waste its substance heating up the wire, and only a small fraction will arrive at the other end. Similarly the "static" discharge illustrated in Figure 22 went through 10 inches of dry air (one of the best "insulators" known) while the 47 volt current of the arc cannot "jump" more than a tenth of an inch, although once it has jumped it continues to span half an inch or more on account of the better conduction of the vapor of carbon, etc.

Pathe Cameraman Wounded

It's a long, long way from New York to the place with the unforgettable, unpronouncable name, Przemysl, but it seems less when one sees certain fine pictures of the siege in the Pathe News and learns that the Pathe special correspondent, Ercole, who took them, has been wounded and decorated for bravery under trying conditions.

When it was learned that Przemysl was destined to become famous in spite of its name, the Pathe News sent its special war correspondent in Russia, Mr. Ercole, straight to the Galician front to the Russian army besieging the city. He was sent there to get pictures, and he did so. While he was turning his camera he was hit by a piece of shrapnel and painfully wounded, but he did not cease to turn, and in consequence has been decorated by the Imperial Government of Russia with the Cross of the Order of St. George.

His films were rushed by way of the Pathe agencies in Moscow, Stockholm and London to the United States, so on the very day the newsboys were using their 57 different ways of pronouncing Przemysl to tell the public that the Austrian fortress had fallen, in the Pathe News projecting rooms at Jersey City the editorial staff of the "News" was looking at some very fine pictures of the siege. Now all over the United States people are seeing in the "News" one of the big scoops of the year.

Many Bret Harte Characters

In "The Lily of Poverty Flat," the April feature film release of the California Motion Picture Corporatoin, there will pass in a procession on the screen most of the picturesque pioneer characters made world-famous in the novels of Bret Harte.

There is "Truthful James," woolly headed and frowsy of beard, a dynamo for energy and a staunch friend. There is Colonel Starbottle, the "gallant warhorse of the Calvaeras democracy," glorious in gray plug hat, blue frock coat, ruffled shirt, brocaded vest and white drill trousers, swinging a sword cane and chewing tobacco between cocktails. There is his nephew and law partner, the rascally young gambler, immaculate in attire and black in heart.

Jack Hamlin, scrupulously elegant in black raiment, self-possessed under all circumstances, honorable, albeit his chosen profession is cards, ranks as the real hero of this new photoplay, although the man who wins "The Lily" is the dashing, debonair young miner, Joe.

In the panorama of Poverty Flat's eventful history flit other characters: John Folinsbee, proprietor of the mining camp store; Sanchez, the half-breed Mexican who turns outlaw; Lotski, the shrewd, scheming Hebrew, and his daughter, Sadie; the sheriff and his deputy, with a motley assortment of miners pressed into service as vigilantes when occasion demands it; Dolores, the fiery Spanish girl; an octogenarian Indian and his lithe and beautiful granddaughter; the stage driver and express messenger, both victims of Indians when the stage is held up.

"The Lily," the title role, is the belle of the village. Beatriz Michelena plays the part, illuminating it with archness and vivacity which have made her previous screen appearances in "Salomy Jane" and "Mignon" eventful in the motion picture world.

Who Wants This Job?

The state of Ohio is finding it rather difficult to secure a man to fill the place of Harry E. Vestal, who recently vacated his position as one of the state censors. The position was offered last week to Bert B. Buckley, an attorney of Dayton, but though the position carries with it a salary of $1,500 and the member appointed will have all his expenses paid when traveling, Mr. Buckley refused to accept the job. It will now be offered to some one else. Suggestion for Mr. Buckley's appointment came from the office of Governor Willis to the state industrial commission.

What Is a Nov-Ad?

In the motion picture trade papers of late, a new coined word has appeared which has set exhibitors thinking. The question is, "What is a Nov-Ad?"

The solution of this mystery can be received by writing for a 1915 Nov-Ad catalogue which is published by the Novelty Slide Company of 67 West Twenty-third street, New York.

Why Is Comedy Funny?

IT is our custom, when speaking of those subjects alleged to be comic in character, to differentiate between various brands or orders of comedy. Thus we demand a humorous drama, declaring we will have no slapstick buffoonery; or, conversely, we want the "rough stuff" exclusively under the impression that the picture show attendance does not appreciate the more subtle forms of wit.

Yet the psychological authorities are claiming now that there is no true distinction between wit, humor and slap-stick clownery. They are all founded upon the same fundamental quality of human nature.

Charlie Chaplin comes out on the screen, rolls his eyes and wobbles a little on his round heeled shoes. Instantly the audience screams with laughter. Why? Ford Sterling or Billy Ritchie walks in front of an automobile and is promptly telescoped, to the intense merriment of the fans. What is there in this burlesque of a pathetic accident to occasion risibility? If we try to analyze the emotion, without ourselves being overcome by the temptation to giggle, how can we sensibly explain the great principle of humor? Dr. Leonard Keene Hirshberg of Johns Hopkins University offers the following:

It is according to the latest researches that abrupt discovery by one person, or rather the sudden feeling of vanity, of a sense of momentary supremacy, symmetry, and superiority in themselves over the individual or situation that is amusing, that causes the comedy. By habits, customs, superstitions and prejudices most people have a standard of comparison to which all activities, behavior and conduct must conform.

Any deviation from this normal form, if made slowly, gradually, and by things and persons that are honored and respected will pass muster without a smile. Even if a bit of behavior is done by one who is expected to do that particular thing, it will be watched and studied with attention. Thus, if a dancing master stands forth in an isolated position and performs a few strange gyrations, others round about will applaud and try to imitate him. If, however, a Methodist minister were to do exactly the same thing, not necessarily in his pulpit, but even in a dance hall, ribald laughter would be his just deserts.

A humorist always tries to destroy the logical sequence of words, events and human behavior. The more the puritan loves symmetry, the more your merry Andrew hates it. The former bolsters up all perfection, the latter renders it ridiculous by a sudden termination of the correct proportions. The greater the contrast and unexpectedness in this artificial asymmetry, the funnier the result.

Superiority is a sensation that accompanies your recognition of an abruptly appearing inconsistency in form, word, action or event. When Mrs. Malaprop says that the sight of the poor cat floundering about in hot grease was "heart-rendering," your vanity is tickled to think that you know that the correct word is heartrending. This together with the asymmetry and inconsistency as well as contrast in the sentence, all stir your risibilities.

There is no true distinction, as some philosophic quibblers would have you believe, between wit, humor, slap-stick buffoonery, and Aristophanesian fun. All of them are based upon these same fundamental things—whereas one has to do with words, another has to do with thoughts; while a third has to do with behavior, the fourth has to do with events:

Vanity, Superiority,
Debasement,
Incongruity,
Asymmetry,

Sudden, emphatic contrast. It is all a mere matter of elementary addition. Even those instances of pathos that are upon the border-line of laugher and sorrow are linked closely together. For do not both of them stir you to tears? The warp of melancholy is intermingled with the woof of hilarity, and both weave a textile that covers the heart.

If you would know, then, why a particular occurence, phrase, situation, or bit of behavior stirs your midriff, pause calmly for a moment and honestly study your feelings. Your vanity will be given a shock if Alexander Pope was right, when he said: "Gentle dullness ever loves a joke." This, however, is only part of the truth, for gentle wisdom and gentle education also love jokes.

To jest is human; to be serious, a crime!

Chaplin, then, is a hero; Sterling and Ritchie and all the others are public benefactors. And the reason why people laugh at them may or may not be clearer to you after reading Dr. Hirshberg's opinion. Or perhaps it is not really necessary to know why an action is funny, so that we know it is; and the consciousness of its humor is automatic and instinctive and needs no bidding. For we doubt, after all, if years of study of the principles laid down would make a spontaneous comedian out of sober material; and comedy must certainly be spontaneous and unstudied in effect, at least, to be comedy at all. And on the other hand, we know that many a humorous artist has made the world laugh without ever hearing or caring about the psychology of his profession.

It may be that the hard pressed and ultra-serious director of comedy productions will derive some illumination from the simple analysis given above; but we still believe the true comedian, the man whose presence and actions really get the laughs, must be born that way.

Now the Golden States Threatens

ASININE legislation has long been a concomitant of motion picture history; but the climax has been capped now by the introduction in the California legislature of the most ridiculous bills that ever uncovered the ignorance of a lawmaker. Their aim is "to stop the torturing of the lion's den and the brutalities of the tiger's cage." In less poetic language, these bills are intended to kill all wild animal and jungle pictures produced in the state—and practically all such pictures are taken in California. The misguided gentlemen who fathered the bills are being aided and abetted in their efforts by a yellow newspaper published in San Francisco.

There is no need to tell motion picture men that the "danger," the "torture" and the "brutalities" are absolute fabrications—pure bunk. These animal pictures are among the most delightful and instructive of all productions. By stopping them the State of California will be (next to the public) the greatest loser. Through the picture manufacturers that state has gained by millions of dollars and thousands of employed citizens, not to mention the most tremendous dissemination of free advertising any state ever had. And now California is threatened with the cancellation of all these benefits through the sickly sentimentality and gross misinformation of a couple of rural "representatives of the people."

It takes more than one or two legislators to pass a bill, and it is hardly conceivable that any more of them will see the same hobgoblins that possess these two. But it never pays to take chances with an unknown quantity, and every effort should be made to acquaint the business men of California with the foolishness of this action. The right kind of publicity always kills the kind of proposed legislation that is both silly and harmful.

Censor Praises Edison Picture

The Edison Company is the proud possessor of an unsolicited letter from Mrs. Jeanie Noble Whaley, a member of the National Board of Censorship, in which she praises its production, "The Stoning," in which Miss Viola Dana was featured. The picture was made with the object of pointing out a moral as strongly as possible and that it should be appreciated by those who pass judgment on the merits of the films, as regards their fitness for public exhibition, is pleasing to its creators. Following is part of Mrs. Whaley's letter:

Nearly a week has passed before I have had one moment to tell you how much and how deeply I felt and enjoyed the perfect picture from the Edison studio, "The Stoning." It surely will carry a lesson to hundreds of people—harsh fathers, thoughtless mothers; young, foolish, untaught girls—and more than that—show evil men and unjust people what havoc can be made by their acts. No human being could see that film without being deeply and lastingly impressed.

The simplicity in telling the tragedy made its tremendous strength. The cast is in perfect harmony; each lived his part. I don't remember ever having seen a story visualized which touched me so deeply. My heart ached for the dear little girl and swelled with indignation against the cruelty of her neighbors. Please congratulate Mr. Plimpton. It is the story he told me long ago he wished to put before the public; it is done and it is perfect. Murder can be committed without hand or weapon, as is plainly shown. No guilty conscience will escape if there be one in an audience.

Walter Arthur, the head of the Vitagraph camera department, has resumed his work at the studio after a long siege of illness.

Just A Moment Please

What's all this we read about their renovating the Favorite Players' studio after Carlyle Blackwell got through playing "The High Hand"? We thought that a bully production, but it only goes to show that one man's opinion isn't worth a lot.

If one-half of all that we have read about the hard feelings of both parties to that Pennsylvania censorship controversy are true, that battle in the legislative halls at Harrisburg, Pa., on Tuesday evening, March 30, will be a pippin. Personally, we'd rather have a ringside wire to that battle than the one in Havana the week following.

Episode Two:—"The Misadventures of Kathie."

(Part One.)

"I scarcely know how to begin," said Kathie, the first of the Seven Suffering Sisters to be summoned to relate her trials and tribulations before M. A. Gnate, "Di" Rector, Ed Itor, Sue Brett and other important personages of the Jumbo Film Corporation, at the suggestion of Sue. "Why, just begin at the beginning and tell us what happened to you," encouraged Sue. "Oh, it was horrible," Kathie began, "and none of us suspected when my father, Major Dare, started for India and the kingdom of Ahaha one-half of the things which were going to occur. Not hearing from my father within a full half hour after his departure, I began to suspect that something awful had happened to him and accordingly set out for Ahaha myself, armed only with a cheese sandwich, a clean handkerchief and a box of face powder. After landing I proceeded inland to the capital, where I was at once summoned before Prince Umbrella, whom I was told had imprisoned my father. When I spoke to him about the matter he promptly seized me and threw me into a den of lions, but by dashing my face powder into their eyes I blinded them and, climbing the wall, escaped. Just outside the wall, however, I met with two panthers, a tiger and a ferocious man-eating dinosaur. All of them started straight toward me."

Reliance's "The Outcast"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

WONDERFUL acting by Mae Marsh and Robert Harron, the two featured players, make the Reliance four-reel picture, "The Outcast," soon to be released as a Mutual master-picture, one of the best of this series of films.

Miss Marsh has a role that gives her splendid opportunities for the emotional work for which she has proven herself time and again so capable, while Mr. Harron also rises to splendid heights in the big scenes of the production. The two stars are supported by such popular players as Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Spottiswoode Aitken and Jack Dillon. Miss Alden interprets one of the character roles for which she has become famous. Mr. Lewis plays the part of the judge, and Mr. Dillon is convincing in every particular as the prosecuting attorney.

The film, as everyone knows, is founded on a story of the same title by Thomas Nelson Page, and the screen version is one that will give an hour's enjoyment to anyone.

From the earliest times when films were made court room scenes have appeared on the screen, but never in the writer's memory has there been a more convincing set, and one in which the action itself follows real incidents of a big murder trial more closely than does the court room scene shown in reels one and two of this master-picture.

Mae, the girl of the slums, whose antecedents are unknown, falls in love with Bob, a waiter in the cheap cafe in which she dances, though Graves, a Bowery sport, endeavors to win her affections.

and consequently has to walk the straight and narrow path, though he is often tempted to fall into evil ways. However, when Graves becomes unduly offensive and follows Mae to her room, Bob, who discovers them, goes to the defense of the girl and is present when Mae, to save his life, shoots Graves.

Mae is captured by the police after a running fight, but Bob escapes. The trial of the outcast for murder takes up two full reels of the picture, but there is not a single dull moment in this two thousand feet of film, and as the trial closes Mae is found guilty and returned to jail to await her sentence. Bob returns during the trial, hoping to save Mae from conviction, but is himself arrested and held to await trial.

Mae's lawyer, while waiting the sentence of his client, investigates her past, and by means of a photograph he finds in her room, locates her grandfather, who tells him the story of Mae's mother, a simple country girl who had fallen in love with and later been deserted by a young lawyer from the city visiting in the locality.

The attorney, on the day that Mae is to be sentenced, is able to prove that the young lawyer who deserted Mae's mother is none other than the judge who heard Mae's case.

When this fact is made known the judge adjourns court and retires to his chambers, where the shock later proves too much for him, and he succumbs to heart failure.

The next day another judge, after learning all the facts of the case, suspends sentence on Mae and permits Bob to go free. The two then realize their lifelong ambition, and retire to the quiet country home of Mae's grandfather where they begin life anew.

"The Poetic Justice of Omar Khan"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

A CONVINCING story of the Orient, called "The Poetic Justice of Omar Khan" is the Selig release of Monday, April 12.

The picture features Guy Oliver and Stella Razetto and was produced by Edward J. Le Saint. Its desert scenes are particularly convincing and quite a bit out of the ordinary, so that one's interest is held until the very last.

Whoever is responsible for the sub-titles in the picture is also to be congratulated for the splendid choice of his wording, the story being helped out considerably by the sub-titles, and certain delicate portions of it gotten over in this manner.

Philip Hyde, American attache to an oriental land, receives a visit from his friend, Omar Khan. During the conversation, Philip makes known that he is very much worried over the apparent disloyalty of Neva, his wife, and the many attentions being paid her by one David Harcourt.

Neva's dependent cousin, Joan, whose life has not been a happy one, is also a member of the household and much attached to Philip, though the latter scarcely suspects her devotion. After several clandestine meetings with Harcourt, Neva decides to elope with the man she really loves, and while Philip is in Khartum on business she departs, leaving a note which Joan finds, in which she begs her husband not to seek to follow or find her.

Joan is broken-hearted and appeals to Omar Khan for assistance.

Weeks before Amir Pasha, a desert chieftain, dreams of a white woman for his harem, the loveliest white woman that money can buy, and at last dispatches by a messenger a note to Omar Khan, offering him an immense sum if he can procure for him his heart's desire.

Omar Khan receives the message upon returning home after his visit with Joan, and is at once struck with an idea for meting out poetic justice to the heartless woman who has deserted her husband.

Within an hour a little party of stern-faced men set out on the trail taken by Neva and David Harcourt. Soon the two are overtaken and carried away by the followers of the desert chieftain. At a lonely spot on the desert, Omar Khan halts the little cavalcade while he points to a train slowly passing in the distance. Neva is told that that train bears her husband back to his ruined home, and then she realizes for the first time that her punishment has begun.

Edison's "Out of the Ruins"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

THE possibilities for stirring scenes and dramatic climaxes in Rupert Hughes' story, "Miss 318 and Mr. 37," are unusually well adapted for screen portrayal, as is shown by Edison's "Out of the Ruins," a three-reel screen version of it, directed by Ashley Miller and booked for release on April 23. The situations are unique and refreshing, the action quick and ever-interesting, and a number of the scenes spectacular and teeming with realism.

The story holds right up to the climax in the middle of the third reel where the shop girl, her sweetheart, and her wealthy girl friend, entrapped in the burning department store, are seen standing at the only avenue of escape, a window overlooking a building nearby. A thrilling rescue follows, and then the story, by means of some clever little bits of work, is brought to a happy conclusion. The suspense sustained throughout the picture is sufficient to make the "everything happy and as it should be" ending wholly acceptable.

Much of the success of the production is due to the pleasing true-to-life impersonations of its cast, chief of whom are Mabel Trunnelle as Lizzie Mooney, the little shop girl known as Miss 318 to her gallant fireman sweetheart, whom she knows as Mr. 37, a role in which Patrick O'Malley is seen. Gladys Hullette is well cast as the millionaire's daughter, Priscilla Varden. Mr. Delmore plays the part of Hal Vandevelt, attorney for Hirschberg and Poswalsky, the department store owners, and Marie La Manna that of Lizzie Mooney's younger sister, Rosa. The remainder of the cast contributes earnest and convincing work in support.

The opening scene shows Lizzie and Rosa Mooney clearing up their counter in the Mammoth department store, preparatory to leaving for home. The store, an immense place, has previously been visited by the city fire inspectors, and has been declared unsafe, but Hirschberg and Poswalsky, the owners, have ignored the warnings to reinforce the walls and increase the number of fire escapes, preferring to take a chance on not having a fire and jeopardizing the lives of their employes and patrons rather than incur the expense of the ordered improvements.

Through odd circumstances Lizzie meets John Phillips, the fireman stationed in the local theater in her neighborhood. She tells him she is No. 318 in the Mammoth department store, and the next day receives a visit from him. The floorwalker approaches and warns her that she is not allowed to receive callers during working hours. Phillips causes him to apologize by saying that he is a purchaser, and then, to carry out the part, he buys a dress and presents it to Lizzie. Their friendship soon develops into love, and one day the fireman drops in with an engagement ring which Miss 318 blushingly accepts.

Millionaire Varden's wife and daughter, Priscilla, stop at Lizzie's counter while she is adoring her ring, and mutual friendship springs up between the two girls. A fire breaks out in the store, and all escape except Lizzie, her sister, Rosa, and Priscilla, who are up on the balcony. Crazed with fear, Rosa leaps to death in the flames below. Phillips, passing near the store, sees the flames, and makes his way to Lizzie's counter. He assists the two girls to a window overlooking a building nearby, and catches the rope thrown him by Vandevelt, who has discovered their plight from the roof of the other building.

Lizzie refuses to go until Priscilla has first been rescued. Phillips, with Priscilla on his back, makes his way, hand over hand, across the space between the two buildings. They get over safely, but exhausted and suffering from a number of minor injuries, which were forgotten in the excitement of the moment. The wall collapses and Lizzie is found pinned beneath the ruins. She is revived at the hospital, where she is reunited to her gallant Mr. 37, also a patient. Priscilla is found at last by her agonized parents, and also by Vandevelt, who deems the hospital as good a place as any for proposing marriage.

American's "His Brother's Debt"

ANOTHER one of those delightful human interest stories, for which the American Film Manufacturing Company is justly noted, will be released in two reels on April 5 by this firm, under the title of "His Brother's Debt."

Eight players are entitled to credit for the realistic characters which appear on the screen in this production and which really appear to live. Among these eight Winnifred Greenwood's work is especially praiseworthy. In the role of a simple little girl of the middle classes, living a quiet life at home, she is more than convincing, and later in the story as a woman, married to a man who does not love her but whom she has learned to love, she is strongly appealing. She proves her versatility again in changing completely from one type to another and making each so distinct that it is hard to realize it is the same actress who appears in both.

Ed Coxen and Edward McKiernan, as two brothers of the working class, draw their characters almost as well as Miss Greenwood does her's, while the other players, Al Fordyce, Lucille Bauer, John Steppling, William Bertram and Josephine Ditt are equally worthy of the parts for which they are cast.

Next to the acting, the story itself is of interest. While nothing thrilling happens, the plot is so cleverly ararnged and "put over" that the crises teem with dramatic appeal and the interest rises steadily until the climax is reached. Henry Otto, the director, has done something which any producer may point to with pride and which we believe will meet with the approval of the great majority of "fans" the country over.

The settings selected by Mr. Otto are in accord with the splendid characters drawn by the players and the photography adds all that is needed to make the film thoroughly delightful. Productions of this variety are always welcome.

The story follows: Arnold Downs and his brother Frank are employes of the Block Construction Company and are the main support of their father. Clara Myers, a neighbor, is the girl in the case and is in love with Frank. While Frank is courting Clara, Arnold puts in his time learning and is soon promoted to an official position in the plant. In this position he often meets his employer's daughter Sadie, and another love affair is the outcome.

An explosion at the works kills Frank, and Clara, realizing what their love has been, confesses to her mother. Clara's father overhears and goes to the boy's house to interview their father. Their father has been prostrated at his son's sudden death, and the doctor has warned Arnold that any excitement will kill him. Clara's father discloses Frank's relations with Clara to Arnold, and to save her name demands that Arnold marry her. This he does in order to spare his father another shock.

Five years later finds Arnold a competitor to his old employer, Block. Even with passing years Block has never forgiven Arnold for not marrying his daughter instead of Clara, for Sadie has gone into a state of melancholy. Block, by bribing Arnold's bookkeeper, is supplied with a copy of all Arnold's estimates, which drives Arnold to the verge of bankruptcy.

It remains for Clara and her child to pay their debt to the father and husband in name only, and through a peculiar prank of fate the bookkeeper is caught at his dishonest acts. The little child, adept at putting puzzle pictures together, finds a torn letter in the office waste basket and by matching it her mother discovers the cause of Arnold being underbid by Block. That night Clara and her father, disguised as robbers, enter Arnold's office and make a prisoner of the scheming bookkeeper. The following morning they present the evidence to the nearly bankrupt contractor, who realizes that Clara has learned to love him dearly. He is saved from ruin, and happiness appears to be in store for him.

"Runaway June"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

TRAGEDY is the dominant factor in the twelfth episode of "Runaway June" entitled "The Spirit of the Marsh." Introducing it are two distinct thrills.

Cunningham takes June sightseeing.

The first is the model's wild leap from a high cliff to certain death in the water below, and the second comes with Durban's losing his footing in his struggle with June. He steps into the bog beside the narrow path through the marsh, and is gradually sucked into its depths.

The photography throughout is above that of the average picture both in clearness and in restful effect, albeit that it rained in Bermuda nearly all of the time that the players were there. There were intervals of five or ten minutes between showers, and during these the company took the exterior scenes. The photography is especially distinct in the scene showing June and Durban at The Devil's Hole, a well-like recess in the rocks literally filled with fish.

The end of the preceding chapter left Blye covering Ned with a pistol. He orders his prisoner taken out to the yacht, and then accompanies June to the hotel where Edwards and Cunningham are entertaining friends. One of them is Durban, an artist, who makes no secret of the fact that he married Betty for her money. It is commonly known, also, that Mimi, a model, is the object of his affections, and that he is supporting her in a bungalow almost within sight of his house.

Durban is introduced to June by Cunningham, and the two are mutually attracted to each other, though for different reasons. June's fascination for Durban is her beauty, while she is taken with his magnetic personality and interesting conversation. They go out for a bicycle ride to see the beauties of Bermuda. On returning, instead of accompanying June back to the hotel, Durban begs to be excused, and takes a short cut home to start work on a recent order, a painting of "The Spirit of the Marsh."

Blye summons Ned before him, and informs him that he means no harm to June, and that, moreover, if he (Ned) will agree not to make an attempt to rejoin June at the end of five days' time Blye will deliver her to him, safe and sound. Realizing that it is useless to combat this man's power, Ned agrees.

Durban conducts Amy, his model, to the marsh where she is to pose, in filmy attire, for his painting. Losing control of himself, he attacks her. She breaks away from him, and flees towards the shore, the artist in close pursuit. Reaching the edge of a steep cliff overlooking the water, Amy warns Durban not to come nearer or she will jump. She fulfills her threat, and is found at the water's edge by her brother. He is about to kill Durban when Amy, recovering, lifts her arm just in time to prevent him.

The next morning June steals out at sunrise to disport herself on the shore, clad much as Amy was the day before. Durban sees her, and decides that she is just the person to pose for his painting. After considerable pleading, she consents, and accompanies the artist to the marsh. He again forgets himself, and this time finds an equal match in June, who fights desperately. During their struggle Durban is pushed off of the narrow path, and slowly but steadily is sucked into the slimy depths of the mire. Mimi, also a witness to the tragedy, is almost hysterical with grief.

Craig Kennedy, the scientific detective, with Jameson, his assistant, are able to prove by means of a broken letter "T" on a typewriter used by the Clutching Hand in writing some of his messages, that the master criminal is none other than Perry Bennett, Elaine's lawyer.

Bennett hides in the Chinaman's home.

The exploits of Elaine, however, have apparently only just begun, for though the Clutching Hand is temporarily, at least, out of the way, a crafty Chinaman, leader of a band of celestial bandits, seems likely to cause her as much or more trouble in the future as did the Clutching Hand in the past. The new series of exploits will begin the week following the release of this film and continue the story.

After Wong Long Sin, the Chinese adventurer, has delivered a bomb to Kennedy's apartments by direction of the Clutching Hand, Kennedy by means of an electric x-ray machine discovers the complicated workings of the bomb and after opening it finds within a sheet of typewritten paper that gives him a new method of finding the Clutching Hand.

By means of the battered letter "T" on the typewritten sheet found in the bomb and other documents which come from the office of Perry Bennett, Elaine's lawyer, Kennedy is able to convince himself that the various messages were all written on the one machine, and later finds that machine in Bennett's office.

Bennett, realizing his game is over, exposes himself to Elaine by giving way to his anger and before her very eyes changes from Bennett, the man she loves, to the Clutching Hand, a veritable madman. After a battle with Jameson, Bennett escapes and flees to the home of Wong Sin, his Chinese accomplice, where the Chinaman administers to him an oriental drug that he declares will suspend animation and permit him to exist in a veritable living death for months.

Ere passing into the unconscious state, the Chinaman secures from Bennett the plans showing where his fortune is hidden, and announces that if he finds the fortune at the spot indicated on the plans he may later administer an antidote for the drug he has swallowed, thereby restoring him to life. Craig Kennedy and Elaine, however, ignorant that this drug has been administered to Bennett, think the Clutching Hand dead, and after beholding his apparently lifeless body, depart for Elaine's home, where a love scene occurs that leads one to believe Kennedy may yet win the fair heiress.

"Runaway June" will take the most popular woman in each state in the Union to the Panama-Pacific Exposition and the San Diego Exposition and on a trip de luxe through picturesque California with all expenses paid.

Many who have followed motion pictures closely will recall the splendid "Richard Neal" series put out by the Essanay Company the early part of last year. In the present film, the scientific detective, which Mr. Bushman created at that time, returns and solves a mystery of no small proportions.

Throughout the three thousand feet the interest is never allowed to lag and, while the story is arranged so that the audience may know many things that the detective does not, its denouement is never made obvious. We believe that pictures like this one will satisfy practically any audience on their own merits alone, without resorting to the other methods often used to put the "selling punch" into them.

Early in the story of the film Gideon Hall, a reckless young man in love with Doris Blake, is saved from suicide by "Count" Nikola, a clever criminal with an original method. Nikola lends him enough money to cover a heavy gambling debt and in return asks that Hall introduce him into society. Hall agrees and in the course of time Nikola is introduced into the Blake home. Doris feels a strange attraction for the man and feels that she must go to him. It is the influence of Nikola's mesmeric mind over her will.

Nikola hypnotizes Doris and tells her that at 3:13 a. m. on a certain day she will get out of bed, go to her father's art gallery and steal the famous painting by Musee and will drop it out of the window. Doris obeys and at the appointed time the family is aroused by a scream, and they find Doris unconscious on the floor murmuring "3:13." A doctor is called. He realizes that she is under the control of another mind and secures Richard Neal, psychological expert.

Nikola sets her at another task, that of bringing a large sum of money to his house at a certain time. Blake learns the secret from Hall, who is also under Nikola's influence, and sets a trap for him. The trap works, the two minds clash and Neal's stronger will wins. The girl is awakened, Nikola is exposed, and Doris restored to her family.

WITH the showing of episode twenty, Thanhouser's serial, "The $20,000,000 Mystery," comes to a close. The many little plot threads which have been left unfinished in the preceding episodes are picked up in the two thousand feet which comprise the final installment, and when the last scene fades from the screen and Zudora is safely snuggled in the arms of her lover, John Storm, with the plotters out of the way forever, everything that has happened has been explained.

As the picture begins Zudora's locket catches on Storm's coat as they embrace and falls to the floor. As the jewel in the old-fashioned setting is broken by the fall, Storm and the heiress take it to a jeweler's to have it fixed. Zudora removes her mother's picture from the locket before they leave and finds a piece of paper beneath it which tells her that her father's will had been left in charge of a trusted friend, Captain Radcliffe, long before.

With this important fact in their possession Storm and Zudora hurry to Detective Hunt's office, where they find Villiers and the officer of the law going over Zudora's identification papers. Baird is notified and announces his determination of learning where the plotters have hidden the will, as that is all that is now necessary to prove Zudora's claim to the fortune. The reporter does some detective work and discovers that the will is hidden in the top of the secret table in Madame Duval's home.

Hunt and Baird go to the mansion during the absence of the adventuress and Captain Radcliffe and the detectives get in an open window and secure the long-sought document. When Madame Duval and Radcliffe return and discover the will missing they realize that at last they are about to be trapped. They determine on a bold plan to escape arrest and invite Zudora and Storm to a social at their home. The pair accept, acting on the advice of their friends, and dur-

Despite the efforts of Hunt and Baird to head them off, the yacht sails out to sea and the plotters pass out of the lives of Zudora and her friends forever. A short time later Zudora and Storm are married and Villiers turns over all the riches to the heiress which were rightly hers.

THRILLING action which will make the average audience sit up and gasp will be found in the fourth episode of the Universal serial, "The Black Box," which is entitled "An Old Grudge." In the second reel of this picture Herbert Rawlinson, playing the part of Sandford Quest in the picture, climbs out on a semaphore which extends above a railroad track and drops down on the top of a rapidly moving freight train passing beneath the tower. The slightest misstep on Mr. Rawlinson's part would surely have resulted in serious injury, but his successful performance of the feat adds a most realistic thrill to the picture.

As the story begins one sees Sandford Quest, accompanied by Lenora, start out to investigate the supposed death of Ian MacDougal when he jumped from the train while being taken to the penitentiary.

Ere departing, Quest leaves a check in his home for the Salvation Army girl and leaves word that he will return before noon to keep an appointment with Mrs. Reinholdt. Arrived at the station nearest the point where MacDougal leaped from the train, Quest and Lenora find that Laura, who has preceded them disguised as a man, has arranged everything with the section boss.

The two mount a handcar and proceed down the track to a point where MacDougal leaped from the train. In a cave not far from the railroad they find the body of the dead MacDougal, his fall and consequent exposure having proven too much for him.

When Quest leaves the train, however, he is seen by "Red" Gallagher, a man whom he formerly convicted, and Red plans to "get even." While Laura and Lenora remain behind to see that MacDougal's body is properly buried, Quest sets out in an auto to return to the city, but Gallagher punctures a tire with a rifle bullet and captures the scientific detective.

The ex-convict and his pal lock Quest up in a handcar house that stands near the track, but by means of the aniahaldyte which he has with him the detective manages to cause an explosion so that one side of the house is completely destroyed and he then rushes out to a nearby signal tower to have the operator flag the freight train just approaching.

The operator informs Quest that he cannot stop the train and, seeing Gallagher and his pal waiting below, Quest determines to board the train at any cost. Climbing out upon the semaphore he drops down on the swiftly moving train, thus returning to the city. Gallagher and his pal escape in Quest's abandoned auto and speed away for parts unknown.

When Quest reaches home, however, he finds his home in a topsy-turvy condition. Mrs. Reinholdt and the police inspector have called to claim her jewels and found the dead bodies of Quest's secretary and the Salvation Army girl who had called for her check. Since the inspector has found near the dead secretary's body a bloody paper-weight bearing Quest's name, together with a clock that had stopped at 11:15, he believes that thus the time of the crime is fixed, and turns to Quest with an inquiry as to where he was at that moment.

Quest replies that at 11:15 he was in a signal tower five miles away, and asks the inspector if he suspects him of having committed the deed. The inspector frankly confesses that he had such a thought, but that he is now thoroughly convinced that he did not commit the crime, since he was far away from the scene of the murder at the time. At this point the film ends, to be continued a week later.

THE release of "Pretty Mrs. Smith," the five-reel feature picture in which Fritzi Scheff is starred, is the first film offering of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in association with Bosworth, Incorporated. The play in which Miss Scheff had a successful Broadway run, affords, as a film play, plenty of action and opportunity for Miss Scheff to display the variety and fineness of her wardrobe. Both assets are valuable ones as film requisites go, and since the fame of the Scheff wardrobe is quite as universal as that of the dark-haired, vivacious Fritzi herself, it is quite as important that the wardrobe receive this special notice on its debut in the film world.

It is also Fritzi's debut and the accomplishment of photographing well is hers. She is quite the same Fritzi on the screen that she is on the stage and portrays well the role that the scenario maps out for her. Leila Bliss, as chum of the pretty Mrs. Smith, provides the laugh-making element of the story and is assisted in this service by the meek little man whom she threatens to marry. And no one has any doubt but that she does.

Louis Bennison, as the missionary, Ferdinand Smith, is the first one to bestow the title "Mrs." upon the popular Drucilla. When the latter has tired of the prosaic life in the missionary field and returned to chum and country, she later learns that the Rev. Ferdinand has been lost at sea, so becomes the wife of Forrest Smith (Forrest Stanley), a poet, who develops alcoholic tendencies and disappears one day, leaving a note and his clothing on the sea shore. Frank Smith (Owen Moore) is the third Smith to add his name to hers, but because of jealousy they separate, Mrs. Smith going to a seaside resort, where she is followed by her husband and where both Ferdinand and Forrest Smith later appear. Amusing complications arise and the solution, as offered by Ferdinand, is that since he is legally dead after an absence of seven years, and since Forrest Smith married Mrs. Smith before the expiration of that time, that Frank Smith is her legal husband. And so the pretty Mrs. Smith is pleased to have it. The photography, scenes and settings are a credit to the production.

APRIL 17 marks the first release of the "Who Pays?" series, a group of twelve plays being produced by the Balboa company under H. M. Horkheimer's personal supervision, and being released by Pathe. Each picture is to be three reels in length and complete in itself, though the general trend of the story in each will be to point out the real sufferer in the domestic troubles confronting us today. This first release, "The Price of Fame," features Henry King as Henry Merwin, the young man whose condition and circumstances in the last scene fully answer the question, "Who Pays?" and Ruth Roland as Ann Booth, later Merwin's wife.

The picture is finished in every way. The studio work is artistic; the exterior scenes are in keeping with the story; the photography is beautiful, and the acting strong and convincing. The theme is not a new one in bare outline, but in treatment it takes on a decidedly original appearance, inasmuch as after certain complicated situations are established, events are allowed to take their logical course, and impending misfortune is not frustrated by a hero or heroine in order to bring the affair to a happy conclusion. The result is a realistic portrayal of life as it is seen every day. The ending, though not a smiling one, is wholly gratifying, coming as a natural sequence to the action.

Henry Merwin, a young farmer, decides to try his luck in the city. He obtains a position as driver of a milk wagon, and sends for his sweetheart, Ann Booth. They are married on her arrival, and live happily in a little bungalow. A year later shows them absorbed in their new-born infant. Then Opportunity beckons to Merwin. He meets a professor who offers to send him to Europe to have his voice cultivated.

His long absence from Ann, combined with the attentions showered on him on his return, cause Merwin to feel ashamed of his plain wife, and a divorce follows. The opera star settles enough money on her, however, to make her comfortable for the rest of her life. One night something snaps in his throat, and he spends the rest of his fortune endeavoring to recover his voice, but in vain. He drops lower and lower in the social scale until he finally reaches the bottom, a victim of his vices. Who pays?

"Sign of the Rose" Ready Soon

Unless unforeseen conditions arise to destroy the smoothness of the schedule to which he is clinging, Thomas H. Ince should establish a precedent for speed and celerity in the production and release of multiple-reel features. Such a statement is inspired by the fact that, according to reliable information, "The Sign of the Rose," which Mr. Ince is producing for the screen, will be ready for presentation within the next few weeks. Less than six weeks ago Mr. Beban arrived at Inceville and immediately went to work before the camera. This week there comes from the shores of the Pacific the announcement that the production is more than half finished.

Prior to the noted actor's arrival, everything possible had been done to permit of a ready commencement of activities on the international masterpiece, and to this fact, in a great measure, is ascribed the reason for such unprecedented swiftness in motion picture manufacture. Supplemental to this, however, is the careful method employed in his work by the director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

Producer Ince is a man who does a lot of thinking before he acts. In his mind's eye he visualizes everything he intends to do. That which is finally adjudged unnecessary is eliminated, so that when the time arrives for the toil involved in production not a minute is lost. About him, while he is working, Mr. Ince has a corps of men, divided into groups, each of which is at the beck and call of a lieutenant. The men have their orders—this one to do this and that one to do that—and in this way the countless duties entailed in putting on a feature are dispatched.

In "The Sign of the Rose" Mr. Ince has tackled a job of mammoth proportions. The piece, it will be remembered, was used by Geo. Beban as the vehicle for his remarkable triumphs on the vaudeville stages of England and America for five years. So internationally popular did it become that Klaw & Erlanger produced it as a four-act play on Broadway and it is this version of it, with some revisions, that Mr. Ince is converting into a drama for the screen. While the burden of the acting throughout the story rests on the shoulders of Mr. Beban, a very strong cast is working in support of the celebrated star. Virtually the entire company of principals, in addition to Mr. Beban, was sent from New York to appear especially in the Ince production.

Filmdom needs no introduction to Leon J. Rubinstein, the gentleman pictured to the left, for, in the words of Edwin Thanhouser, he is the dean of the press corps of the motion picture industry, the year 1906 having marked his entry into the field as editor of one of the very first trade journals. After seeing the Film Index started nicely on its way, "Ruby," as he is known to everybody in the film game, next championed the independent cause, and became editor of Film Reports. Still later he supplied much of the publicity and advertising copy for such brands as Imp, Powers, the Kessel and Bauman interests, Eclair and the Sales Company program. He next took a whirl at producing special educational films and then three-reel sensationals, which necessitated the building of the Ruby Twinplex studio, which he only recently disposed of to become director of publicity for the Thanhouser Film Corporation of New Rochelle, N. Y. Just where and when the nickname of "Ruby" first appeared history neglects to state, but the name attached itself to him, and still sticks. Leon J. frankly admits being married and boasts of one son, in this being radically different from some of the matinee idol stars who make frantic efforts to conceal their marriage, for "Ruby," when asked whether he'd rather be single, invariably answers "Nixey."

President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Manufacturing Company, has closed a deal for the purchase of a plot of ground adjoining the present holdings of the American studios at Santa Barbara, Cal. The property covers a quarter block to the north of the studio and will be improved at once to meet the growing demands for increasel facilities. By the purchase of this property the American Film Manufacturing Company has become the largest individual taxpayer in the city.

Miss Virginia Pearson, well known for her excellent work in several Broadway productions in recent seasons, has returned to her first love, the Vitagraph Company.

Dorothy Bernard has been specially engaged by Kalem to appear in the three-act drama, "The Second Commandment." This is one of a series of ten, each of which is based upon one of the ten commandments.

Edison is reviving as a three-reeler the one-reel success, "With Bridges Burned," from the story by Rex Beech. Director Ashley Miller is lengthening it and Mabelle Trunnelle, who played in the one-reel version, is again playing the same role she had five years ago.

Thomas H. Ince, director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, is this week superintending the cutting and assembling of "The Sign of the Rose," the combination of silent and spoken drama in which George Beban will be starred. About 40,000 feet of films have been used in picturizing the character artist's masterpiece, but this quantity will be reduced by the cutting process to about 10,000 feet.

Elsie Cort, Joe Massey, Veronica Larkin and Ray D. Clifton are the latest players to be added to the ranks of the companies producing for the Kriterion Program at Santa Barbara, Cal.

Opie Read's widely read novel, "A Yankee from the West," is now in production at the Majestic studios on the west coast. Henry Walthall is playing Billy Milford, the college-bred man.

An important announcement by the Vitagraph Company that will be of interest to moving picture patrons is the lately rejoined Maurice Costello-Van Dyke Brooke combination, in which Mr. Costello will be seen in pictures directed by Mr. Brooke. It is two years since these two worked together, Mr. Costello having been his own director for some time.

Miss Neva Gerber has been engaged as the new leading lady of the American Beauty Company.

North American Film Corporation.—It is now known that Mary Pickford's younger sister, Lottie, will be starred as the lead in the "Diamond from the Sky," the picturized novel to be produced by the North American Film Corporation. This has resulted in a demand for the stock, with practically none to be had.

Mutual Film Corporation.—There have been a number of requests for the common stock with the stipulation that the same is to be transferred before the next dividend date. What this presages we are not in a position to determine. Stock sold at 86 within the last several days and is in strong demand at present.

Thanhouser Film Corporation.—This stock sold at 80 and is in demand at that figure.

Syndicate Film Corporation.—It is reported this company has been securing at the rate of $5,000 worth of business per week. This is somewhat remarkable in view of the fact that the first releases of the serial were at the beginning of the summer of 1914.

J. Walter Lamb of New York City has been appointed manager of the Atlanta office of the World Film Corporation and already has begun his new duties.

Two of the costliest and most sensational reels of film made by the Lubin Company were shown at a private exhibition at that company's studio in Philadelphia last week. The reels consisted entirely of spectacular big punches that have been used in Lubin productions during the past few years and are the first two of a series that are to be made, not for release, but as a sort of catalog of spectacular climaxes which are to be kept on record at the Lubin laboratories at Betzwood, Pa.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 25—Selig—March 29.—Miss Tiny Broadwick floats 1,400 feet to the ground from an aeroplane in a parachute at San Diego, Calif.; letters addressed to Santa Claus from children in New York are made into a bust of Kris Kringle; Columbia University base ball squad begins work for the season; Barney Oldfield wins grand prize auto race, Venice, Calif.; festival of St. Agatha, Catania, Sicily; latest fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff-Gordon; children's bread line outside Hotel de Gink, New York City; war views from Lisbon, Portugal, Lowicz, Russian-Poland, and Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

The Jitney Elopement — Essanay — (Two Reels)—April 1.—Count de Ha Ha aspires to the hand of a beautiful heiress and her parents favor the match. The count is paid a cool million and agrees to an immediate marriage with the heiress. She, however, has a mind of her own and, when she is locked in her room, drops a note from the balcony. Charlie is on the job immediately and poses as the count, for all the business between the count and the heiress' parents has been conducted by mail. When the real count arrives Charlie is forced to take the initiative and carries the heiress away by main force. A comical chase follows in jitney buses, which ends when one is knocked across a dock and into a river. The wrecked machine contains the count and the irate father. Having disposed of them, Charlie and the heiress hurry to a minister's. Charlie Chaplin featured.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 26—Selig—April 1—American girls sail for Europe to take up Red Cross nursing; work on the new park of the Boston Braves base ball team started; Vice-President T. R. Marshall and party arrive in San Francisco for the exposition; crews of the Columbia University begin practice in their racing shells; Grace Darling arrives in San Francisco; views from East Prussia; England and Russian-Poland, showing troops located at these places going through maneuvers.

The Heart of Jim Brice—Vitagraph—April 1.—Big-hearted Jim Brice of the Howard Detective Agency, is sent to trap bribe-takers in a nearby city. Upon arriving at the scene of his activities he becomes acquainted with Commissioner Hazard of the Utilities Commission, who is being urged by unscrupulous politicians to accept a bribe from the Waterworks Company in return for a franchise which will give it exclusive privileges. Because of his wife's extravagance, Hazard needs the money and decides to accept the bribe. Brice becomes attached to Hazard's child, little Danny, and when he learns of the step Hazard is about to take he determines to save him. On the day it is to be given, Brice takes Hazard to a cafe and gets him to drink heavily. When the commissioner recovers he finds that the other politicians involved in the bribe-taking had been arrested and that Brice had saved him. When Hazard's wife learns what has happened she also realizes her folly and Brice leaves them happily reconciled. Maurice Costello featured.

Two Women and One Hat—Selig—April 2.—Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Jones are neighbors and the best of friends. They go on a shopping expedition together and select the same hat, but because of its price neither can buy it. Both return home and secure enough money to purchase the hat. Mrs. Jones is the first one back at the milliner's and gets the prize, thereby causing a quarrel. Mrs. Brown figures a way to even the score by buying a cheap hat and trimming it exactly like Mrs. Jones' expensive one. Both ladies wear their hats to a garden party and in a series of comical mix-ups they are ruined. Their husbands read a newspaper item, however, and when they return home both Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Brown find that the item has inspired their husbands to buy them new hats, so all is well. Lyllian Brown Leighton and Lillian Hayward featured.

When Dumbleigh Saw the Joke—Vitagraph—April 2.—Dumbleigh fails to get the point of a joke told at the office and worries over his dumbness to do this. He is further saddened when he receives word that a friend has died. He attends the funeral and, during the services, the point of the joke suddenly strikes him. He shocks those in the church by laughing out loud and terrifies them when he tells it to the corpse, bringing the dead man to life. When he leaves the church and goes down the street, his laughing attracts a crowd. He is arrested for stopping the traffic and the judge, thinking the joke may be a good one, offers to let him off easily if he will tell it. To his horror, however, he finds that he has forgotten it and is sent to his cell until he can think of it again. Sidney Drew featured.

A Night in the Jungle—Selig—April 3.—John Gray, a naturalist, and his daughter, Bessie, live in the jungle, where Gray studies natural history. Graham, a hunter of big game, and his son, Ralph, are in camp near the Gray home. While in the jungle Gray is badly hurt by a fall and is taken to a native village by the Africans who find him. Bessie is attacked by Jan, a servant, while alone, but is rescued by Graham and Ralph. Ralph goes in search of Gray and eventually finds him. Jan attacks Graham while Ralph is away and almost overpowers him, but Bessie releases a ferocious lion which leaps upon Jan and almost kills him. Ralph returns with Gray and Jan is punished for his misdeeds. In time the acquaintanceship of Ralph and Bessie ripens into love. Bessie Eyton and William Stowell featured.

Janet of the Chorus—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—April 3.—Uncle John, a millionaire woman-hater, upon leaving for Europe gives his nephew, Barry, the use of his luxuriant apartments and promises to take care of him financially for life if he will never marry. Scarcely has Uncle John left when Barry marries Janet of the chorus, with whom he has been in love for some time. A cablegram arrives from Uncle John stating that on account of the war he is returning at once. Barry is at a loss to know what course he shall pursue, but Janet finds a way out of the difficulty by posing as the little daughter of the housekeeper and by wearing short skirts deceives Uncle John completely. Uncle John takes a great liking to the "child" and Barry becomes jealous. Finally uncle discovers the deception, but Janet explains matters in such a convincing way that the woman-hater cannot keep from smiling and agrees to let Barry and Janet remain with him always. Norma Talmadge, Van Dyke Brooke and S. Rankin Drew featured.

The End of the Play—Biograph—April 5.—Edmond Ellis, a playwright who has just reached success, receives an order for a new play from Henry Foreman, a theatrical magnate. Ruth Allen, an actress under Foreman's management, sees Ellis and is attracted to him, but they do not meet. Ruth goes to the country to rest before beginning a tour and is accepted as a daughter by the old couple, who run the Coverdale farm. To get material for his play, Ellis goes to Cloverdale, where he meets Ruth and mistakes her for a country maid. The actress has the farmer play a hard-hearted father and send Ellis away when he declares his love. When he has gone, however, she realizes that she really loves him and follows him to the city. They meet in Foreman's office and matters are explained. Ellis finds he has no material for his play and Ruth offers to let him use her diary which she kept during their romance on the farm, and when he finds that the play has no ending he decides to supply one and asks Ruth to become his wife.

Won Through Merit—Edison—April 5.—This picture, featuring Pat O'Malley and Gladys Hulette, was taken in Washington and introduces Treasurer McAdoo and the members of the United States Civil Service Commission to the picture public. The capitol, treasury, bureau of engraving and printing, and other notable buildings play a prominent part in the background. A novel effect is secured by camera expert Plimpton in one of the scenes, showing Mr. O'Malley and Miss Hulette conversing over the 'phone separated by a panoramic view of Washington. Acting on the advice of his friend, George Merrill, John Corbin puts in an application for a position in Washington. He passes the examination and receives an appointment. His desk is next to that occupied by Helen Morse, a friend of Merrill's, and they are soon close friends. Corbin misunderstands his friend's attitude towards Helen, and refrains from making advances to her. His joy is unbounded when Merrill shows him the picture of his future wife. Corbin starts off at full speed for the Morse home, and the final scene convinces us that the lovers have come to an understanding. C. R. C.

The Other Woman's Picture—Essanay—April 5.—Will Strickland, adored by Dora, his wife, falls madly in love with Helena Raymond, though his friend, Eugene Griscom, endeavors to save him and to prevent his wife learning of his duplicity. After Will has been killed in Brazil, Griscom, who accompanied him, returns home with his effects and the wife learns all. Griscom, however, comforts her with love shining in his eyes. Gerda Holmes, Lester Cuneo and Rishard Travers featured. N. G. C.

The Second Commandment—Kalem—(Three Reels)—April 5.—The second of the multiple reel series based upon the ten commandments. Dorothy Bernard featured, supported by Guy Coombs. Richard Stevens deserts his wife and flees with Mirza, the wife of a sun-worshiper, after the latter has killed her husband. A year later Stevens' wife dies, after entrusting her daughter to the care of a friend. At the same time a son is born to Mirza. Seventy years pass. Warren Stevens, the grandson of Richard and Mirza, meets Helen Royce, the granddaughter of Richard and his first wife. Helen is intensely religious, while Warren is the leader of a cult of image worshipers and a crook by profession. He holds meetings of his cult and robs those who attend. Helen falls in love with him, but discovers his true character before they marry. Shortly afterwards her father dies and, to add to her misfortune, a paralytic stroke leaves her helpless. Clinton, a Christiant Scientist who has admired Helen for a long time, begs her to try his faith. Burglars enter her apartments one evening and in this crisis she concentrates her mind in prayer. Suddenly her strength returns and she confronts the burglars. One proves to be Warren, but the girl cannot have him arrested and lets him escape. He is captured by the police shortly afterwards. Realizing that Clinton is the man worthy of her love, Helen marries him.

The House of Secrets—(First of the "Road O' Strife" series—Lubin—April 5.—Alene, a beautiful girl, has been raised by her strange guardian, Professor Gershom, and has never been out of the lonely house which stands near the outskirts of the village of Elmhurst. She knows nothing of the world's way but has mastered every thing pertaining to science. She is unhappy, and, feeling the longing for a mate, steals out of the house one night and meets Robert Dane, a dreamer and student, who also has been driven from confinement by the same longing. With the simplicity of perfect purity she demands that Dane take her to live in his home and he, heartbroken at the request and believing her demented, takes her to her home instead. Upon entering the house she finds that Professor Gershom has been murdered and sees someone hiding behind the curtain. Upon the mysterious person's hand she notices a peculiar ring. She hurries from the house and persuades Dane to return. Dr. Duncan, the village physician, returns with them but when they arrive at the house all traces of the murder as well as the professor's body have disappeared and Dane is firmly convinced that Alene's mind is unbalanced. Dr. Duncan takes the girl home with him, where his wife cares for her. Crane Wilbur, Mary Charleson and John E. Ince featured.

The Gentleman Burglar—Selig—(Two Reels)—April 5.—Broadway Jim, a crook, learns that Jim Draper, a society man, is about to attend a social at which valuable jewels will be shown. As the crook resembles Draper, he overpowers him and secures his invitation. He then attends the ball and attempts to secure the jewels by switching off the lights, but Irma Horne, a girl detective who has been watching him, catches him in the act. This is the beginning of a romance between Irma and Draper. A complete review appears on page 524 of the April 3rd issue.

Mr. Jarr Takes a Night Off—Vitagraph—April 5.—Fourth of the "Jarr Family" series by Roy McCardell, featuring Harry Davenport as Mr. Jarr and Rose Tapley as Mrs. Jarr. Mr. Jarr buys two tickets from Fritz, the shipping clerk, for a benefit to be given by the Human Uniques, the side show attraction of which the shipping clerk's sister, Fatima, is a member. Mrs. Jarr finds the tickets in his pocket and decides he is living a double life. A quarrel follows and Jarr takes his hat and coat and goes to the ball. Mrs. Jarr follows him and arrives at the ball just as a general riot begins because Fatima has fallen through the floor and broken up a gunman's ball on the floor beneath. The entire party is arrested, but Jarr with the help of a saloonkeeper, who has political influence, manages to get himself and his wife out of the scrape. They arrive home to find their children, who were left in charge of the maid's fireman-lover, drenched to the skin, the fireman having thought it best to make them "fire-proof" because of a blaze in the neighborhood. The Jarrs swear they will never take another "night off."

The Bridge Across—Biograph—(Two Reels)—April 6.—Old Colonel Randolph does not know that his daughter, Grace, an artist, is the one who keeps him supplied with the few luxuries he enjoys. He is a tyrannical Southerner and objects to her receiving attentions from a young Northerner who lives on an adjoining estate. With the assistance of Pompey, the Colonel's old servant, however, Grace manages to meet her lover clandestinely. The Northern man's mother gives a banquet, but Randolph refuses to go himself or to let Grace go. She again calls upon Pompey for help and manages to steal away at night. When he discovers her gone, Randolph is very angry, but when he comes upon Pompey fondling a number of mementos of Mrs. Randolph he realizes he has no right to interfere in Grace's love affair and asks the faithful servant to lead him also the mansion across the bridge, where the reception is in progress.

A Clean Sweep—Edison—April 6.—This is a Wadsworth-Housman comedy with unusually funny action and amusing situations. Waddy dislikes Artie, his daughter's suitor, and hesitates not to kick him off of the front porch while he is kissing Tillie good-night. The next time Artie calls he is forced to hide in the fireplace because of the unexpected arrival of Waddy. Bill Black, chimney-sweep, starts operations on the roof and nearly smothers Artie with soot. This is only one of the many discomfitures to which he is subjected before escaping. Pete Range, plumber, steam-fitter, and general nuisance, contributes his share, and Waddy's efforts to take down the heating stove climax the fun. C. R. C.

The Lady of the Snows—(Three Reels)—Essanay—April 6.—Edna Mayo and Richard C. Travers are featured in this adaptation of Mrs. Carter Harrison's novel of the Canadian Northwest. A prettily told love story with a happy ending. See review on page 529, issue of April 3. N. G. C.

Ham's Harrowing Duel—Kalem—April 6.—While arguing with Bud, while outside a window, Ham is hit with grapefruit thrown by an angered wife at her husband. The husband flees and the wife takes Ham into the house and treats him royally. To make her husband jealous, she makes Ham pose as a lawyer, much to Bud's disgust. The latter disguises as a highwayman and takes the money away from Ham which he had been given by the wife. The husband returns and is angered at first, but discovers the trick. He then pays Ham to fight a duel with him, in which the husband is supposed to be killed. Bud returns again and once more reaps the profits of Ham's labor. When the wife discovers that her husband is not dead she trounces him and when Ham discovers that Bud is the highwayman the latter is forced to flee for his life.

Capturing the Cook—Lubin—April 6.—George Carter meets Mabel Dinsmore while on his way to visit his sister, Mrs. Smith. Mabel visits her sister, Mrs. Brown, who lives next door to the Smiths' and when she washes some handkerchiefs and hangs them in the backyard, she is mistaken for the maid by George, who has volunteered to cook his sister's dinner in the absence of the real cook. He asks Mabel to help him prepare the dinner and she, believing him crazy, humors him by consenting. When he sharpens a bread knife her nerves fail to stand the strain and she runs into the dining-room shrieking. Matters are then explained and, though formally introduced, Mabel will not speak to George. The next day, Mrs. Brown, who sees that Mabel really cares for George, and Mrs. Smith, who knows George is in love with Mabel, manage to fix things so that they meet. A fake accident on George's part forces Mabel to admit that she really cares and they embrace. Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman featured.

Getting a Start in Life—Selig—April 6.—A Tom Mix picture which will probably draw its share of laughs. The humor is started in the first scene when an old man "kicks the bucket" literally. In his will he stipulates that his niece must come West to live in order to inherit his fortune. The cowboys find a picture of an old maid and plan a warm welcome for her which, they think, will drive her away, but they are surprised when instead of an old maid a beautiful young girl arrives. She explains that the picture is one of her aunt, who recently died. All of the boys fall in love with her and propose en masse. They receive a shock of their lives, however, when she tells them that she is already married, but the cruelest blow is struck when her husband arrives and proves to be an insignificant shriveled-up Easterner. They all head for the lake, leaving the heiress and her ornamental husband alone in their glory.

The Timid Mr. Tootles—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—April 6.—Mr. Tootles is the butt of all the jokes at the office in which he is employed because of his natural timidity. He is afraid of all women except Maria, a slavey at his boarding house. One day when he rescues a child from in front of an auto driven by a beautiful lady and the lady takes him in her car to his destination, things change. The clerks see him with the beautiful woman and immediately think they have been fooling themselves. To keep up the deception he buys flowers and candy and gives them to Maria. When the boss discovers that the beautiful lady with whom Tootles was riding was his wife the timid man is threatened with sudden death, but explains that the flowers and candy went to the slavey rather than to the boss' wife, as the clerks believe. Maria backs up his statement and Mr. Tootles discovers that he is really in love with her. Sidney Drew and Mrs. Sidney Drew featured.

The Thumb Prints on the Safe—Kalem—(Two Reels)—April 7.—An episode of the girl detective series, featuring Cleo Ridgeley. Merriman's rubies are stolen and his own thumb-prints appear on the safe, giving the police the impression that he took the jewels while walking in his sleep. Jean, however, believes otherwise and sets out to investigate. She visits Breslow, who is known to the police, at the hospital, where he was taken after he had been found unconscious near the Merriam home. Jean surprises the officers of the law by accusing Merriam's servant of being guilty. She then tells how she arrived at this conclusion by asserting that the servant is a photographic expert and that by a process he has mastered he transferred his master's thumb-prints to the safe and then took the jewels himself. He was to give them to Breslow, but after the latter had paid him the amount promised he quarreled with him and knocked him unconscious. Breslow, in revenge, had confessed to her. Thus cornered, the servant admits that he stole the gems and he is led away to jail.

Snap Shots—Edison—April 7.—This is the second of the Meerschaum Bowles, bachelor, dreamer, and woman-hater, series. Bowles sits down before the fire to smoke, but drops off into slumber, and dreams of hair-raising experiences with the fair sex while acting as proprietor of a picture gallery. Herbert Prior plays the part of Bowles. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Busy Man and the Idle Woman—Essanay—April 7.—George Ade truthfully depicts the struggles of a hard working business man, who arrives at his office at 9:30, grinds away until noon, lunches, goes to the club for a jolly time and taxis home, while wifey has spent her day with almost nothing to do, having taken a walk for her figure's sake, fired one cook and hired another, tried on a new frock, attended a remnant sale, met a friend, gone window shopping, visited a suffrage league meeting, met some other women partaking of macaroons and cocoa, and at night when tired hubby returns home insists on going to a dance. Harry Duncanson and Lillian Drew featured. N. G. C.

representative of a big American ship building corporation, is sent to South America with a secret bid for the building of a new battleship. Caldera Mendez, holding a like position with a South American corporation, determines to secure the secret bid so that his firm may underbid the Americans. With his ally, Talmac, he attacks Burton on board the ship and secures the papers, neglecting, however, to get the cipher key without which the bid, which is in code, is worthless. They throw Burton overboard, believing him dead, but he is picked up by a passing schooner. Arriving in South America, he is attracted by Angelica Sorenko, a beautiful native girl, whom Mendez also loves. Mendez prevails upon her to secure the cipher key from Burton and, at the embassy ball, waits outside with an aeroplane while Angelica attempts to secure the key from Burton. The girl, however, falls in love with him and agrees to help him escape. They make their getaway in an auto and are pursued by the South Americans in their aeroplane. Mendez is shot from the aeroplane and falls to the ground dead, but Talmac continues to follow. When their automobile breaks down, Burton and Angelica continue their flight in a motor boat and Talmac follows until he is felled by a bullet from Burton's pistol. The American and the girl reach the navy department in time to place the bid and when Burton receives word that the contract has been awarded to his firm he claims Angelica as his bride.

Aunt Mary—Selig—April 7.—A very pleasing drama of village life, in which Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton are featured. The former is at his best as a traveling drug salesman, while the latter creates a typical village girl character. The plot revolves around the taking of Aunt Mary's savings by the village drug clerk, who was in love with Hester, her niece. The traveling drug salesman falls in love with Hester, but does not tell her until he learns that the drug clerk cares very little for her after he has suddenly "inherited" enough money to buy his employer's store. The workings of fate soon bring the clerk to an accounting and he is forced to give Aunt Mary his drug store in return for the money he took and is arrested because of an illegal mail order business he has been conducting. The salesman then tells Hester of his love and Aunt Mary not only approves of the match but asks the salesman to become manager of her store, which he does.

Easy Money—Vitagraph—April 7.—Mrs. Sterling, an actress, leaves for the West to accept an engagement, taking her little son, Bobby, with her. She places $500 in bills in her handbag carelessly and two crooks determine to get the money. On the train she meets a stage manager for whom she formerly worked, who also has $500 of stage money in his grip. Bobby changes the real money for the stage money, placing the real $500 in a traveling sponge bag. The crooks secure the stage money and, leaving the train, go to a cafe to celebrate. They are arrested for passing counterfeits and carried off to jail. On the train Mrs. Sterling discovers her loss, but Bobby explains what he has done. Mrs. Sterling believes then that the theatrical man is the loser, but he laughs and says that it was merely counterfeit money. Dorothy Kelly and Bobby Connelly featured.

The Vindication—Biograph—April 8.—The detective's daughter meets a strange young man and, in time, they fall in love. When she shows her father his picture, he says that he is the man who was arrested some time before for stealing $5,000 from his employer and who served a prison sentence for the crime. The girl tells her lover of what her father has said and he admits that he served a term in prison, but says that he didn't commit the crime and that he has no knowledge of how the money disappeared. One evening, a short time later, her lover meets her secretly on the grounds of her home. They hear a shot within the house and rush in to find the detective covering a burglar, whom he has wounded. The lover recognizes the burglar as his old office mate and the detective accuses the lover of being an accomplice to this last crime. The burglar, however, confesses that it was he who committed the first theft and that the lover has been persecuted long enough. He is led off to jail and the detective signifies his willingness to trust his daughter's future to the young man who had been wrongfully imprisoned.

Sophie's Fighting Spirit—Essanay—April 8.—The wife of the husband who is interested in a New Thought movement goes to a neighbors to borrow vinegar. Sophie, the neighbor, sends her hubby after vinegar, and he becomes interested in the other woman with the result that Sophie takes him home by the ear. Later she suffers an attack of cholera morbus, and the New Thought man endeavors to treat her, but without effect. Meanwhile, the other woman sees her husband's vinegar jug outside the house and starts hammering at the door. Sophie pitches into her and while the two are in the midst of a rough and tumble fight they discover their husbands laughing at that, when both turn upon them. N. G. C.

Mr. Carlson of Arizona—Lubin—(Two Reels)—April 8.—Mr. Carlson of Arizona comes to New York with a fair supply of money, but with no knowledge of Wall Street, and, when he angers one of the "big men," he is financially ruined. In his dark moments his little stenographer suggests that he return to Arizona, from whence he came, and begin life anew. This he does, accepting a posion as engineer in a friend's construction camp. Alone in the West, he realizes that he loves his stenographer and returns East to find her, but meets with no success. The "big man" sends two detectives to watch Mr. Carlson, as he fears him, and these men manage to place the westerner in a very unpleasant situation. It is then Mr. Carlson discovers that the little stenographer is also from the West, for she appears when he is in need of a friend more than ever before and it is through her that the detectives receive their just deserts and gladly return East. Mr. Carlson then asks the girl to become his wife. Romaine Fielding featured.

A Barber-ous Affair—Mina—April 8.—Harry owns a barber shop and employs a pretty manicurist, who is the chief attraction. When he throws Georgie out of the shop for paying too much attention to the manicurist he cuts off his own nose, for Georgie starts a shop across the street, and employs, not only the manicurist but also a set of women barbers. Harry and his partner determine to get back some of the business Georgie has taken away and, masked as women, secure positions in the shop. They succeed in their purpose for a short time, but when Harry's wig comes off a general fight follows between Harry, his assistant, the lady barbers and Georgie.

Her Gethsemane—Vitagraph—April 8.—Howard Stanton is heartbroken when his mother dies and is about to give up work, when Marguerite Clayton, a friend of the family, urges him to persevere. Encouraged by her constant attention to him, Howard becomes a success in business and then asks her to marry him. She reminds him that she is many years his senior, but he refuses to listen to her. She then agrees to marry him on condition that if he tires of her at the end of five years she will leave him. Four years pass and their happiness is supreme. Janet, a niece of Marguerite's, visits them and Howard appears to be attracted to her. Marguerite believes that Howard has at last found a women he loves better than her and is about to leave him when she learns that he was merely helping Janet in a little love affair of her own with a young man whom she had met at college and of whom she thought Marguerite would not approve. Ann Schaefer featured.

The Miser's Legacy—Biograph—April 9.—An old miser, dying, entrusts a box containing his entire fortune to his doctor, telling him to find his son who ran away from home years before. Two crooks, hiding in the alley, see the doctor receive the box and follow him home. Jackson, the leader of the pair, forces his way into the house and a struggle follows in which the doctor is overcome. The crooks then direct their attention to the doctor's wife, who they believe has hidden the box, but the maid, who has been out, returns and hurries for the police. Jackson's pal finds the box hidden in a desk and they open it. To his surprise Jackson finds his own picture in the box and realizes that the money is really his, as he is the miser's lost son. The other crook wishes his share of the spoils, however, and the two struggle. When the police arrive Jackson is lying wounded on the floor, the box still clutched in his hand. His wife is summoned. He dies a short time after her arrival, giving her the money so that she and their little child will be provided for.

The Stoning—Edison—(Three Parts)—April 9.—Ruth Fenton, an innocent country girl, elopes with Alec Peters, who promises to obtain a license and marry her as soon as they get safely away. He puts it off from day to day, telling Ruth that he has forgotten it. One day she begs him with tears in her eyes to keep his word. He renounces her as being babyish, and leaves her to shift for herself. In the meantime the shock of Ruth's foolish act has weakened Mrs. Fenton so that she becomes seriously ill. The minister volunteers to find Ruth and bring her home, and succeeds after several days of searching and no little persuasion. Convinced that the only thing to do is to return and live down the scandal, Ruth returns with the minister. He tells her to pay no attention to the relentless gaze of the narrow-minded villagers and she bears her suffering patiently. On Sunday he ushers her to her old place in the choir. The other choirgirls leave, as do the people in the pews. This proves too much for poor Ruth, and the next morning her body is found floating in the river. Reviewed on page 528, issue of April 3. C. An Opal Ring—Essanay—April 9.—Gerald Livingstone is admiring an opal ring, when his friend Jimmie Rogers enters and joshes him. Livingstone bets that the first pretty woman he sees will kiss him for the ring, and the two set out for the shopping district. Meeting a Miss Proctor, whose uncle has provided one of the best detectives in the city as her escort, Livingstone following her is mistaken for the detective at the apartments of the duke, and as a result is able to rescue her from five ruffians who attack her. Next morning he is decorated for his bravery and sent for by the duke. While alone with Miss Proctor she thanks him for rescuing her with a kiss, and he gives her the ring. In love with her, he denies to Jimmie that he has won the bet and Jimmie informs him that the woman he rescued is Carlotta Marie Victoria, queen of a Balkan state. Albert Roscoe and Beverly Bayne featured. N. G. C.

He Was a Traveling Man—Kalem—April 9.—Jim Flip, a traveling salesman for a hosiery company, conceives the idea when he sees the hotel loungers become interested in the hosiery of Marietta, an old maid, while going up stairs. The bell boy, looking through the keyhole of Jim's room, sees a human leg with hose similar to those worn by Marietta protruding from Jim's trunk. He summons the police, followed by the villagers of the town. They burst into Jim's room and rush to the trunk, thinking they will find the dead body of the old maid, but instead pull out a pair of dummies, such as are used for the purpose of displaying stockings in a show window.

A Stroke of Fate—Lubin—April 9.—Professor Fain, a wealthy scientist, desires his nephew, Morris, and his ward, Dorothy Blake, to marry. Richard Dare, Fain's secretary, falls in love with Dorothy, but dares not tell her because of her uncle's wish. Morris, who leads a wild life, attacks his uncle when the latter discovers him taking money from the safe, and knocks him unconscious. The professor is paralyzed and cannot speak. Dorothy finds a paper which states his desire that she marry Morris and she determines to do so. Dare has been arrested for the attack on the professor, Morris being responsible for this. The doctor tells Morris that a second shock will kill the professor and the scheming nephew, planning to get rid of the old man, arranges to have him see his marriage to Dorothy. The shock, however, has a different effect on the professor and he recovers his speech long enough to tell the truth. Morris is arrested and Dare is rewarded when the professor smiles upon his love-making to Dorothy.

Man Overboard—Selig—April 9.—A pleasing one-reel comedy in which the ever-pleasing Selig comedy quartette, John Lancaster, Lyllian Brown Leighton, Sid Smith, and Elsie Greeson, appear. Tom is in love with Mary, but her father refuses to consider him as a suitor and, after separating the lovers, takes his wife and Mary on a trip. Tom learns what boat they are sailing on and follows, but fails repeatedly to establish himself in father's good graces until at last he saves the old man's wig when Mary's mother throws it overboard because she objects to father wearing it. Although Tom thought he was saving a man when he went for the wig, he is perfectly satisfied that he made a mistake, when father favors his efforts to win the hand of Mary.

They Loved Him So—Vitagraph—April 9.—Mike McCarty, a brawny longshoreman, answers the ad of Miss Prism, an eccentric old maid artist, for a model and appeals to her as an ideal "Samson." Mrs McCarty is very happy to think her husband has landed a job, until he returns home with marks of face powder on his coat. He has become sort of a hero for Miss Prism and her old maid friends to worship. When Mrs. McCarty visits the studio and handles him in anything but a gentle manner he falls from their graces. All join in pursuing him home, but when they arrive they find that Mrs. McCarty is capable of handling him alone and she orders them from the house, while Mike bends over a washtub. Flora Finch, Kate Price and Jay Dwiggins featured.

The Brooding Heart—Biograph—April 10.—Mrs. Warren, wife of a wealthy broker, is heartbroken when her little daughter dies. She broods continually and Warren, hoping to restore her to her former cheerful self, pays the guardian of Madge, a little waif, a handsome reward to relinquish his claim on the child. He buys clothes for Madge and has them sent to her guardian's home, and the bills to his home. Mrs. Warren finds the bills and believes her husband to be leading a double life. Heartbroken, she decides to leave him, but before she goes Warren manages to bring Madge to the house and place her in their child's bed. Upon finding her, Mrs. Warren swoons but when she recovers the haunted look is gone from her eyes and she is again a happy mother.

An Unpaid Ransom—Edison—April 10.—This drama can easily be said to be above the average one-reel subject. Its action is snappy and interesting, its photography superb, and the cast capable and pleasing. Augustus Phillips appears as the detective-chauffeur, Steven Bemks, who solves the mystery of the kidnapping of Helen (Bessie Learn). Carlton King is seen as Jim Wilson.

C. R. C.

Andy of the Royal Mounted—Essanay—April 10.—G. M. Anderson in the role of a Canadian Northwest mounted policeman. Andy and another trooper both love a school teacher, though the lady favors Andy. One day when the other trooper is caught by his colonel, drunk, and discharged from the service, he shoots a gambler and while escaping rescues the school teacher from death when her horse runs away. Andy overtakes him and is about to lead him away under arrest when the teacher covers Andy with a gun, thereby enabling the ex-trooper to escape. Andy, however, forgives her.

The Girl on the Trestle—Kalem—April 10.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series, featuring Helen Holmes. While driving a wagon load of powder Bill Rhody is knocked from his seat and the horses run away. As the wagon passes under the railroad trestle near Lone Point the powder explodes, destroying the structure and leaving but a single rail hanging. Bill tells Helen of the accident and the girl, knowing the passenger train is due within a few moments, climbs aboard a freight car which is on a siding and allows the car to run down a steep grade near the trestle. As it nears the structure, she applies the breaks and leaps to the ground. She then crawls across the burning structure and over the single rail to the other side, where she flags the train in time to prevent an accident.

Clothes Count—Lubin—April 10.—Amy Manners and Jack Belding are engaged and Jack brings his father to see her. Father finds her with her hair down, however, and declares that it is all off. Jack persuades him to take one more chance and they go to her home for dinner, but this time father finds her cooking and is about to leave again when she ties him to a chair and forces him to remain until she can get dressed up. When he sees her in her proper person he decides that Jack was right after all. On the same reel is:

He Couldn't Explain—Lubin—April 10.—Mary Jinks starts to visit her mother in the country and her husband immediately writes a letter to Jones telling him to come over and play poker. He neglects to place Jones' name on the top of the letter and it falls into the hands of Cora Lusk, a clever woman crook. Jinks falls asleep while waiting for Jones, and Mrs. Jinks, missing her train, returns home and goes to bed without knowing that he is in the house. Cora arrives and fondly embraces Jinks, as she believes the invitation was meant for her. Mrs. Jinks finds her and things happen in rapid succession, Cora finishing on the street and Jinks being badly battered up. A message from the police explains matters, however, and Jinks and his wife are reconciled.

His Jungle Sweetheart—Selig—April 10.—A single reel jungle-zoo animal story written by Conyers C. Conversé and produced by Giles R. Warren. It is full of thrills and tense situations and is sure to please practically any audience. Edith Johnson takes the leading role.

The Return of Morris Donnelly—Vitagraph—(Three Reels)—April 10.—Morris Donnelly, a one time reputable lawyer but now a crook, yields to the temptation of "the Rat" to forciby enter a house. The home selected is that of Edith Dent, a fellow-student of Donnelly's at the law school which he attended. She discovers him at work within the house and mutual recognition follows. He promises her that he will live straight and makes good, but incurs the enmity of "the Rat" and his gang. They frame a murder of a policeman and all evidence points to Donnelly as the guilty person. Edith, who believes him innocent, fights his case, but loses. He is sentenced to be electrocuted and all hopes seem to be gone, but as she waits outside the death house she remembers reading of a scientist's successful resuscitation of dead animals and his desire to try his experiment on a human body. She communicates with the scientist and he welcomes the offer to attempt to bring Donnelly back to life. She secures Donnelly's dead body after the execution and takes it to her home without an autopsy being performed. The scientist's theory proves correct and, after working on Donnelly's body for some time, he is revived. That night Donnelly and Edith visit the hangout of "The Rat" and his gang and the man they suspected to be dead appears before them. In terror they confess that they are the real murderers and eventually Donnelly is cleared of the crime. Leo Delaney and Leah Baird featured.

Mutual Program

Doctor Jim—Majestic—(Two Reels)—April 4.—Young Dr. Jim, who works in a Western town as a miner, tries to rescue the sheriff's son, Dave, whose sister, Molly, he loves. In the fracas that follows a man named Boyle is shot and Dr. Jim and Dave escape with the apparently lifeless body. To shield his son, the sheriff accuses Dr. Jim, but Molly defends him. The concluding scenes are alive with suspense and interest. Among the cast are Vester Pegg, Catharine Henry, and Fred Burns.

His Brother's Debt—American—(Two Reels)—April 5.—The brother was good but careless and the man was industrious and earnest. When the brother was killed by an accident, the man learned of his relations with the neighbor girl. To pay his brother's debt, he married her, though he really loved his employer's daughter. His employer, not knowing the circumstances, did all in his power to crush the man when he became his competitor. It was through the loyalty of the neighbor girl, who became a real wife and mother, that the man's career was saved. When he realized that she had grown to really love him, he became a husband in more than name only. A review appears on page 567 of this issue.

The Once Over—Beauty—April 6.—This picture is a pleasing little comedy, in which Webster Campbell, Joseph Harris and Virginia Kirtley have the leads. It will doubtless get many laughs in a legitimate way without, at any time, introducing slap-stick features. A surprice is sprung at the finish, when the young man, after taking his friend's best girl away from him and almost causing said friend to commit suicide, learns that she is the mother of five children. The friend, upon discovering this fact, realizes that instead of committing suicide, he is entitled to celebrate.

C. J. C.

The Little Mother—Majestic—April 6.—The film first shows Mr. and Mrs. Delmar, people in humble circumstances, with their little daughter, Mamie. Mrs. Delmar dies in childbirth, and thereafter Mamie cares for her father and her baby brother. When the father dies the two children go to an orphan asylum. A year later Mr. and Mrs. Calvert adopt the baby brother of whom Mamie is now passionately fond. Heartbroken, she locates the Calvert home, and steals the baby. When the two are found the Calverts decide that their hearts are big enough to shelter both of the little waifs. Florence Crawford featured.

The Cycle of Hatred—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—April 6.—Olive Tracey, a young widow, becomes insanely jealous when the engagement of Dr. Morrison to Persis King is announced. She saturates some flowers with a poisonous fluid, and, fastening the doctor's card to the bouquet, has it taken to Miss King. Mrs. Tracey's little daughter, Helen, is very devoted to Persis, and happens to be in her apartments when the flowers arrive. She smells them, and a few moments later sinks back in a chair unconscious. Persis, alarmed, summons the child's mother. Realizing what she has done, Mrs. Tracey, in an agony of remore, confesses. Dr. Morrison saves the child's life, and the widow is cured of her jealous disposition. Florence La Badie, Morris Foster, and Helen Badgley take the principal parts.

A Touch of Love—American—April 7.—Martha, a big-hearted woman, is regarded as a mother to the entire mining camp and none realize that she really loves Jim, a prospector. The arrival of Fannie, a dance hall girl, in the camp changes Jim's life, for he falls in love with her. Martha fears that Fannie is not worthy of Jim and does all she can to break up the match. While riding, Fannie is injured and Jim asks Martha to care for her. After a supreme struggle, the mother of the camp overcomes her own feelings and nurses the girl back to health. She learns from her that she is the only support of her mother and child, and when she sees Jim's deep love for the girl she steps aside. After their marriage they leave camp and Martha alone finds comfort in the fact that the only man she has ever loved is happy. Charlotte Burton, Vivian Rich and Harry Von Meter featured.

Molly of the Mountains—Broncho—(Two Reels)—April 7.—John Harlow, a railroad superintendent, while making a new cut in the Kentucky mountains, wins the love of Molly Simms, daughter of Jed Simms, a moonshiner. When results force her to plead with Harlow to marry her he refuses, being already married, and then, to escape Jed Simms' wrath, he informs the revenue officers of the location of Simms' still. The moonshiner takes refuge in Harlow's cabin where he overhears Molly pleading with the superintendent to marry her. Simms is prevented from killing Harlow by his daughter. The deceiver rushes out of the cabin, is mistaken by the officers for Simms, and is shot dead. Starring Frank Borzage, Rhea Mitchell, and A. Hollingsworth.

The Indian Changeling—Reliance—April 7.—Robert Marsh, a wealthy young rancher, has an Indian sweetheart, Nona, who bears him a child. He deserts her for Vera Blanchard, whom he marries. They have a baby, who is the idol of her father's heart. Marsh loses his sight in an accident, and thereafter finds his only consolation in his baby girl. When the child becomes ill and dies, Vera adopts an Indian baby which she finds on the doorstep and conceals her own baby's death from her husband. Nona dies, and the Indian girl grows up as Marsh's daughter. Years later a great specialist restores the rancher's sight. At about the same time Nita, the Indian girl, learns that she is a changeling, and decides to run away. By feigning that the operation has been a failure, Marsh, who loves Nina, causes her to stay with him. Soon after this he finds her praying, and clasping a wooden crucifix which he had given to Nona. He then informs her that she is his daughter.

The Winged Messenger—Domino—(Two Reels)—April 8.—Jack Dow and Jim Harris, two wireless operators, are both in love with Nell Wolfe. Jack goes to sea. The ship afire, he flashes a message to the mainland. It is received by his rival, Harris, who withholds it. Nell, believing that Jack has lost his life on the burning ship, consents to marry Harris. On the day of the wedding Jack and the captain of the ship appear in the village. Harris is arrested for withholding the message, and Jack and Nell marry. The cast contains Richard Stanton, Elizabeth Burbridge, and Howard Hickman.

The Problem—American—April 9.—The story of this picture contains an idea of no small proportions—how much does a girl owe her mother and how much does she owe herself? The role of the girl, in the hands of Winnifred Greenwood, is convincing, and the support given by Ed Coxen, Josephine Ditt, John Steppling, Al Fordyce and Charlotte Burton is adequate. A dream occupies part of the reel and is convincingly "put over." The girl's mother objects to her marriage to a young man with whom she is in love, as the picture opens, and while the lovers go out into the garden to talk matters over with the girl's grandfather, the mother falls asleep in the library. She dreams that her daughter married a man of wealth. In time he tired of her and fell in love with an adventuress. When confronted by his wife he told her that she had been bought and paid for, and when he attempted to force his attentions upon her after making this statement she fired the bullet which killed him. The mother wakes just as the lovers return to plead with her. She tells them that they may marry if they wish. C. J. C.

The Rough Neck—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—April 9.—The wealthy father of Avis and Franklin Hilliard wills his entire fortune to Dave Page, superintendent of his mine, because, in years gone by, he had cheated Page's father out of his rightful share in the property. Page decides to let Hilliard's son and daughter go on enjoying the money, and he keeps the contents of the will a secret. Avis is engaged to Lord Cecil Oakleigh, a fortune hunter, whom she is marrying for his title. Concerned lest Avis' inheritance be not as large as he has supposed, the nobleman obtains a search warrant, and he and the Hilliards go to Dave's room and demand the papers which they are aware he holds. In spite of Dave's resistance, the papers are seized and read. Lord Cecil breaks his engagement with Avis. Stunned by the contents of the will, Avis and her brother then realize for the first time the generosity of the young superintendent. Later, Avis and Page are married. William S. Hart plays the leading part.

The Reformation of Peter and Paul—Princess—April 9.—Peter and Paul delight in teasing Betty and Bessie who live next door. The girls go away to college. When they return Peter and Paul, struck with their beauty, make advances and propose. They are put on probation, and, on serving their terms to the girls' satisfaction, are accepted. Morris Foster, Arthur Ashley, Mignon Anderson and Miss Hurley comprise the cast.

Station Content — Reliance — (Two Reels).—April 10.—Wallace Reid and Catherine Henry play the principal parts in this story about Station Content, so named because of the agent's happy disposition. In time Jim Manning rises to the position of general manager, and he and his wife move to the city. Here, surrounded by luxury, Mrs. Manning feels lonely and neglected. She decides to leave, and, after a series of mishaps, succeeds in getting as far as Station Content where she stops because of the stormy turn which the weather has taken. There she discovers the broken doll which was once the plaything of their child, now dead. This revives old memories, and just for fun she cuts in on the telegraph instrument. She is shocked to learn that a bridge further up the line has been washed away, and that the train carrying her husband will probably plunge into the river. She runs out and flags the train. Circumstances combine to make Manning realize his neglect, and reform.

Burglars by Request—Royal—April 10.—Jones, a nervous wreck, is accused of being a coward by his wife. To prove his bravery Jones has a friend masquerade as a burglar and enter the house. Mrs. Jones does likewise. A real burglar precedes the other two, and is helped by both Jones and his wife. Meanwhile, the other two "burglars" meet and engage in a quarrel. They are captured and tied to chairs by the real crook. While he is escaping with the silver he is waylaid by a policeman who relieves him of his booty. The thief tells him that his two pals are still in the house, and makes his escape while the officer rushes to arrest them. Jones and his wife are more than satisfied and the innocent masqueraders are acquitted.

The Fencing Master—Majestic—(Two Reels)—April 11.—M. La Rogue conducts a fencing academy. When the woman living in the apartment above dies he adopts her daughter as a playmate for his nephew whom he is raising. When they grow up they become lovers. The girl studies music. At the studio she meets Marode, an expert duellist. Knowing the man's character, the nephew challenges him when he seeks the girl's favor. Old La Rogue, semi-paralyzed, is wheeled to the scene, and is shocked into a full recovery when his nephew becomes wounded. He seizes a sword, and, in a thrilling duel, kills Marode. The girl and her sweetheart are happily reunited. Thomas Jefferson, Frank Bennett, and Teddy Sampson are seen in the leading roles.

A Double Exposure—Thanhouser—April 11.—Mrs. King receives an invitation from Mrs. Carter, an old school friend, whom she has not seen for years, to visit her and help entertain a house-party, which she is giving for her son, Jack, just home from college. Mrs. King accepts, but at the last minute is unable to go. Her daughter, Hazel, for the fun of the thing, disguises herself and goes in her mother's place. There are several ludicrous situations in which Hazel is caught by Jack minus her grey wig. Of course it all ends with the young pair falling desperately in love, and the mothers rejoicing in their children's engagement. Featuring Peggy Burke and Arthur Ashley.

The Story the Clock Told—Imp—April 5.—Starring Frances Nelson and Howard Crampton. The old clock registers 11:59. But one minute more is left of Janet Vernon's sixtieth birthday. She meditates on her past. How, when a child, her parents could not conceal their disappointment at her not being a boy, and how, after she had fallen in love with the boy who was adopted to be her playmate, he had been sent away to prevent their marriage. These and other incidents in the past recalled themselves to her mind. She notices that the clock has stopped. Too weak to wind it, Janet swings the pendulum, and dies as the clock strikes twelve.

Wedding Bells Shall Ring—Joker—April 5.—Mrs. Richsnop interrupts the tete-a-tete between a policeman and her maid, and the latter, in revenge, mails her mistress' photograph to a matrimonial agency. The result is that the Richsnob home is besieged with suitors for Mrs. Richsnob's hand. Her husband returns home and tries to make his way through the crowd, but is pushed back as a nervy applicant. He then summons a policeman, the maid's fiance. Prompted by the maid, the officer demands $500 for dispersing the crowd. Fearful for his wife's safety, Richsnob sonsents. The maid and the policeman now have money enough to get married.

The Guardian of the Flocks—Victor—(Two Reels)—April 5.—Starring J. Warren Kerrigan, George Periolat and Vera Sisson. Tony Tafoya, a goat herder, knows nothing about the outside world, and therefore is astonished beyond measure on seeing Rosaria, with whom he fell in love on his previous visit to town, permit McKnight, an American, to kiss her. To drown his anguish, Tony enters Pasquale's taberna, the Fonda, and drinks madly. McKnight enters and calls upon all to drink with him to the health of his future wife, Rosaria. Tony confronts him, and attempts to jerk from him neck the rosary and crucifix which the girl placed there, but only the star pendant comes away in his fingers. Bull McKnight's record as a quick shot is a subject of much admiration and awe in the little frontier town, but this time, for Rosaria's sake, he lets his assailant go uninjured. A year later Tony enters a deserted-looking cabin among the hills and, to his great surprise, discovers that it belongs to McKnight. As he sits, gun in hand, waiting for the man's return, Tony sees something move in a packing box near the window. Investigation discloses a little baby with a rosary and crucifix hanging about its neck, an empty hook revealing where a pendant once hung. When McKnight and Rosaria return at night they find the baby safe, and a star pendant hanging in its old place on the rosary.

Putting One Over—Big U—April 6.—The opening scene is of Bad Louis standing over Dave Herton, whom he has just killed. Pete and Red, his confederates, take his gun and escape. Hanson, from police headquarters, captures Louis without difficulty, but, unable to fasten the guilt on him, is compelled to let him go. He follows him to the tenement in which he lives, sees him picking up the gun left there by Red and Pete, and handcuffs him. Hanson asks about the baby lying on the bed, and in answer Louis tells him a sad story of the way his former sweetheart was mistreated by Herton, a theatrical manager, and that he (Louis) then married the girl to give her child a name. Hanson frees him and is about to leave when the police enter with Red and Pete. Louis makes a break for liberty, but is caught at the door. The police tell Hanson of their captives' confession, that Louis robbed Herton and then killed him. The detective looks at Louis and is greeted by a triumphant grin. Angry at having been fooled so easily, Hanson again handcuffs Louis and leads him to the station. Murdock MacQuarrie and Agnes Vernon featured.

The Mysterious Contragrav—Gold Seal—(Two Reels)—April 6.—Coxheim invents a wonderful machine that resists gravitation. It is called a contragrav, and is demonstrated before the government officials, who pronounce it the wonder of the age. Present at this demonstration is one Laloud, who secretly sells valuable information to foreign governments. Laloud gives Coxheim's name and address to the highest bidder, who then assigns Olga Belgram to the task of learning where the machine is kept. Olga succeeds, and shortly afterwards the contragrav disappears from its hiding place. Coxheim engages private detectives, not wishing the affair to be made public. They attach much importance to the fact that Olga was a patient in the house for a time, and miraculously recovered just before the machine disappeared. Coxheim's daughter, Laline, does some sleuthing on her own account and learns of Olga's visit to a suburban villa. She and her brother, Willard, alight in their aeroplane at the villa's door. They overpower Olga and her confederates, seize the contragrav and make off in their aeroplane. One of the foreigners pursues them. Seeing that he is gaining, Willard advises Laline to buckle on the contragrav and jump from the aeroplane. She does, and reaches home safely. Willard, however, is killed by a bomb dropped by the foreigner. William Clifford, Marie Walcamp and Lule Warrenton are seen in the principal parts.

Eddie's Little Nightmare—Nestor—April 6.—While waiting, engagement ring in hand, for his fiancee to finish dressing, Eddie falls asleep, and has a nightmare. He dreams that he and Victoria are married and have a large family. The children prove a source of constant misery to poor Eddie, who must take care of them while his wife attends her clubs' meetings. In addition to this the neighbors bestow upon him the honor of caring for their "little dears" also. Victoria, through at last, awakens Eddie, and asks him if he has brought the ring. He stammers out an excuse about having to leave at once for the Fiji islands and, after convincing her that they shouldn't become married, congratulates himself on his single blessedness. Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde, and Stella Adams.

His Captive—Laemmle—(Two Reels)—April 7.—Charles Landers' daughter marries far below her station in life. Her husband, a crook, is arrested and sent to prison. Shortly after the birth of her baby she dies, sending the child to her parents to be raised. Anita grows up to be her grandfather's idol and the pet of society. Paul Reeves, a famous western writer, meets her and they are mutually attracted to each other. He cares nothing for the frivolous pleasures of society, and tells Anita that life in the great West is beyond the understanding of such social butterflies as she. The next day Paul leaves for the West. Landers receives a letter from the foreman of the ranch, telling him of the continued depredations of the rustlers. He goes West, taking Anita with him. Here the girl and Reeves meet again. On leaving the cowboy-writer Anita sees a couple of cattle thieves at work, and is captured by them. Reeves, single-handed, attacks the rustlers in their den, but is overpowered. The arrival of the ranchmen saves him and Anita. The leader of the rustlers is killed in the fight. Landers recognizes him as his daughter's husband, Anita's father. Later Paul and the girl are married.

The Heart Breaker—Big U—(Two Reels)—April 8.—Charles Ogle and Muriel Ostriche starred. Phylis, a vivacious, fun-loving girl, is consigned by her aunt to the care of Mrs. Saxe on the opening of the Bleeding Heart Seminary. Phylis is accepted as leader by the other girls, and plans and leads many daring escapades. She captures the heart of Professor Silas Sniffles, a scholarly, religious old fossil, who heretofore has been the urgent suitor of the stern Mrs. Saxe. Sniffles keeps Phylis after class every night as an excuse to talk to her. Mrs. Saxe finds them together one afternoon and begins to fear for Sniffles' safety with the flirtatious girl. A fear that Sniffles may discontinue his wooing also steals into her mind. By showing the professor a hole in her stocking, Phylis entraps him into offering to buy her a pair of silk hose. Phylis' aunt arrives in answer to Mrs. Saxe's summons, and is shocked on learning that Sniffles has purchased silk hose for her niece. A general wrangle follows, and Phylis is taken out of school.

In the Clutch of the Emperor—Rex—April 8.—On leaving Rovania, Hal Gordon, owner of the Rovania-American steamship line, is presented with a gold dinner service by the emperor. Hiding in the steerage is Vera, a daring revolutionist, who is in danger of arrest for an attempt on the emperor's life. Hal comes across her and the two become interested in each other. Count Vorn, the Rovanian ambassador, also on board, receives a wireless message stating that Vera is on the ship. He determines to arrest her on reaching shore, and Hal makes up his mind that he shall not. He succeeds in, smuggling Vera, hiding in the service chest, aboard his yacht, and she reaches shore safely, where she is embraced by Hal. Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips starred.

The Butler's Busted Romance—Sterling—April 8.—Jiggs is informed by letter that he will receive a large fortune on marrying a certain girl, the choice of a dead relative. He carelessly leaves the letter lying on the table, where it is found by the butler. During Jiggs' absence a telegram is received from the gril, stating that she is on her way. The butler decides to impersonate his master and win the heiress. The cook, who is in love with the butler, causes him no little trouble, and he finds a rival in the chauffeur, who has also seen the letter. Jiggs returns in time to save his intended bride from the three quarreling servants.

The Broken Toy—Imp—(Two Reels)—April 9.—While searching in a trunk Merle comes across a ballet dress which revives old memories. She recalls dancing at a betrothal feast of a rich couple. After the performance, tired out, she seeks out a divan in an adjoining room, where she is joined by the fiance, Ralph Hilton. Here the bride-to-be finds them, and, angered, she breaks off her engagement with Hilton. He calls on Merle regularly and soon they become married. Then Merle realizes that she is but a rich man's toy. She breaks her ankle one day and, realizing that she will never be able to dance again, she leaves her husband, leaving him no clue as to her whereabouts. Then came baby Adele, and the struggle for existence grew harder. Merle is brought back to the present by Adele's cheerful voice. The little girl is delighted with the ballet dress, which is the one Merle wore when she first began to dance. That night Merle is taken ill, and Adele dons the filmy dress and enters a fashionable cafe. Her dancing attracts quite a bit of attention. Weak from hunger, the little girl falls to the floor. Hilton is among the crowd. He questions her and accompanies her home. There he meets his wife, Merle. They become reconciliated, and Merle and Adele move to the mansion in which Hilton has lived all this while alone. Violet Mersereau featured.

The Baby's Fault—Nestor—April 9.—Lee Grey likes to play poker, but his wife forbids it. One afternoon while she is away he takes the baby and sneaks over to Brown's apartments for a little game. Time passes fast, and before Grey realizes it it is time for his wife to return home. He hurries to beat her to Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

We are enclosing our subscription, and I want you to know how much "Motography" is appreciated; also how closely it is read. The little notice concerning our work, which you had in a recent number, has brought us many letters from all over the country. The thing which impressed me most was the many varied sources from which came the letters.

I think we will be able to send an interesting news item occasionally, and a little later I hope we will have need for some advertising space.

Very sincerely,

it, and succeeds by a small margin, but forgets all about the baby in his mad flight. He has not time to return for it, so wraps up a pillow and pretends that it is the baby. A policeman sees him hugging the pillow while he is on his way over to Brown's, and arrests him. In the meantime Brown discovers the baby in his rooms and sends it to the Grey home by messenger. Mrs. Grey thinks that her husband has left her because she will not allow him to play poker, and is overcome with grief. Grey is bailed out by Brown and returns with him to his apartment. There he witnesses a tearful scene in which his wife begs Brown to help her find her "poor, mistreated husband." Assuming a haughty air, Grey steps out from behind the curtains and, after considerable pleading on his wife's part, forgives her. Lee Moran, Billie Rhodes and Jack Dillon comprise the cast.

The Rustle of a Skirt—Victor—April 9.—Starring Mary Fuller and Matt Moore. Hal Farrel, a woman hater, lives with Dick Carew, a susceptible chap fond of high life. One day Carew's sister, whom Farrel has never seen, visits him in the office. Farrel is attracted to the girl and, on asking her identity, is informed by Carew that she is "Naughty Mabel," the burlesque queen. Marietta's first glimpse of Farrel impresses her greatly, and on learning from her brother that he is a woman hater, she bets him a fur coat that she can interest him. That night, after Carew has left, Marietta visits Farrel in his apartments, masked and armed, and holds him up. He does not mind being robbed by such a dainty thief, and even kisses her before she leaves. A few weeks later Carew invites Farrel to visit at his home in a distant city. Farrel accepts, and there again meets Marietta. He recognizes her as the thief, appreciates the joke and loses no time in proposing to her.

And They Called Him "Hero"—Bison (Two Reels)—April 10.—Jim, Joe and Pat are all in love with Betty. Joe and Pat enlist in the Union army and go to the front. Pat is given a message to carry through the Confederate lines. He meets Joe, and falls before him, exhausted. Joe, thinking him dead, delivers the message and is given credit for the deed. After the war Joe returns home, hailed as a hero, while Pat, released from Libby prison, is looked upon as a coward. In the meantime Betty has become married to Jim. Pat, disgusted with life, becomes a sort of a hermit. A big mansion is built across the road from his shack, and Jim and his wife move into it. One evening Pat meets a tramp on the roadway, and recognizes him as Joe. He forgives him for the wrong he has suffered at his hands and takes him into his shack. Betty becomes very ill and, Jim being absent, a servant appeals to Pat and Joe for aid. The two men go across to the mansion, where Betty recognizes them just before she dies. The story ends with a touching scene in which the lonesome Jim is seen to visit the men in the shack and join them in a game of checkers. Francis Ford featured.

Fares, Please—Joker—April 10.—Ernie and Eddie are rivals for the hand of fair Tillie. Eddie has the best of it, his conductor's uniform fascinating the girl. To get even, Ernie buys an automobile and runs it as a bus in competition with Eddie's car. Tillie deserts the conductor for his rival. Eddie sprinkles tacks along the track and Ernie's automobile is sadly disabled. A bandit who has just tried to hold up Eddie sees Ernie's passengers flock into the car. He boards it and starts off. Eddie and Ernie make up, fix the auto's tires and set out in pursuit. They find the deserted car and a notice telling them that Tillie has decided to marry the bandit and reform him.

Fox

From the Valley of the Missing—(Five Reels)—Fox.—A five-reel picture adapted from the story of Grace Miller White with Jane Miller featured. As the story goes, one night when millionaire Howard Brimbecome's yacht bumps into a barge on the river, Mrs. Brimbecome is handed an infant by someone aboard the barge, and later this infant is adopted by the Brimbecome's, and raised as their son, Everett. Next door to the Brimbecome's home resides Floyd Vandecar, nominee for governor or the state. His twin children, Fledra and Floyd, are kidnapped by Lem Crabbe, an ex-convict, who had been sent to prison years before by Vandecar, when he was district attorney. Vandecar had refused to permit Crabbe to see his wife and child before being sent to prison, but later had relented and visited the Crabbe home where he found Crabbe's wife dead, and adopts the infant girl found wailing on her breast. Not knowing of this, Crabbe after escaping from prison kidnaps Fledra and Floyd and raises them in his squatter's shack as "Flea" and "Flukey." Cronk, the real father of Everett, is a member of Crabbe's gang of river pirates, and to him Flea is promised in marriage, though learning of this the girl runs away with her brother, and is found and adopted by Anne Shellington, sister of Horace Shellington, who lives near the Brimbecome's. Everett Brimbecome, though engaged to Anne Shellington, meets and loves Flea, and hires Cronk to kidnap the girl and take her back to his barge. Vandecar has become governor and Flukey seeks him out to tell him about the case of his sister. Crabbe's name is accidentally mentioned and the governor realizes that the man talking to him is his kidnapped son. Crabbe is traced and Everett and Cronk are both found dead in his camp, where they have fought over Flea. The girl is saved and marries Horace Shellington, while Flukey is united in marriage to Anne Shellington.

General Special

Selig Athletic Series No. 1—Selig—April 5.—The first of the new series issued by the Selig Company and one which promises to become popular with the athletically inclined picture fans throughout the country. In this picture Oscar Egg, winner of the six-day bicycle race in Chicago, is seen breaking the indoor record for one mile. A billiard match between Koji Yomada, Japanese champion, and Albert Cutler of Boston and a wrestling bout between Dr. B. F. Roller of Seattle, and Frank Dalkus, the Lithuanian champion, also are shown. The latter is the real feature of the picture and is enjoyable from start to finish. Roller wins in two straight falls. Those who enjoy clean sports will doubtless favor this new innovation by the Selig Company.

Metro

The Heart of Maryland—(Five Reels)—Tiffany.—First release of the Tiffany Feature Film Company on the Metro Program with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the part she created on the stage, as Maryland Calvert. The picture was produced by Herbert Brennon and begins in the opening days of the Civil War when Alan Kendrick joins the Federal forces, though his father becomes a general in the Confederate army, and Maryland's brother, Floyd, becomes a spy for the Federal forces in the Confederate camp. Kendrick is taken prisoner and sent to the rebel headquarters in Maryland for exchange, but Colonel Thorpe, who recognizes him, sends him to the Union camp at Charlesville, hoping he will be killed in the night attack to be made by the Confederates. The Federals learn of the proposed surprise and rout the enemy. Later Kendrick is captured in an attempt to visit Maryland and court-martialed before his father. Floyd, meanwhile, is compelled to give evidence which convicts Alan of being a spy. The big scene in the picture shows Maryland's perilous climb to the belfry tower where she grasps the tongue of the bell in order to silence it and prevent the signal being given for Alan's execution. See review on page 530, issue of April 3.

Mutual Master Pictures

The Outcast—(Four Reels)—Reliance—A tensely emotional drama founded on the story of Thomas Nelson Page and played by Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Mary Alden, Ralph Lewis, Spootiswoode Aitken and Jack Dillon. The story is told in and about the courtroom where Mae, the outcast, is on trial for murder, and ends with the release of Mae after it is proven that the judge trying the case is the man who deserted her mother years before. See review on page 565, this issue.

His Friend the Captain—PATHE.—This is an American comedy dealing with the predicament of a young man who wakes up after a night of dissipation to find a ragged, bewhiskered tramp lying beside him in bed. Knowing that his father is expecting a Captain Braggart, whom he has never met, the young fellow decides to pass the tramp off as the captain to explain his presence in the house. The tramp overplays his part, and the arrival of the real captain climaxes the affair. A wild chase through the house follows, ending by the tramp's finding the door.
C. R. C.

Ashes of Dreams—PATHE.—A single-reel drama of distinct drawing power. Henry B. Walthall, famed for his work in "The Birth of a Nation" and other big features, plays the leading part, and is surrounded by a strong cast. No mistake will be made in booking this subject.

Miscellaneous

Through the Enemies' Line—(Four Reels)—Great Northern.—After distinguishing himself by aiding a hard pressed infantry regiment, Lieutenant Brenner is granted a furlough to visit his father who lives near the frontier. Disguised as a peddler he starts on his journey and incidentally saves the life of General Bradorf, the commander of the enemies' forces, who has become separated from his staff and is being attacked by some wandering marauders. Reaching his father's home the lieutenant finds the general there, and before leaving the next morning Bradorf finds a photo of the lieutenant and discovers a striking likeness between the peddler and the lieutenant. In token of his gratitude Bradorf gives Ellinor, the lieutenant's fiancee, a card, asking her to notify him any time that she or any of her kin are in danger. Sometime later the forces of the enemy take possession of the Brenner estate and a captain and some of the officers enter the house and discovering Brenner disguised arrest him as a spy. He manages to escape and join his own regiment. Enraged over the escape of the prisoner the captain places the lieutenant's father under arrest and threatens to shoot him unless his son returns before morning. By daring stratagem Ellinor gets news of this to her sweetheart and he returns, is captured and sentenced to be shot in two hours. Availing herself of General Bradorf's card she succeeds in saving the life of her sweetheart at the last moment and a happy reunion ends the story.

The Key to the Mystery—Picture Playhouse.—Leona Sheff is promised an enormous sum by the German Government if she will obtain the plans for the transportation of the troops from England to the Continent. About the same time Harold Culbert, secretary to the Minister of War, suffers a nervous breakdown and takes a two weeks' vacation with his old friends, Teddy Bainbridge and his sister, Elsie. En route to Camberly he meets Leona, and when she rents a cottage near his friends' estate he falls in love with her, thereby breaking the heart of Elsie, who loves him. Upon his return to town Leona calls at his office and steals the papers she went to secure, incriminating him in a very clever manner. Elsie, however, sets out to free him from the charge of treason and to solve the mystery of the disappearance of the papers. Her woman's wit gives her two substantial clues and after many narrow escapes and miraculous bravery she succeeds in bringing the spy to justice and clearing the name of Culbert.

Broken Vows—Trump—(Two Reels).—Mary Rawson, daughter of Colonel Rawson, becomes engaged to George Graham, son of Major Graham. Later, when Walter Thorndyke, captain in the American army, invalided home from the the Philippines, arrives to visit George, Mary meets and finally falls in love with him, though she realizes that her conduct is treacherous to her fiance. When Walter rescues her from a runaway, however, she declares her love and urges Walter to leave. Mary, meanwhile, is so moved by a poem she has read that when Thorndyke comes to her to say farewell she abandons herself to him absolutely. Mary goes to George to beg to be set free, and her fiance, learning his best friend has betrayed his trust, determines to kill him, though Mary pleads for his life. When Walter calls on George and confesses the wrong he has done him, the fiance magnanimously frees Mary and places her hand in that of Walter.

Billy Convincing Father—Santa Barbara.—Fanny loves Billy, a young doctor, but father objects and when Fanny pretends illness, summons in an old reliable family doctor, who connives with the lovers and quickly cures Fanny. Father finally agrees that when Billy is as good a doctor as the family physician, he may marry Fanny. Billy plans to convince father that he is ill, by mental suggestion. He summons the family doctor who gives him some bad tasting medicine and father, then genuinely ill, summons Billy. The latter, using a pill composed of cheese, runs an electric vibrator up and down his back, and the effects of the drug given by the family physician having worn off, father considers himself cured and agrees to the engagement of the lovers.

The Greater Power—Santa Barbara—(Two Reels).—A young doctor, who has made a specialty of aphasia, breaks down from overwork and goes to a fishing village, where he meets and falls in love with the daughter of the lighthouse keeper. He is himself stricken with the disease he has treated and loses all memory of the past. From the lighthouse keeper the doctor learns the story of a little girl, supposedly drowned, who is really living in the city, from which he came, with the chief of a band of gypsies. The lighthouse keeper's daughter, under the name of Zara, believes the gypsy is her father and from him has learned hypnotism. Suddenly the doctor's mind returns and he goes back to his old life. He meets the twin sister of the lighthouse keeper's daughter and falls in love with her. An old gypsy crone, Ogar by name, betrays the real identity of Zara to the doctor and his engagement to her sister being thus recalled he returns to the lonely lighthouse for her.

The Stolen Invention—Monty—(Two Reels).—Dan Newcombe invents a motor which he tries to sell to the Morgan Engineering Company, but that concern tells him the invention is useless and he dies of disappointment. They have, however, stolen the idea and made a fortune by manufacturing the device. Mary Newcombe, the inventor's daughter, is obliged to seek employment and thus meets Bob Madison to whom she becomes engaged. Morgan is interested in the concern where Mary and Bob are working and is struck by Mary's beauty. He gets Bob fired and arranges with an actress that Mary be lured to her apartments. Mary is doped while visiting the actress and imprisoned in a room, though when the acress sees her saying her bedtime prayers she resolves to protect her and when Morgan calls puts him out at the point of a revolver. Morgan and his secretary quarrel with Bob on the street, and Morgan believes he has killed Bob when the latter falls to the pavement. He jumps into a nearby auto to escape and is found the next morning dead, under the overturned machine. The secretary gives Bob the necessary evidence to win a fortune for Mary from the engineering company who had stolen her father's invention.

Light Fingered Syd—Alhambra.—Sargent gives his wife money to buy their daughter a birthday present and she purchases a bracelet which is later stolen from her by Syd. The daughter quarrels with her sweetheart in the park and, later, meeting Syd, flirts with him, whereupon he gives her the bracelet and escorts her home. She keeps him waiting in the hall while she goes in to show her gift to her parents and they, recognizing the bracelet, capture Syd.

The Hawk and the Hermit—Paragon—(Two Reels).—Bob Shaw and his wife Kate are annoyed by the Hawk, a notorious town character. Bob one day licks the Hawk in a fight. The latter retaliates by burning his store. Bob has won the friendship of old John, a prospector, nicknamed "the hermit" and when the latter strikes a rich claim he visits Bob to give him a half interest in the claim. The Hawk and Steve, his pal, learn of the gold discovery and plan to secure the paper that tells the location of the mine. The Hawk pretends to be killed by Bob, and Steve summons a party who prepare to lynch Bob. Kate, meanwhile, is visited by the hermit and, after failing to find the sheriff, sets out to rescue Bob herself. She meets the Hawk and as he is about to attack her, Steve is shot by the arriving sheriff's posse and as he falls his gun is discharged, killing the Hawk. Bob and Kate are both freed and with John the hermit proced to their claim.

Taming Father—Thistle.—Father objects to Rena marrying Fred and leaves for the office where he flirts with his stenographer, who angrily leaves. He advertises for a new typist and Rena arranges with Fred, who is employed in a motion picture studio, to make up as a girl and apply for the job. He does so and with the assistance of a chum causes father much misery. To get out of his embarrassing position father consents to Rena marrying Fred, when Fred removes his make-up and discloses his real identity.

The Miser of Monterey—(Two Reels)—Monty.—Frank Johnson, a young author, hunting in the forest happens to linger near the spot where an old miser has hidden all of his money. The miser, thinking him a thief, shoots him and Johnson, wounded, is carried to the miser's home by Mary, the elder daughter, who falls desperately in love with him, though Johnson prefers Ellen, Mary's younger sister. Johnson proposes to Ellen, and she agrees to wait his return from the city. On reaching the city the author finds his books have made him a fortune and later, a rich man, returns to claim Ellen. Mary accepts her fate with resignation and Ellen and Frank are married, neither of them dreaming that Mary's heart is broken.

New Combination Announces Releases

Other Important News of the Week

THE Essanay Film Manufacturing Company this week has confirmed the story which appeared in the last issue of MOTOGRAPHY to the effect that the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay firms are to unite in the releasing of big feature productions direct to the exhibitor is true in every particular and goes still farther by announcing the first of the big releases, which are to make up the Essanay Company's part of the feature program.

The famous George Ade musical comedy "The Slim Princess" has been made into a four-act photoplay in which Francis X. Bushman and Ruth Stonehouse are featured, and this will be the first of the gigantic productions to be offered direct to the exhibitor by the Essanay faction of the big four consolidation. Another still greater production will be "Graustark," adapted from the famous novel by George Barr McCutcheon, and in this Francis X. Bushman and Beverley Bayne will be the featured players.

Still another is "The Crimson Wing" a six-act drama from the pen of Hobart Chatfield Taylor, this photoplay featuring E. H. Calvert, Beverley Bayne and Ruth Stonehouse.

Viola Allen, the renowned actress, is to begin her work on "The White Sister" at the Essanay studios in the immediate future, and work on a number of other famous plays is already under way. Among those which are best known to the public and are scheduled for early release are the following: "The Yankee Consul," which was Raymond Hitchcock's starring vehicle, "The Prince of Graustark," from the famous McCutcheon novel, "A Bunch of Keys," one of the most successful of the Hoyt comedies, "The Tin Soldier," another of the famous Hoyt successes, "The Aviator," by James Montgomery, "The Lost Paradise," by Arnold Kummer, "Lost 24 Hours," Robert Hilliard's great success, and scores of others yet to be announced.

The Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., is the title under which the new exchanges now being opened will be known and according to an announcement which appears in the advertising section of this issue, branch offices are now open in New York, Atlanta, Chicago, Dallas, Kansas City and San Francisco. The street addresses of each of these offices will probably be given next week.

Selig's Special Features

In the near future the Selig Polyscope Company will also release a number of Selig Spectacular Specials through the new "big four" combination. Each pictureplay will be five reels or more in length.

Included in the number are "The Millionaire Baby," the story of mystery and adventure from the pen of Anna Katherine Green, in which Harry Mestayer, Grace Darmond, John Charles and other star performers are featured; "A Texas Steer," in which Tyrone Power assumes the role of "Maverick Brander"; "The Rosary," an adaptation of the famous stage play of the same name, written by Edward E. Rose, who also wrote the film version, and "The Carpet From Bagdad," a wonderful drama of the oriental, written by Harold MacGrath.

Magie Succeeds Bernstein

Universal City will see the horn-spectacled, white-flanneled figure of Isadore Bernstein no more.

Mr. Bernstein, for the last two years general manager of the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Company, has resigned, and in his place now reigns George Magie, one of the best known exchangemen who ever represented the Universal Company, and more recently its district manager in the Chicago territory.

At this time it is also announced a new policy has been adopted for the management of Universal City and its west coast producing companies, since the management of the vast Universal plant at Los Angeles will no longer be under the direction of one individual, but in the future will be superintended by five managers, each of whom will look after several companies of players.

Beverley Griffith is to be business manager of the Christie, Lyons, Allen, Curtis and Francis Ford companies; Stanly Twist will be business manager for the DeGrasse, Giblyn and Turner companies; Don Meaney will be business manager for the Ayres, McRea and Bosworth companies; Marshall Stedman will be business manager for the Lloyd, MacQuarrie and Gauntier companies, and Charles V. Henkel will be manager of the Smalley, Leonard, King and Chaney companies.

Pennsylvania Film Men Complain

Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, was the gathering place on Tuesday evening, March 30, of film men from all over the state of Pennsylvania, at which time the house of representatives took under consideration the proposed bill to repeal the censorship law now in force in that state.

In addition to a number of Harrisburg exhibitors and show men from other nearby towns, the motion picture interests were represented by J. H. Buttner, of the Mutual Film Exchange, Philadelphia; George W.

Bennethum, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Gilbert W. Sahner, chairman of the film men's legislative committee; H. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia; F. J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh; Ben Zerr, president of the Pennsylvania Exhibitors' League, Reading; Frank A. Gould, of Reading; Peter Megaro, Harrisburg; Charles Segall, Philadelphia; J. W. Binder, of the National Board of Censorship of New York City and W. Stephen Bush, also of New York.

Samuel F. Wheeler, of Philadelphia, was the first speaker of the evening, he being introduced by Gilbert W. Sahner, chairman of the film men's legislative committee. Mr. Wheeler described briefly the effects of censorship on not alone the manufacturer, but also the exhibitor and the public, pointing out that the artistic and commercial value of many of the pictures was utterly destroyed.

He was followed by Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, who pointed out the dangers of censorship to free institutions, and Mr. Herrington in turn was followed by W. Stephen Bush, who pointed out the many failures of censorship in the past, and emphatically declared that Pennsylvania, as a state, had never demanded it, in fact, that there was a strong demand for the repeal of the law, as indicated by a recent mass meeting held in Philadelphia.

After these speakers opposed to the bill had finished their addresses, Charles Everly Carpenter, representing Kensington manufacturers, and a suffragette speaker took the floor, and in speaking in behalf of the bill said that since manufacturers did not object to investigations of their factories, the film men ought not to object to the censoring of their films.

The hall was then darkened, and a motion picture comedy, one in which a policeman is hit over the head with a rubber mallet, was shown. J. Louis Breitinger, the chief motion picture censor of Pennsylvania, claimed that this comedy was an outrage on lawful authority. It apparently impressed the legislators otherwise, as hearty laughter followed its screening.

Mr. Breitinger then proposed to show a number of "cutouts" that he had made, but on learning that he intended to only show the portion he had cut out, rather than the entire subject, the film people present refused to permit the use of their machine for the purpose, and there being no other machine available, this portion of the investigation had to be dispensed with.

Members of the judiciary committee insisted on seeing only the "cutouts" and would not even consider the proposition to show the entire film subject, while the film people stood equally pat on their decision not to permit the use of their machine unless the whole subject was run.

Having reached a deadlock, the gathering began to display considerable excitement, whereupon, the chairman of the committee declared the session closed.

Horsley Entertains Vice President

A big reception was held last Thursday evening at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles in honor of Vice-President Thomas R. Marshall and Mrs. Marshall, and attended by the heads of California's leading industries. The motion picture interests were represented by David Horsley, managing director of the Centaur Film Company, who was present as a specially invited guest.

The vice-presidential party is enjoying the sights of California en route to Washington from San Francisco, where Mr. Marshall officially opened the Panama Exposition. Mr. Marshall is particularly interested in motion pictures and at the invitation of Mr. Horsley paid a visit to the new Horsley studios and the Bostock Arena and Jungle, which Mr. Horsley also controls, in Los Angeles. The vice-president was deeply impressed with its completeness and warmly congratulated Mr. Horsley upon his enterprise. For the benefit of the distinguished visitors a special rehearsal performance was given by the wild animal performers of the Bostock Arena and Jungle, with which Mrs. Marshall was particularly delighted.

New Concern for Alliance

The Dramatic Producing Company, recently organized in Los Angeles by Frank J. Baum, has completed all arrangements with President Cobe of the Alliance Films Corporation to release its productions on the Alliance Programme. Mr. Baum's first production is "The Little Grey Nun of Belgium," now in the making.

The star of the initial release will be Miss Catherine Countiss, and the supporting company includes David Proctor, who played with Miss Countiss in several of her stage successes, while Betty Pierce, another notable player, will be seen as the Mother Superior.

Mr. Baum, who was a recent visitor in New York, secured the film rights to several of the most successful works published during the past year, and as soon as the present production is completed work will immediately begin upon one of these subjects.

A Wire from Betzwood

South Philadelphia, Pa., 2:25 P.M., April 7, 1915.
MOTOGRAPHY, 1460 Monadnock Bldg., Chicago, Ills.

Reports of fire at Lubin Ranch, Betzwood, Pa., greatly exaggerated. Fire did very small damage, just burning the interior of one building which we were not using. Profiting by our last fire, we constructed our new plant along lines that would make it impossible to have any serious loss by fire. Most buildings were built in duplicate. Our negative vaults are situated a thousand feet from any building and consequently could never be destroyed by a fire in another building. We have a number of these vaults and there is not a building within a thousand feet of any of them. Our work was not interrupted in any way.

IRA M. LOWRY.

Walker Whiteside Engaged

Walker Whiteside, the famous Broadway star, has but recently been lured away from the footlights to play the leading role in "The Melting Pot," a new special feature, which is being produced at the Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, New Jersey, by the J. Cort Film Company. "The Melting Pot" met with great success some years ago at the Comedy theater, New York City, where it played for one season; and with the help of Mr. Whiteside, who played the leading part, its picturization is expected to meet with the same universal popularity.

J. & M. Using Centaur Studio

The J. & M. Film Company will shortly start producing comedies of one-reel length at the studios of the Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, New Jersey. It was here that the famous MinA comedies were first produced, but since the departure of that company to the Coast the studio, which is of the very latest model, has been rented out to well-known producing companies.

New Era for Chicago

Chicago now takes its place in the forefront of cities which may boast of a truly splendid and appropriate theater for the presentation of photoplay productions. After May 1 the midland metropolis will no longer appear backward in not having first grade facilities for the observation of great feature dramas. On that date a new era in filmdom will be inaugurated with the opening of Orchestra Hall, refitted as an attractive and artistic home of motion pictures. Orchestra Hall is a structure of international prominence, splendidly located on Michigan avenue, between Jackson boulevard and East Adams street, and is the music lovers' temple, dedicated to the famous Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

The new enterprise has been described picturesquely as the opening of a moving picture "grand opera season." To the classical accompaniment of a symphony orchestra of twenty-five artists, continuous programs of exclusive Paramount productions will be offered.

All discords to the ear and other senses will be removed from the auditor's range of sensations in Orchestra Hall. The visitor will "live in the screen" and attain complete forgetfulness of playhouse surroundings, while the screen is aglow with photographic activity. In the intermissions there will be a diversion amid entrancing surroundings—in the form of symphony orchestra concerts, varied by recitals on the famous Orchestra Hall pipe organ and vocal selections by prominent soloists.

"Built up to a standard, not down to a price," is the motto of the Strand Theater Company, which has leased Orchestra Hall for a term. In all particulars the policy will be on a par with that of the princely Strand Theater in New York, which in that city has revolutionized the projecting of motion pictures, as well as standards of beauty, comfort and convenience for the playgoer. However, the Strand Theater Company is an organization of Chicago business men, leaders in the enterprise being E. C. Divine, A. J. Pardridge and J. S. Interrieden. The managing director and secretary will be Edward Q. Cordner, formerly identified with New York amusement organizations.

Thanhouser Introduces "Falstaff"

Beginning with the release of Friday, April 16, the Princess releases from the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle, N. Y., will be replaced by a new brand known as Falstaff. In choosing this well-known comedy character to represent the new brand, Mr. Thanhouser exemplifies a high type of comedy. To name the brand after Shakespeare's famous punster, means that a definite policy is laid out for the Falstaff releases.

This is about in line with the series of changes which have been expected since Mr. Thanhouser returned to take charge of the forces at New Rochelle. Those who remember his comedies of three years ago know what to expect, while exhibitors to whom the Thanhouser brand of comedy is new will no doubt watch developments with interest. The Falstaff brand will be released every Friday.

No Conspiracy

Under a decision of Justice Page in the Supreme Court, handed down recently, the Universal Film Company, a $2,000,000 corporation, is now at liberty to go ahead with plans to increase its capital stock to $3,500,000 and retire all its preferred stock if its stockholders so see fit.

The court denied an application of David Horsley, a stockholder, who controls 500 shares of common stock and 500 of preferred, for an injunction restraining the corporation from calling special meetings of the stockholders to vote on both propositions.

Horsley, in his injunction application, declared that Patrick A. Powers and the other directors and stockholders of the Universal Film Company had entered into a conspiracy to deprive him of the benefit of his stock by planning to retire all the preferred stock through the simple expedient of paying it off at par with accrued and accumulated dividends. This would practically nullify his holdings and leave him out in the cold, he claimed.

The defendants declared their action was a business proposition pure and simple. Justice Page agreed with them, stating in his decision there was no evidence of any conspiracy to injure the plaintiff and that Horsley himself had been present at a stockholders' meeting at which a resolution was adopted providing for the retirement of the preferred stock at any time by paying it off at par.

New Selig Three Reelers

In the near future, the Selig Polyscope Company will release a series of three-reel specials through the regular service of the General Film Company. These three-reel picture plays are elaborate in every way and they will undoubtedly be appreciated by the motion picture exhibitors and their patrons.

"The Quarry" is a three-reel Selig drama adapted from the novel of the same name written by John Moraso. It was arranged for the screen by Gilson Willets. It tells in dramatic fashion of "third degree" methods and the futility of circumstantial evidence. Miss Grace Darmond takes the leading feminine role and is supported by John Charles, Frederick Hand, William Wade and others.

"His Father's Rifle," is a Selig Jungle Zoo wild animal drama in three reels written by Joseph F. Poland. Wm. Howard, Stella Razeto, Guy Oliver and others star. Wild animals are featured and there is an unusually vital plot.

"Two Boys In Blue," is a Selig three-reel drama written and directed by Tom Mix. There is a running fight with Indians, an attack on a stage coach and other exciting and spectacular features including some daring horsemanship.

"How Callahan Cleaned Up Little Hell," was produced in three reels by Thomas Santschi from the story by I. K. Friedman. It tells a convincing and exciting story of current politics.

Helen Ware with Cosmos

A. H. Jacobs, president of the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation, has signed Helen Ware to appear in one or more feature pictures. Miss Ware's remarkable performance in "The Third Degree" is well remembered, as is her equally wonderful work in "Within the Law."

The play selected by the Cosmos Feature Film

Corporation in which Miss Ware will make her first screen appearance, will be announced as soon as a play capable of her abilities can be determined upon.

Thanhouser's Triple Coup

Now the big announcements are beginning to issue from New Rochelle. The long arm of Thanhouser is reaching out for material and the first additions are already there at work. They are Miss Lorraine Huling and Messrs. George Foster Platt and Frederick Sullivan. The lady is an ingenue and the gentlemen are on the staff of directors.

Lorraine Huling is best known to the pictures through her work with the Famous Players in "The Straight Road," "Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch" and "Bachelor's Romance," with John Emerson and Henrietta Crosman. She is a graduate of the legitimate, however, having appeared in "Prunella," "Help Wanted," and other successes. Miss Huling has been widely known in art circles for her accomplishments in conjunction with Charles Dana Gibson, Irving Wiles and Charles Penfield, is gifted as a linguiste, and she is a master (or mistress?) of German, French and a number of dead languages. She has traveled and studied abroad, and Mr. Thanhouser has now selected her to head one of the regular companies of the New Rochelle organizations.

George Foster Platt comes to Thanhouser's straight from the loftiest points of accomplishment in the world of the speaking stage, for that phrase befits the position of stage director of modern plays at the New Theater, New York. At this famous institution of dramatic art he produced "The Bluebird," "Strife," "The Witch," and other plays. He was chosen for that high place because of a career remarkable for its succession of notable achievements. Among the great artists with whom he has staged productions are Henry Dixey, Carlotta Nielson, Charlotte Walker and Margaret Anglin.

Frederick Sullivan's appearance at New Rochelle is really a re-engagement, for until about half a year ago he was a producer of Thanhouser films. Previous to that he was with the Reliance forces and his stage experience is very much in support of the Thanhouser policy. In the legitimate he has directed such stars as Blanche Bates, Rose Coghlan, Blanche Walsh, John Mason, Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon. A great many of his plays were under Liebler and Klaw & Erlanger management, ranging from musical comedy to drama.

It is said at New Rochelle that these announcements are only the beginning; that some of the moves in contemplation will be startling in the quality of talent which they will add to the Thanhouser roster.

Change in Edison Program

Beginning Monday, April 19, the single-reel, which Edison has for some time been releasing on alternate Mondays, will be dropped from the program. This has been brought about by the adding to the studio's production a weekly three-reel feature, upon which Edison is spending considerable effort to prove their contention that no play, no matter in how many reels told, can surpass the strength of compactness in the three-reeler well produced. The releasing of the three-reelers, which Edison has been putting out on alternate Mondays will not be affected by this new Monday program.

Colonial Signs Louis Simon

The Colonial Motion Picture Corporation this week announced that they had signed Louis "Louie" Simon, the well known comedian of the speaking stage, to appear in comedies which will be known as the "Artless Algy" series. The marketing arrangements have not been completed as yet, but an announcement in regard to this is expected within a short time.

Only last week Colonial announced that it had made arrangements with the United Film Service to market, under the brand name of Cameo, its comedies known as the "Leave It To Your Uncle Dudley" series and a short time ago its first big production "The Seats of the Mighty" was released by the World Film Corporation.

New Strand Theaters

A new Strand theater is now under construction in Lynn, Mass. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 2,000 and represents an expenditure of $250,000. It is located on Union street and takes in an entire block measuring 22,500 square feet. Thomas W. Lamb, who drew the plans for the Strand theater in Manhattan, is the architect, and Moe Mark is the president of the company controlling the theater, which will open September 1. The building will be similar to the New York Strand and will contain stores and offices. Mr. Mark will also erect a new Strand theater in Worcester, Mass., which will have a seating capacity of 2,000.

Big New England Corporation

The Olympic Theaters, Inc., with a capital of $7,000,000, is the latest concern to enter the field of New England exhibitors. It will operate a string of houses in Lynn, Gloucester, Chelsea, New Haven, New Bedford and Boston.

The officers of the new corporation are: Nathan H. Gordon, president; Frank J. Howard, first vice-president; Max Shoolman, second vice-president; Ernest H. Horstman, clerk; Gerald G. E. Street, Lee M. Friedman, Hiram E. Miller, George W. Crocker and Henry C. Atwill, directors.

Changes in National Electric Code

The regular biennial revision of the National Electrical Code took place at a series of meetings of the Electrical Committee of the National Fire Protection Association held in New York City March 22 to 25.

The report of the Committee on Theater Wiring was adopted as previously printed. Rule 38k was amended to require arc lamps to be constructed of metal of thickness not less than gauge No. 20. Rule 38u 7 was amended by striking out the words "properly ventilated" and adding the following:

Ventilation for permanent booths must be provided by means of a vent pipe having a cross section of not less than 78 square inches; said pipe leading to the outside of the building or to a special non-combustible vent flue. All parts of vent pipe to be at least one inch from any combustible material or separated therefrom by means of approved non-combustible heat-insulating material not less than one-half inch in thickness.

A fan capable of exhausting fifty cubic feet of air per minute shall be installed and arranged in such a way, that gas and smoke passing through the vent flue shall not come in contact with the motor. The motor must be connected to the emergency service and must not be controlled from the booth.

All openings into this booth must be arranged so as to be entirely closed by doors or shutters constructed of the same or equally good fire-resisting material as the booth itself. Doors or covers must be arranged so as to be held normally closed by spring hinges or equivalent devices.

Rule 38 v is amended to read as follows:

v. Moving-Picture Equipments of Approved Miniature Type for Home, Lecture and Similar Purposes.

1. All equipments must be expressly approved, and such approval must cover the entire machine, including all attachments, current-controlling devices and other parts employed, including also the film.

2. The entire equipment must consume not more than 660 watts.

3. Arc lamps must be constructed so far as practicable in accordance with the requirements of No. 38*k*, 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6, and incandenscent lamps must be suitably inclosed. In either case the inclosure must be so ventilated or guarded that no outside exposed surfaces will attain a temperature exceeding 250 degrees Fahrenheit under conditions of continuous service.

4. Rheostats, transformers, switches and other similiar current-controlling devices must be attached to and form a part of the machine, must have no live parts exposed, and must comply with the requirements of No. 65 and No. 78 or No. 81 a, b, c.

5. Films must be of an approved slow-burning type having a permanent distinctive marker.

6. Machines must be so constructed that they cannot be used with films employed on the full-sized commercial moving-picture machine. This may be accomplished by using a film of special width or with special perforations or by any other approved means.

Note.—The regular film which is not allowed on miniature machines is 1⅜ inches wide and has on each edge 5.4 perforations per inch.

7. Machines must be marked with the name or trademark of the maker, and with the voltage and current rating for which they are designed, and be plainly marked, "For use with slow-burning films only."

To Rival "Little Mary"

Lottie Pickford, sister of the popular Mary, will play the star feminine role in "The Diamond From the Sky"—"The Flying A's" picturized romantic novel that will be released May 3 in conjunction with the newspaper publication of the story in hundreds of metropolitan journals.

Messrs. Hutchinson and Freuler who preside over the destinies of the American Film Manufacturing Company were determined to get a Pickford in their cast. Negotiations were opened months ago for the purpose of securing Mary herself, but it developed that Mary's contract was of such a nature as to absolutely preclude any consideration of the proposition presented.

It is hinted, however, that Mary, who has developed a keen business acumen, was in a sense instrumental in Lottie taking the part wherein it was originally intended she should appear. The younger Pickford star's work on the screen was carefully scrutinized by the American's staff of directors and after some negotiations at Los Angeles, she entered the employ of the American Company.

Miss Pickford's personality and physique are particularly adapted for the part of the charming heroine, Esther Stanley. This is a sympathetic role, full of dramatic possibilities. Jacques Jaccard, the noted director of the American Film Manufacturing Company, who is personally in charge of the work on the screen novel, says that in all his experience he never found any one who fitted into the scheme of a big moving picture project as readily as Lottie. This, perhaps, is due to the family's peculiar adaptability to moving pictures.

With the extraordinary publicity that will accompany "The Diamond From the Sky" it is very probable that the younger Pickford's name and face will become as much of a household word as that of her famous elder sister.

John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Corporation, reports that preliminary bookings on "The Diamond From the Sky" have exceeded all records. Since the opening of the executive headquarters in Chicago and New York, requests for dates have averaged 200 a day.

Selig's New Series

Miss Irene Wallace, new leading lady for the Selig Polyscope Company, will star as "Margaret Tate," editress of the "Bloom Center Weekly Bugle," in a series of rural comedies called "Chronicles of Bloom Center," soon to be released by that concern. Ralph McComas has been engaged for the part of "Johnny West," the fat office boy, while Harold Howard, another recent acquisition to the Selig forces, will enact the role of "Percy Pinkham," in love with Margaret.

For use of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," a typical rural village, such as dot the United States, has been erected at the Jungle-Zoo. It is complete even to the town pump.

Censorship Condemned

The Cleveland Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held its first meeting in its new quarters on Tuesday, March 23, and was there addressed by Samuel Silbert, police prosecutor, who took a definite stand against motion picture censorship in an address delivered before the exhibitors. In part Mr. Silbert said:

"Legalized censorship to my mind is unconstitutional and should be abolished. It seems ludicrous to believe that three persons, picked for the Ohio board of censors, can pass judgment on the quality of pictures 6,000,000 people in the state must watch. The National Board of Censors, as operating in New York, with more than 100 people offering suggestions for the production of good pictures, is very naturally a successful and commendable board. But the situation in this state is a reversal of this good judgment."

Following Mr. Silbert's address, Detroit was recommended as the city for the next national convention, this recommendation being sent to President Marion S. Pearce of the national organization.

The Cleveland exhibitors also passed a resolution condemning the Benedict bill now before the legislature.

Detroit Now Censorless

Detroit, Michigan, is one city in the country which will not suffer from censorship for some time at least. At least, if Detroit citizens want motion picture censorship, they will have to do the censoring themselves, as the money which previously was used for defraying the expenses of censorship in Detroit has been all expended.

Commissioner Gillespie of the police board declares emphatically that the police department will do no more censoring and declares that no pictures will be banned unless citizens make complaint, when the department will send a man to investigate the particular picture complained of, otherwise all policemen who have been censoring films will be withdrawn from that duty.

Washington Elects Officers

The Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia held its annual business meeting in Washington, D. C., last week, and the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: Harry M. Crandall, president; Joseph P. Morgan, first vice-president; Thomas Eastwood, second vice-president; Harry P. Moorehead, secretary; Robert H. Campbell, Jr., treasurer; C. J. Bedell, sergeant-at-arms and Dr. William P. Herbst, Maurice Davis, Mrs. Mark A. Brame, Fulton Brylawski and A. F. Fox, Jr., members of the board of directors.

Dixie Company Located

Captain L. A. Boening and E. W. McKinney, Chicago organizers of the Dixie Film Manufacturing Company, which intends to make motion pictures for the Pathe Company, have arrived in Mobile, Alabama, and will make that city their headquarters. The company they represent has secured a large tract of land on the Tchouticabouffa river near the city of Mobile, and will at once begin work.

Some Interesting Industrials

George L. Cox, producer and general manager of the Advance Motion Picture Company, left last week for Akron, Ohio, to make a six-reel industrial film for the Firestone Tire Company, showing the manufacture of auto and bicycle tires from the crude rubber to the finished product.

Mr. Cox has made an extensive study of the rubber industry and has arranged with the Firestone Company to have it exhibit some short films showing the gathering of crude rubber as a prologue to the industrial part of the film.

Large oxy-acetylene manufacturers are conferring with Mr. Cox regarding the showing of their product in use through the medium of motion pictures, Cox having been the only producer so far to get a successful picture of this process. In his "Wreck of the Vega," made some years ago for Selig, an oxy-acetylene flame was used to cut up the steel deck of the ship and excellent pictures of the work were taken, notwithstanding the fact that the flame of the oxyacetylene torch is one of the brightest flames known and exceedingly difficult to photograph.

New Producing Company

The Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune is enthusiastic over the arrival in that city of Wallace D. Coborne, known as "the cowboy poet of Montana," and his moving picture company, which claims to be capitalized at $100,000, and expects to erect a studio and begin productions in and about Great Falls and Havre, Montana.

Mr. Coborne claims that all the real cowboys, riders, ropers, bulldoggers and gunmen living are to be gathered into the moving picture company by the International Theatrical Association, the name of Mr. Coborne's concern, and will participate in dramas based on real incidents of Montana's historical episodes. Old placer mining days, the night herd watches of the cowboys, the vigilante chases after horse thieves and the days of the roundup, which Artist Russell has immortalized in his pictures and Mr. Coborne in his poems, will be produced in motion pictures, if present plans are carried out.

Fielding Company to Move

Roscoe Karns, as advance representative of the Romaine Fielding Lubin company, now producing films at Phoenix, Arizona, has arrived at San Diego, California, and announces that the Fielding company will very soon establish itself in that city for an indefinite period, Mr. Karns having been sent ahead to make arrangements for the coming of the company.

Thanhouserites in Georgia

Savannah, Georgia, is just now the scene of operations for a Thanhouser motion picture stock company in which Miss Florence La Badie is the leading woman and Eugene Moore chief director. The company is putting on a four-reel feature entitled "At the Mercy of the Tiberius."

Ince to Make Spectacular Features

Not content with supplying the Mutual program with one and two reel subjects weekly and turning out several Mutual Master-Pictures each month, Thomas H. Ince, the director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has announced his intention of producing several big multiple reel spectacles each year. Those who have seen the films released under the Domino, Kay-Bee and Broncho brands, all of which bear the imprint of Mr. Ince's personality, will doubtless look forward to the completion of his first big subject with great interest. He has won the reputation of being one of the busiest men in the motion picture business and the many productions which come from Inceville at regular intervals furnish entertainment to millions daily. Working fifteen to eighteen hours a day is not an infrequent occurrence in the life of Mr. Ince, for when he sets out to do a thing he will not rest until it has been completed.

New Mutual Exchange

Exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory will learn with pleasure that on April 1, 1915, the Mutual Film Corporation opened a branch exchange at 420 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. The exchange is under the management of Sydney E. Abel. It will handle Mutual releases exclusively, beginning with the issues of April 1 and thereafter.

The Mutual Film Corporation invites the patronage of all exhibitors and pledges them and their interests the same loyal care and attention in this territory that exhibitors have been accustomed to receive throughout the country.

Secure Fine Studio Site

The Pathe producers, Wharton, Inc., announce that they have leased with option of purchase, Renwick Park, a well known lakeside resort at Ithaca, N. Y. The property has been used as an amusement resort for some years, and comprises 45 acres of land situated at the head of beautiful Cayuga Lake and lying between the lake and the city. A city trolley line runs into the park and furnishes excellent service.

A number of large buildings, such as auditoriums, pavilions, etc., on the place need only a little remodeling to make them very well adapted to picture work. There are frontier settlement streets, log cabins—all the locations necessary to western work—as well as a splendid 400 foot pier extending into the lake.

Equally beautiful locations would be difficult to find anywhere in the East. Winding streams, waterfalls, tiny lakes and a virgin forest of the most magnificent trees are a few of the attractions. The park is widely known for the extraordinary number and variety of the birds to be found there. Louis Agassiz Fuertes, the well known ornithologist, uses the place as his study ground, so remarkably rich is it in bird life. It is said that at some time or other during the year every specie of bird known in Northeastern America visits the park.

Altogether the Whartons have secured a studio site which presents extraordinary attractions.

Lubin Guest of Critics

Siegmund Lubin, head of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, will have a rather unusual honor conferred upon him next week when the dramatic critics of Philadelphia will tender him a dinner in the Hotel Majestic. The Philadelphia critics have an organization known as The Critics Association, of which George Rogers, of The Inquirer, is president, and Henry Starr Richardson of The Evening Star secretary.

Some months ago Mr. Lubin invited the critics to spend a day at his studio and to meet the men and women who write, direct, act and make the Lubin photoplays. They came in a body and saw everything there was to see from an inside point of view. Mr. Lubin told them of his early days when he was experimenting in his cellar and back yard with motion pictures and then showed them some of his newest unreleased productions.

So interested were the critics in inspecting the inner workings of the motion picture industry that they unanimously accepted Mr. Lubin's invitation to visit his ranch at Betzwood and see the work that is being carried on there. At the dinner next week Mr. Lubin and the newspaper men will have a heart to heart talk on the trend of the photoplay of today.

Mutual Publicity Department Moves

The Mutual publicity department has at last deserted the old four-story landmark at 29 Union Square West, and is now getting settled in its new home on the fifteenth floor of 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City. Only the southwest corner of this floor will belong to it, as the executive offices will move up from the fourteenth floor and will occupy a good deal of space in the front, but elaborate plans are being made for furnishing the portion which will hereafter generate Reel Life and Mutual publicity. A dividing wall will be put in, separating Arthur James' private office, Henry James' department, and the shipping room from Merritt Crawford's editorial desk and the general office. When this has been done and the walls have been finished in buff, the floors covered with battleship linoleum and rugs, and the indirect lighting system installed, the suite will rival that which clusters about the elevator on the east side of the floor.

William Ranous Dead

William P. Ranous, a well known motion picture player, passed away at his home in Santa Monica, Cal., on Friday morning, April 2, at the age of sixty-eight. Mr. Ranous was for many years a player in the Vitagraph Company, and has taken prominent roles in many popular western productions. He is survived by a widow.

Stearns Heads Columbus Local

Max Stearns, president of the Ohio branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was on Tuesday, March 23, elected president of the Columbus Local of the state organization at the fifth annual meeting of that body held in the Chittenden Hotel in Columbus. Other officers chosen for the ensuing year are: J. Stewart, vice-president; S. Walcutt, secretary, and F. A. Roosevelt, treasurer.

The chief subject of discussion at the meeting was the Benedict bill, now pending before the Ohio legislature, which provides that every theater having a stage and scenery shall have a stage hand. The motion picture people all went on record as being opposed to the bill.

Ray Sells Feature

Carl Ray, president of the Carl Ray Motion Picture Company of Los Angeles, California, and one of the best known exhibitors in the United States, has disposed of his first five-reel motion picture feature "The Vengeance of the Wild" to Keith and Proctor, whom it is understood will make twenty-one prints from the negative purchased from Mr. Ray, and release them simultaneously in the different distributing centers of the country within the very near future.

Like "Runaway June" Contest

After five weeks in Bermuda acting before the camera the thrilling scenes of "Runaway June," the Reliance serial by George Randolph Chester, the company headed by Norma Phillips and J. W. Johnston is back in New York. Since his return Director Oscar Eagle has put the company hard at work in the Yonkers studio of the Reliance, on the final episode of the serial.

While the company was absent in Bermuda preparations were being completed in New York for the great "Runaway June" contest. Advertising material and aids to the exhibitor were sent from New York over the country. This week finds the contest well under way in many of the leading photoplay theaters of the country.

The national campaign of advertising in the leading women's magazines has found response in the imaginations of the women of the country. Letters by the hundred are being received at the Reliance offices, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York, in which the writers ask individually for information. The writers regard the contest as something more than one for beautiful women, and are delighted to have a chance to be among the forty-eight women to be sent free to California.

"I like your idea of a contest," wrote one woman from a Pennsylvania city. "There are many of us who are not really good looking, but who are popular. We feel that this contest will give the women of our city a chance to see how they compare with one another in popularity. Some of us have, we hope, charm of manner and kindness of heart. We think these qualities will find reflection in the voting in our local theaters."

Exhibitors, too, are writing letters to the Reliance. They feel that the contest will be a big business builder, and that it is on safe ground. If the voting was only to determine the most beautiful woman in the theater, they feel that jealousies would result, but since the contest is a test of real popularity they think that this element of strife will be eliminated.

Olga Petrova Engaged

Olga Petrova, now starring in her most recent dramatic success, "Panthea," under the management of Messrs. Shuberts, signed contracts with the Popular Plays and Players Company last week, giving that concern exclusive services for a period of two years and calling for her appearance in sixteen motion picture productions during that time. The first of the sixteen will be "The Heart of a Painted Woman," which will be released through Metro Pictures Corporation April 19.

Mme. Petrova made her first appearance in pictures in the Popular Plays and Players production of "The Tigress," and efforts were made shortly after this picture was released to prevail upon her to enter the field permanently. The noted actress then declined, saying she considered her work before the camera merely a diversion. After seeing "The Tigress" and more recently "The Heart of a Painted Woman," Mme. Petrova seriously considered the offer of the Popular Plays and Players, with the result that the two-year contract was entered into last Friday. A series of highly interesting dramatic vehicles will be supplied Mme. Petrova.

Initial Feature Nearly Ready

The date of the first release by the Tom Terriss Feature Film Company, recently formed, is soon to be announced. Members of the company to the number of twenty-five, headed by Mr. Terriss, have been in Jamaica, West Indies, for the past three or four weeks busily engaged in the making of the organization's initial photoplay, and advices received in New York from time to time are to the effect that the picture is "shaping up" in splendid fashion and will soon be ready for the market. The title has not yet been announced, following a policy which Mr. Terriss believes to be a good one, but it may be said that the picture will be an adaption from one of the big dramatic successes of established worth for which the well known Dickensian impersonator holds the rights.

Among the people mentioned as supporting members in the Terriss company who have already established themselves as favorites are: Miss Mildred Deverez, Miss Ethel Mitchell, Rienzi De Cordova, Lionel Pape, Rodney Hickok and Charles Mather.

Filming Richard Harding Davis' Story

By Bennie Zeidman

LITTLE does or can the average layman realize the time, care, and patience a motion picture director is compelled to endure when attempting the staging of vast battle scenes in which hundreds of supernumeraries are participants.

Director John B. (Jack) O'Brien, whom D. W. Griffith, the wizard of photo-drama, has said to be one of his best producers, was detailed to the filming of the Russell E. Smith picture version of "Captain Macklin," taken from the famous novel of the same name by Richard Harding Davis, to serve as a four-reel Majestic-Master-Picture release.

As most every fiction lover knows, Captain Macklin is the son of the fighting Macklin family, and ere his grandfather died, the old gentleman said to his boy when he handed him his sword: "It's yours! Remember you're a Macklin, and never fear to fight for the honor of that name!"

Therefore, Captain Macklin, when expelled from the military academy, seeks war atmosphere. He hears of the revolutions in Honduras, Central America, and sets sail for the fighting country. As a wandering soldier of fortune in Central America, he seeks General Laguerre, in charge of the Foreign Legion, and enlists.

Director O'Brien, for the Honduran local color, supervised the erection of a number of Central American streets which were exact reproductions of photographs taken a few years ago in that country. For the terrific battle scenes, O'Brien had the revolutionists scattered over mountain tops and valleys, bombs bursting in midair, soldiers falling from housetops, etc. Several times the pictures were retaken because the visualized realism didn't seem to ring true to the director and when he finally placed his stamp of approval on them you can rest assured that some battle scenes were rushed back to the developing factory to confirm the photographic exposures.

A great deal of ammunition was utilized in these battle scenes, in fact 137,000 rounds were fired during the taking of them. Ten thousand feet of battle scenes were photographed, and the choice, thrilling, true-to-life scenes will be inserted in the picture.

Speaking of the photographic effects, much credit is due to O'Brien's cinematographer, H. B. Harris, for the photographed scenes are as clear as a crystal. Special praise for the picturization should also be bestowed upon Russell E. Smith—his scenario conceivement is capital.

The girl, Captain Macklin's sweetheart, who follows him to Central America, is none other than the talented Griffith star, Lillian Gish, whose recent portrayal as "Elsie Stoneman" in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is one that will live forever, and with the same spirit and enthusiasm that she applied to "The Birth of a Nation" Miss Gish enacted the part of "Beatrice."

In the title role, that of "Captain Macklin," appeared Jack Conway, who, in addition to being the desired type for the part, is a splendid actor, and a daring horseman, and his fearless riding is an asset to this Majestic-Mutual feature.

General Laguerre, the French-American soldier of fortune, who is at the head of the Latin-Americans, is played by Spottiswood Aitken who has proven by his recent performances in Griffith features, namely:

"The Escape," "Home, Sweet Home," and "The Birth of a Nation," that he is a finished artist of the photoplay. Dark Cloud, the well known Mutual Indian, as "General Garcia" also renders an unusual performance.

Very briefly, the main theme of "Captain Macklin" is that he is disgraced at the military academy, the girl's father breaking the engagement on that account. He, with his grandfather's sword, leaves for Honduras to seek war, as he is of the fighting Macklin family. There Macklin meets General Laguerre who later turns out to be a great friend of his grandfather. Macklin becomes a fearless war leader under Laguerre; Beatrice, the girl, and her father have occasion to visit Central America in the interest of her father's investments and there learn of Macklin's progress.

"Captain Macklin" should be one of the strongest four-reelers ever released. Director O'Brien, with the aid of Author Russell E. Smith, has done wonders with this Richard Harding Davis thrilling military story.

Real De Luxe Entertainment

Few of the managers outside of the large cities attempt to put on the long multiple reel features now on the market in the de luxe fashion which these features really deserve. One of the few, however, who has established a reputation for a de luxe staging of multiple reel subjects, is the proprietor of the Washington theater, at Detroit, Michigan.

Some idea of the pains this manager took to give Lubin's feature production "The Eagle's Nest" an elaborate setting may be obtained from the accompanying photographs, one of which shows the lobby of the house beautifully decorated, with the ushers in Indian costume and a real eagle, captive in a nest, just over the entrance.

The other picture shows the stage setting used during the run of this subject. At the left of the stage appears an old prairie schooner with the settler's wife busily knitting, while at the opposite side of the stage the settler himself sits on a gigantic log before a real camp fire. A pot with his evening meal is boiling merrily over the blaze and his hunting dog at attention near his feet.

The central portion of the stage was set to represent a band of Indians ascending the distant slopes of the mountain and is realistic to the extreme.

Needless to say, pictures aplenty are now available which deserve a showing amid such magnificent settings and the management of the Washington theater will undoubtedly continue to give them appropriate atmosphere both on his stage and in his lobby.

Lobby of the Washington Theater, at Detroit, when Lubin's "The Eagle's Nest" was playing. Note real eagle in nest over the entrance.

Exhibitors all over the country could profit by following the splendid example set, not only by the theater mentioned above, but by such houses as the Strand in New York and others in other large cities of the country which take infinite pains and care, not alone in selecting their program, but in staging the picture while it is being run.

The pictures which accompany this story were furnished through the courtesy of the E. E. Fulton Company of Chicago, who booked the Lubin picture in Detroit.

"The Avenging Conscience"

On Saturady evening, April 10, the Fine Arts Theater, on Michigan avenue, Chicago, will be opened for the first public Chicago showing of D. W. Griffith's masterpiece "The Avenging Conscience," the Illinois rights to which are owned by Adolph Eisner, of the E. L. K. Film Company, and an indefinite run of the picture is expected.

Following its downtown showing, Mr. Eisner expects to make outside bookings of the feature picture.

The same feature, which as everyone knows is founded on Edgar Allen Poe's famous story of "The Tell-Tale Heart," is also about to be booked in New York City by the Wico booking offices, who have the New York Rights to both "The Avenging Conscience" and the other Griffith picture "The Escape."

New Metro Release

Madame Alice Blaché, the famous woman director, who picturized "The Lure," has just completed another five-reel drama, "The Shadows of a Great City," to be released April 5, through the Metro Pictures Corporation.

The Selig million dollar Jungle-Zoo, soon to be formally opened in Los Angeles, California, is said to be the most artistic institution of its kind in the world.

Conventioning at San Francisco

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has decided to hold its fifth annual convention in San Francisco July 13 to 16, and President Pearce is issuing a statement explaining why. He announces that not only the exhibitor members, but the manufacturers as well, have voted almost unanimously for the California metropolis.

It appears to us that the project requires little explaining and needs little boosting. Leaving out of the discussion any redundant reference to the justly celebrated advantages of the Golden State—advantages of climate and scenery about which every school-boy has information—we would merely remind our readers that California is today the producing center of the world for motion pictures. New York, three thousand miles away, can hold commercial honors; but the coast state is the Big Studio.

To list the purely trade attractions of the chosen convention spot would be as much out of place on this page as a railroad office description of climate and sunshine. Suffice it to say that every devout film man must know his California as the Mohammedan knows Mecca. Some of the manufacturers have actually promoted pilgrimages, to the end that knowledge of their perpetual summer garden may be widely propagated. One of these personally conducted producers' tours will be in San Francisco on the very days decided upon for the League convention, thus adding greatly to the merriment of the occasion and the entente cordiale between maker and consumer.

If there is in the world a magazine, trade journal or newspaper that has not described the Panama-Pacific Exposition, now showing to capacity at the Golden Gate, that publication must be small indeed. Why dilate upon the subject? Like the before-mentioned climate, its repute is in the minds of all. That the big fair will be at the elbow of the League convention will scarcely lessen the appeal of the trip.

San Francisco will be a popular convention city this year. It will see more easterners of the "hustling business man" type than it ever saw before. Probably ninety per cent of all the trades that practice the annual convention will endeavor to swing this year's meeting to the coast. They all have good reason for the choice; but the motion picture people have obviously more reason and better reason than any.

It is a safe bet that practically everybody who has not seen California wants and hopes to see it, while those who have been there generally seem crazy to go again. All most of them want is a good excuse; and a trade convention is the best excuse in the world because it is perfectly legitimate and praiseworthy.

Indeed, it is necessary for the proper support of the League that all its members who can possibly attend its 1915 convention do so. Aside from all the personal and selfish delights of a trip to California, the League needs the attendance. Exhibitors generally are finally awakening to the necessity of a strong organization, and the League is making good progress. A successful and happy convention at the producing center of the world—not to mention the exposition center and the climatic center—will cap the climax by soldering the loose ends together and leaving a pleasant reminiscence for a lifetime.

Headlines vs. Head-liners

SOME one (it does not matter who he is) borrowed his wife's scissors, clipped out a select bunch of film story headlines from some mysterious source, and sent them to Harper's Weekly. And Editor Hapgood, not to be bluffed, promptly made a full-page half-tone plate of them and printed it March 27. The public-spirited citizen who contributed the mess calls them "headlines on advertisements printed in moving picture trade magazines."

Now, we get all the moving picture trade magazines in this office; we read all the advertisements, too; and we do not recall seeing these particular headlines before. Nevertheless, there they are, and so they must have been used somewhere. The before-mentioned citizen who clipped them with his scissors refers feelingly to morbidly sensational, criminal, yellow movies. In his zeal he seems to overlook the fact that he is looking at headlines, not at head-liners in films. The captions he objects to are not even film titles; they are merely catch lines, evidently written in the hope of getting the eye of the blasé and ennuied exhibitor.

That is the way some of the dear public look at it.

They see a poster with a red spot on it and cry murder against the film inside which they have never seen. They see a lurid headline and instantly conclude, with a shudder, that the film itself must be much worse.

We are not commenting particularly on the good or bad taste of the person who wrote the headlines in question, for we do not know where they came from or how old they may be. We merely want to write a few headlines ourselves for some of the best known classics in the book store.

Starting with, say, Homer's Iliad, this line suggests itself:

Kills Opponent; Drags Body in Dust.

Or seizing upon the immortal Bill Sykes in Dickens' "Oliver Twist," let us write:

Beats Woman, Slowly Strangles Her to Death.

For "Alice in Wonderland," a single quotation from the text serves nicely:

"Off with Her Head!"

To attract more children to Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," if that be possible, we suggest:

"Cuts, Strangles, Drowns His Associates; Seizes Gold."

Or take any of the modern stories of business that are so popular just now:

Clever Business Man Makes Million by Impoverishing His Friends.

What dreadful things headlines are, to be sure! Really, none of these books can be fit to read. Yet you see the books were already written and read before we thought of writing headlines for them. We doubt very much if the headlines make the books any worse than they were; and all of them had been passed long ago by the National Board of Public Opinion.

So, likewise, the films so radically represented by the headlines in Harper's Weekly have all been passed by the National Board of Censorship. Discriminating and cautious people know that means they are all right. You can write any kind of a headline you want for them; that does not affect the film at all.

Never judge a show by its posters or a story by its headline or a cigar by its band or a man's character by his beauty. The man who wrote the headlines did not make the films.

(At the same time, parenthetically, it would be a good idea for headline writers to read their products twice before rushing them to the printer.)

Film Manufacturing in Hongkong

The manufacture of cinematograph films for the Chinese trade is to be undertaken in Hongkong. An American expert in film making has left for the United States to secure a plant for handling films, and the making of picture plays by Chinese actors will be undertaken on an extensive scale. Recently two film plays were made in Shanghai from the work of two well-known Chinese theatrical companies. They have been put on in Hongkong and vicinity and are very popular with the Chinese, and the new enterprise is based upon their success.

The address of the American representative of the new company may be had from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and its branches.

To Alan Forest has fallen the honor of taking the first scene on the biggest exterior stage in the world recently completed at Universal City, Calif.

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

The World's Greatest Yarn.

By U. N. Derwood,
The World's Greatest Writer

Episode Two:—"The Misadventures of Kathie."

(Part Two.)

"Yes, yes, go on!" urged Ed Itor, who, in spite of himself, had become interested in the story Kathie was telling. "Well," continued the narrator, "just at that moment Spruce, a handsome young American hunter, whom I had heard was camping near Ahaha, made his appearance. Noting my situation he shot one of the panthers, seized the dinosaur by its tail and hurled it into the top of a tall tree that stood a mile distant, and sicked the lion on the other panther, which promptly scuttled away. Taking me in his arms he promised to protect and care for me, and then conveyed me to his caravan which at once started for the sea coast. Just as we reached the coast I happened to remember that Major Dare, my father, was still a prisoner of Umbrella's. Returning at once to Ahaha, we managed to rescue him by tunneling beneath the jail with Spruce's penknife, and then left again for the seacoast. Imagine our horror, when we thought ourselves safely away from all harm, on discovering that Tilly, my sister, had come out to India in search of me and was even then in the city of Ahaha. Returning again to the city on our commutation tickets Spruce and I sought for and found Tilly. "Enoch Arden"—Mutual Master-Picture

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine.

THERE is much which can be found in "Enoch Arden," a four-reel adaptation from the famous poem by Alfred Tennyson, which is being released by the Mutual Film Corporation as one of its "Mutual Master-Pictures," which is not common on the screen.

To begin with, the story is familiar to the majority of those who make up the audiences at motion picture theaters and it necessarily had to be treated in an exceptional manner. Then there were but three characters to hold the interest and much depended on the work of the players. Had the story been less carefully handled by either the producer or players, the result might have been different, but as it is there can be no doubt as to its reception by the screen patrons.

Alfred Paget assumes the title role and gives a wonderful character portrayal, while Lillian Gish, as the wife of Enoch Arden, and Wallace Reid, as the steadfast friend and lover, have seldom, if ever, appeared to better advantage before the camera. The trio work excellently together and throughout the entire production are close to the camera in every second or third scene. Their characters are more than mere images upon the screen, for by their natural actions they make every foot of the subject life-like in its appeal.

The scenic effects are also worthy of praise. One in particular that will doubtless impress itself on the minds of those who see the picture is a rocky coast with angry waves dashing wildly against it and leaping high into the air. Other settings of merit are those on the island which is Enoch's prison during the long period of his absence and the street in the little fishing village.

The sub-titles are a mixture of verse and prose, being taken from the poem and fitted to the action. The minor characters are splendid types and show that much thought was given to their selection. They are allowed to intrude upon the main theme of the story just enough to make them appear real, instead of being merely a part of the setting. The photography is typically of the Reliance-Majestic-Griffith type, fades and masks being used extensively and to good advantage.

The story which, as has been mentioned before, is well known, scarcely needs re-telling. It is set in the early years of the eighteenth century and in the first few scenes we see three children growing up together in a little fishing village. They are Philip Ray, Annie Lee and Enoch Arden, the last named being an orphan. When they reach manhood and womanhood, both boys fall in love with Annie; she selects Enoch and Philip remains a steadfast friend to both.

Years pass. The son and daughter of Enoch and Annie grow to be seven years of age. One day Enoch is hurt and finds it necessary to sail on a long voyage for this is the only work he can find with which to support his family.

For ten years Annie and the children wait for his return. Philip, meanwhile, cares for her and the children, sends the latter to school and urges Annie to wed him, since Arden apparently is dead. She finally consents and they are married.

On an island far away, Enoch Arden is alive, having survived when his ship was wrecked. Finally, after many years he is picked up by a passing boat and taken home. Arriving there he discovers how good Philip had been to his children and how, finally, he had married Annie. Without disclosing his identity to either of them, he goes away. On his death-bed he tells his story to an old woman of the village and asks her to carry it to Annie.

"The Conspiracy at the Chateau"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

A THOROUGHLY interesting story that links modern times with the stirring days of the Franco-Prussian war, entitled "The Conspiracy at the Chateau," will be the Essanay release of Saturday, April 24.

Albert Roscoe, a newcomer to the Essanay Company, is featured in the role of Hugh Thormly and proves a most acceptable leading man, though this particular photoplay does not give him great opportunities. He is good looking, seemingly unconscious of the camera, and gives promise of becoming a general favorite.

The candidate defies the party boss.

Beverley Bayne has the leading feminine role, that of Virginie De Valerie, and Lester Cuneo appears in the "heavy" role as Martin Hobart, a political boss, while Charles Stine, Grant Foreman and Helen Dunbar also appear in minor parts.

The story is well written, moves easily along to its climax and is played for the greater part amid stage settings that are well chosen and thoroughly satisfying.

Young Hugh Thormly of Chicago, a candidate for state's attorney, who has incurred the enmity of Martin Hobart, a political boss, leaves for the country home of his parents at the straits of Mackinac in northern Michigan, that he may rest up preparatory to the vigorous campaign.

Arrived there he finds a beautiful girl as mistress of the country home, which has been modeled after the old French Chateau de Montsigny and, though amazed, does not tell her that he sees anything strange in her presence.

The first evening after Thormly's arrival, he and the girl are having dinner in the old fashioned dining room when Hobart, who has followed Thormly to the north, bursts into the room, finding them alone, and declares that at last he has the candidate for state's attorney right where he wants him, and will, on his return to Chicago, expose the latter and his affair with the girl, unless Thormly will promise to resign his candidacy.

Instantly Thormly resents the insults to both himself and Virginie, the girl, and the two men, after scuffling about the room, seize a pair of rapiers hanging on the wall and are about to fight a duel when old Jacques, the servant, interferes and explains Thormly's situation by telling the story of the girl's life.

This portion of the story is told by fade-outs depicting the stirring events of the Franco-Prussian war including the killing of the girl's father, the duke De Valerie on the field of battle.

Ere dying, the duke made Jacques, his servant, promise to restore the girl to her inheritance after the war is over. On coming to America and discovering that Mr. Thormly has erected a country home modeled after the de Montsigny Chateau in France, Jacques determines to take a chance by securing employment in the house which is closed during many months of the year, and convincing Virginie that it is her home to which she is rightfully entitled.

While old Jacques has been relating the story of Virginie's life, his wife, Benoite, has been telling Virginie the same tale, and at the conclusion dresses her in her mother's gown and sends her down to the dining room, where it is at once seen she is the perfect image of her mother, a large picture of whom hangs on the wall.

Convinced of the truth of the story, Hobart apologizes to the girl and to Thormly, admits that all opposition to Thormly's candidacy will be withdrawn and returns to Chicago.

Young Thormly, already much attracted by Virginie's beauty, assures the girl ere leaving that it shall indeed become her home and conveys a hint that though he will make it his home also, she shall remain as his wife and its mistress.

"The Outlaw's Revenge"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

WITHIN the past few weeks General Pancho Villa, Mexican leader, who has occupied columns and columns of space in newspapers, has been once more in the lime light, so that now of all times, seems the psychological moment in which to release "The Outlaw's Revenge," the four-reel Mutual Master-Picture which depicts the story of General Villa's life.

The majority of the scenes were actually taken in Mexico, and the battle scenes are, many of them, actual photographs of the fighting which has occurred just across our southern boundary line.

R. A. Walsh enacts the role of the outlaw in the film, this outlaw being none other than Pancho Villa at the beginning of his career, while Irene Hunt and Teddy Sampson appear as his two sisters. Other popular Mutual players seen in the film story are Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and Spottiswoode Aitken.

One soon learns that a Mexican peon has no rights which wealth is bound to respect, and Villa, an humble peon, has difficulty in holding the little farm inherited from his fathers safe from the grasping avarice of those who control Mexico's destinies.

While on a trip to a distant town, Villa's two sisters, one, the elder, lame from birth, and the other a beautiful girl of fourteen, are murdered by federal officers, who visit the peon's cottage in search of loot.

Learning of the awful deed that has been enacted in his humble home, Villa takes a solemn oath to avenge the murder of his sisters, and thereafter becomes both hunter and hunted, for the guilty officers, knowing their danger, brand him as an outlaw in order to save themselves from his avenging hand.

Though arrested, he makes a thrilling escape from jail with the aid of an old family servant, and succeeds finally in eluding his pursuers.

In accomplishing this latter feat he is aided by some Americans traveling in their covered wagon across the plains of Mexico. In gratitude he gives the

Meanwhile, the American family, who aided him years before, are themselves in trouble, their wagon train being attacked by the revolutionists. True to his promise, Villa heads a thousand hard riding cavalrymen and rescues the party of white settlers just as they are about to be overwhelmed.

He does not stay, however, to receive their thanks nor to listen to their cheers, for in the attacking party he has found the other officer on whom he had vowed to wreak his righteous vengeance, and as the picture closes he is about to avenge his other sister.

"The Poet of the Peaks" reel release of April 12, entitled "The Poet of the Peaks," a picture well worth booking.

Vivian Rich has the leading feminine role, that of Lydia Lovell, a heartless society butterfly, and both in this character and as the mythical Lady Without a Heart, the heroine of Keats' memorable poem, is splendid.

Dane Strong, poet of the peaks, is handled skillfully by David Lythgoe, though in the latter portion of the picture Mr. Lythgoe is a little inclined to rant and wave his arms. Harry Von Meter makes a splendid, likeable chap of Philip Granger, a society man who loves Lydia even though he knows she is thoroughly heartless, and does his best to save Strong, the poet, from falling into her clutches.

Lydia is the guest of Philip at his hunting lodge in the mountains, as the story opens, and one day while out for a walk with Philip, the two meet Dane Strong, perched on one of the highest peaks in the mountains dreaming out the theme of a new poem.

The following day Lydia pretends to lose her way, knocks at the door of Strong's cabin and accepts his invitation to rest awhile. Her love of coquetry leads her to begin spinning her web to captivate the heart of the unsuspecting poet, and on leaving for the city next day she takes with her a copy of Strong's latest poem and induces him to promise to hunt her up some day when he comes to the city.

The Lady Without a Heart has callers.

Granger, learning that Strong is infatuated with the girl, reads to him a poem of John Keats' in which is pictured a girl of Lydia's type, a woman without a heart. Strong indignantly declares that Lydia is as good as she is lovely, and will not banish her from his mind, as Granger suggests.

Months later Strong is discovered in the city, whither he has gone in the hope of again seeing Lydia, who has become his dream girl. She welcomes him into her home, and there carries on the flirtation begun in the peaks.

Though Granger still insists that the girl must stop her flirtation with the young poet, Strong rents humble quarters in the city and there tries to write more of his famous poems, though he soon discovers that inspiration will not come amid the dirt and noise of the city.

Returning to Lydia, he insists "You say you love me, then come to the mountains where we can be happy," but Lydia, picturing herself as the wife of a rustic mountaineer, bursts into laughter.

Leaving her home, Strong encounters Granger, and goes to his bachelor apartments where Granger unfolds to him the story of Lydia's past, relating how one after another strong man has ruined his life for her sake, and she has only laughed.

Strong, deeply affected by the story, visits Lydia's apartments without announcing his coming and there discovers her the center of a whole bevy of suitors and relating to them what she terms her "laughable affair with a long haired poet from the peaks."

Broken-hearted, Strong writes her a note announcing that he is about to return to the mountains and then leaves for his solitary cabin, where to his half-maddened brain there appears the phantom form of Lydia, whom he follows on and on across the cliffs until, at last, he comes to the edge of a precipice and, losing his balance, falls to his death on the rocks below.

Edison's "Greater Than Art"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

IN three reels, Edison's "Greater Than Art" presents a problem of the present, the dilemma of an attractive girl who is left penniless on the death of her father and who, being offered the alternative of continuing her study of art with funds furnished her by an old roue or facing the world without commercial training or other means of earning a living, chooses the former.

The first half of the picture treats on the above situation, and the second half, on the manner in which the girl escapes paying the price. A little love story is woven into this latter part, softening somewhat its almost tragic events.

Parts of the theme are quite daring, though not repulsive in their suggestion. As a whole the story is very cleverly handled, and Director John Collins used fully as much judgment and taste in staking it.

The action in the first part of the picture is between Gertrude McCoy as the art student, Lavinia Santell, and Duncan McRae as the roue, Count La Fleur. In the second reel Edward Earle, who plays one of the leading parts as Guy Crosby, a young American studying in Paris, is introduced. The personality and expression of these players form the actual keystone of the play, as it is their convincing work alone that puts over the highly dramatic scenes and the climax. quick action. Other important parts in the cast are taken by Marjorie Ellison, Bigelow Cooper, Henry Lerni, and Guido Culucci.

but voted down. One of the directors, Count La Fleur, calls on Lavinia, is impressed with her youth and beauty, and offers her financial aid. He openly asks nothing in return, but significantly leaves the key to his apartment with her. The next day the count is apprized of her surrender by her presence in his apartments.

Some time previous to this Lavinia has made a life-long friend of Cora Franklyn, a model, by paying her passage back to America. Cora obtains employment in the studio of Guy Crosby, an ambitious young artist. Crosby, dissatisfied, goes abroad and enrolls at the same studio in which Lavinia is studying. He presents the letter of introduction given him by Cora, and they become firm friends and later lovers. One night Lavinia invites Guy up to dinner, determined to let him see her in her true light.

As instructed by her note Guy waits in her apartment until Lavinia returns with La Fleur. He insults the count, and accepts his challenge to a duel. Knowing that the count is an excellent shot, Lavinia writes him a compromising note, thinking to delay him, but he arrives on the grounds on time, and the duel takes place. La Fleur's bullet glances just above Guy's eye. Later when the artist is painting "Spring" with Lavinia for his model, his eyes bother him greatly, and he is warned not to strain them.

La Fleur sends Guy Lavinia's compromising note. The artist becomes furious, and is about to kill his former sweetheart when his sight fails. It was the hurried finishing of "Spring" that weakened Guy's eyes. Lavinia does not leave as ordered by the artist, but remains and takes care of him, he thinking that she is a nurse employed by his housekeeper. "Spring" is declared a masterpiece by connoisseurs, and an American tourist buys it for a large sum. The news of the purchase reaches Guy just after he has recovered his sight, and learned how he has wronged Lavinia. They start life together on the money furnished by "Spring."

"Ill Starred Babbie," with Miss Jackie Saunders in the title role, will be the second Balboa release on the Alliance program.

Experiment," to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, April 19, a picture of great appeal.

Mr. Santschi and Miss Eyton are cast for roles perfectly suited to them. The former is a wealthy bachelor with a relative in the country, and the latter a young waif whom he educates without letting her know who her benefactor is. Through their efforts the heart interest is kept at high tide throughout the picture and this at times is supplemented by situations carrying a strong dramatic appeal.

The settings are scattered throughout the world, beginning in an American city, going to an African jungle, then to Cairo, Egypt, and finishing aboard a ship bound for the city in which the story began. The jungle scenes, in which wild animals from the Selig Jungle-Zoo are used, are realistic and the streets in Cairo so massive that they will excite admiration. The photography, which is even better than that found in the average Selig picture play, adds a great deal to the film. There is only one criticism in the staging of the production, that being a slight over-use of a certain scene which is faded in on several occasions.

As the story begins, John Morning, a rich middle-aged bachelor without relatives, is seen dreaming of the women who have come into his life and passed out of it without causing him to love. An accident to a woman of the slums in front of his home raises him from his reverie and he hurries to her assistance, taking her to her tenement home, where she dies. He then assumes charge of the woman's beautiful little daughter, Ritta, and determines to try his great experiment, that of making her into a refined woman without letting her know that he is her benefactor.

He gives the girl wealth and then for five years buries himself with a scientific expedition in India. At the end of that time his lawyer informs him that Ritta has been sent abroad with his spinster sister. In Bombay, John Morning again encounters Ritta and her chaperon and is introduced to the girl as a friend of the family.

He learns to love Ritta, which fact fills him with grief, for at forty-five he knows he is old enough to be her father. Besides, he has learned that a young man wishes to marry her. John and Ritta become good friends on board ship. She confides to John how, years ago, a stranger had taken her from poverty and despair and given her all she now possesses. She declares she would repay him with her life if she could learn who he is. John decides that he cannot honorably disclose his identity, nor can he honorably tell her of his love. He makes up his mind to leave her when the ship docks. He writes a note to Ritta's chaperon of his determination. Ritta finds the note, conceals herself and overhears their conversation. She immediately devises a scheme whereby she will make John Morning believe that she loves him without letting him know that she has discovered his identity.

By writing a letter to the man back home, saying that it is impossible for her to marry him because she does not love him, and that she loves a man who does not seem to care for her, Ritta begins her campaign. She causes John to find this note, and his despair gives way to joy. She shows her benefactor that her love for him is real—that she has found her ideal, and after all, even though he is forty-five, she loves him.

"The Serpent Sign"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

EPISODE one of the new "Exploits of Elaine" entitled "The Serpent Sign" is now available at the exchanges and exhibitors can offer their patrons a serial, which in every way seems likely to surpass the earlier one depicting Elaine's exploits.

All of the players who made the other serial a success are again present in this one, the only missing member from the cast being Bennett, Pauline's lawyer, who in episode fourteen of the first serial was disclosed as the Clutching Hand, and in his place Edwin Arden, famous on the legitimate stage and for his debut in motion pictures in a Lubin multiple reel, appears in the role of Wu Fang, the chief villain in the new serial.

Pearl White will continue to appear as Elaine, Arnold Daly as Craig Kennedy, Creighton Hale as Walter Jameson, Kennedy's assistant, and in addition, Mr. Arden, another celebrated star, is added to the cast, so exhibitors will readily realize that the new serial offers their patrons even more than did its predecessor.

Action begins in the very first foot of the film and continues to the final scene, which is so intensely interesting that it will surely bring patrons back to see the second episode.

As the picture opens Elaine is visited by her Aunt Tabby, for whom she purchased a home in the country, and who now comes to invite Elaine to spend a brief vacation there, though she warns the girl that the house is haunted.

Elaine merely laughs at the "haunts" described by Aunt Tabby, but on visiting the house is amazed to discover that something mysterious is certainly going on, and the sounds of pounding and other spooky manifestations are quite evident even to her ears.

At Elaine's suggestion, Craig Kennedy and Jameson, his assistant, visit the house, they having discovered that it contains a fire-place which is pictured on a document found in the effects of the late Perry Bennett, the house having once been his property.

Investigation discloses a secret passageway opening beneath the fire-place, which leads down into the ground and, following this, they come on Long Sing, a Chinese adventurer and a tool of the Oriental master criminal, Wu Fang, who is busily engaged in drilling a safe imbedded in one of the walls of this subterranean room. Long Sing escapes and Kennedy after penetrating the outer door of the safe with an electric drill is overcome by a deadly gas which pours forth. Jameson is shortly afterwards overcome with the same gas.

When Elaine descends into the secret passage, to find what has become of her friends, she is set upon by Long Sing, and left for dead by the Chinaman, who opens the safe and escapes with the black box found within. After Kennedy, Jameson and Elaine are revived and brought out of the secret passage, they find the Chinaman has left a message of thanks to them for opening the safe, the message being signed this time by a coiled serpent instead of the familiar Clutching Hand used as the signature to all notes pictured in the other serial.

"The Road O' Strife"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

YES, there is something new in filmdom. Lubin's new serial sets a precedent for the telling of motion picture stories in a novel arrangement of subtitles.

In this first episode of the fifteen-part serial to be called "The Road O' Strife," not a single subtitle is used, all that ordinarily would appear in subtitles being flashed on the screen at the same time the picture is in progress, as conversation.

The novelty is not only refreshingly new, but remarkably attractive, since one's mind is not for a moment detracted from the picture story by being compelled to read long and sometimes uninteresting sub-titles. Short snappy conversation is flashed over the scenes in a really new way and one that is sure to find favor with the picture going public. The "clear as a bell" Lubin photography is in evidence all the way through the picture and the fans who admire Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson will fairly revel in the possibilities opened up, for these two popular players are to be featured throughout the entire fifteen episodes of the Lubin serial.

In the first portion of the picture, called "The House of Secrets," one learns that Professor Gershom, an old recluse, who resides in the house of secrets, is guardian for a beautiful girl, who has grown from childhood to womanhood without knowing any other human being than her strange guardian. Alene is in heart a child, though deeply learned in science.

The old professor believes her perfect with one exception. There is something lacking. Later, the girl herself seems to feel this lack, for she insists that she hears something calling her, this "something" proving to be an interest in Robert Dane, a dreamer and student, who comes to the little village of Elmhurst.

Attracted by the good looks of the young man,

Alene, with the simplicity of perfect purity, insists that she likes him and wishes to live with him. Dane, rather puzzled at the girl's peculiar whim, conducts her home and she is heartbroken when she finds that she is not free to go to him.

Later, Professor Gershom is killed in his house of mystery by a mysterious unknown and Alene, though she flees to Dane for refuge, is conducted to the house of Doctor Duncan, a kindly old village practitioner, and tenderly cared for by the doctor's aged wife. No one seems to know the girl's real identity and can only surmise her relationship to Gershom.

Dane, alone in his study, is haunted by dreams of the pretty girl, who sought his protection and so willingly volunteered to become his companion in life. The situation is thus, as the first reel comes to an end with the announcement that the story will

In the meantime the half-witted boatman has discovered his companion underneath the canvas, and in his attempts to reach her has overturned the boat. June is rescued by a strange girl, clad much as she is, who takes her to her master, Hierophant, a mystic.

He bids her to follow Karma, the chief priestess, in the nude dance of initiation. June refuses, and is given over to an old hag who tells her of the fate of those who defy Hierophant, emphasizing it by showing her a group of horrible animals and reptiles. THE fifth installment of "The Black Box," the mystery-detective series being released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, deals principally with the attempt of Sanford Quest, the criminologist, to clear himself of the murder charge preferred against him because the Salvation Army girl and his secretary were found slain in his office in the previous episode.

The action is lively throughout and holds the interest from the first scene to the last. Many little things occur which doubtless forecast what is to follow and these are certain to enliven the interest of those who see the episode and draw them back to see what the outcome will be. The players, especially Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little, Laura Oakley and William Worthington, do excellent work and Director Otis

Quest fails to prove his alibi.

Turner deserves much credit for the manner in which the picture has been handled.

In the first scene Quest and his assistants are seen waiting for word which will prove the criminologist's claim that at the time the double murder was committed he was struggling with Red Gallagher. The message that comes, however, shatters all hopes Quest entertained of remaining out of jail, for the person at the other end of the line says that the operator's dead body has just been found in the signal tower, a bullet having been fired through his brain.

Quest is sent to prison, but before going attempts to return Mrs. Reinholdt's jewels, only to find them gone from his safe. Lenora and Laura set out to clear up the mystery of the three murders and, by means of the phototelsme, see Craig throw something in the grate at Professor Ashleigh's home. While Laura goes to the jail to "visit" Quest, Lenora hurries to the professor's home, where she manages to secure an unburned particle of the Salvation Army girl's dress, this having been the "something" which Craig attempted to destroy.

Quest is told by Laura that he must escape and use his hypnotic influence on Craig in an effort to learn the truth and the detective exchanges clothes with his assistant, thus making his getaway. Lenora covers Craig with a pistol and locks him in the barn on the professor's estate. While she stands guard at the door, the mysterious hands suddenly appear and seize her by the throat, dragging her around the corner of the building.

Quest, followed by plain clothes men, after his escape, is discovered and trapped in his home but manages to escape. He hurries to Lenora's assistance, but upon arriving at the professor's finds that she has disappeared. In a moment, his hopes for solving the mystery are dashed to pieces and he realizes that from now on he will have to work under a severe handicap. A BETTER combination for a dual personality can hardly be imagined than that of a well-to-do, respected judge who, under the powers of darkness, becomes a denizen of the underworld, and the leading spirit in a notorious band of thieves. This is the story of "The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde," by Victor Mapes, picturized in five acts by the Life Photo Film Corporation.

Most of the action takes place at night, and some unique lighting effects add to the weirdness of the situations. Lionel Barrymore plays the leading part as Judge Randolph Legarde, and is supported by Edna Pendleton as Amelia Garside and William H. Tooker as Inspector Barton. Others in the cast are T. W. M. Draper, August Balfour, Roy Applegate, Charles Graham, Arthur Morrison, Ed Roseman, Thomas O'Keefe, Betty Young.

Photographically, this picture is fully up to the standard set by previous Life Photo releases, and dramatically, it is as good if not better than their best. The subject contains just enough spicy outlawry to make it gripping without exerting a bad influence.

In an accident while out riding, Judge Legarde sustains an injury at the base of his skull. It has the effect of establishing in him a dual personality. Miss Caverly, to whom he is engaged, visits him one night accompanied by her father. Both notice that as the night advances his character seems to change, but attribute it to mental strain.

While controlled by his evil personality Legarde falls in with a gang of thieves, and becomes their leader. One of the members of the gang recognizes him as the judge who sentenced him to prison, but Legarde is so emphatic in his denial that the others take no further notice of the accusation. Legarde meets Amelia, a valuable accomplice because of her beauty and innocent demeanor, and becomes infatuated with her.

Crime after crime is brought to the law's attention, but the police seem unable to trap the master criminal or even to learn his identity. Finally he plans a raid on his own home. A stool pigeon notifies the police of the intended robbery, and they attempt to trap the gang. Legarde's accomplices make their escape, and he, transformed to his former self, finds himself in his own home.

Miss Caverly's father secretly engages a noted brain specialist to diagnose Legarde's case. The doctor eradicates the man's evil personality, and, on his recovery, the judge marries Miss Caverly and forgets forever his life and companions in the underworld.

Vitagraph's "The Juggernaut"

Hundreds of exhibitors will recall the columns of newspaper space devoted to the filming of Vitagraph's "The Juggernaut," the colossal railroad drama staged in the East several months ago, and which New York newspapers described as one of the most tremendous, expensive and sensational bits of action that was ever snapped by a motion picture camera, in referring to the railroad wreck that forms the climax of this five reel photoplay.

Now comes the announcement that "The Juggernaut" will be the first of the Broadway Star features to be released direct to the exhibitor by the Vitagraph Company of America, which, with the Lubin, Essanay and Selig companies, forms a part of the new releasing organization, known as Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc.

"The Juggernaut," as exhibitors will recall from the stories which appeared regarding this production when it was first released at the Vitagraph theater in New York City, is a powerful drama dealing with the disregard of organized capital for the welfare of others, the pretense under which it often gains its privileges, and its control of legislative bodies, the press and the courts of the land.

Ralph W. Ince, who produced "The Juggernaut," is regarded by exhibitors the country over as one of the foremost directors of the silent drama and the mere announcement that he is the man behind the picture will serve to make hundreds of exhibitors book the film on that recommendation alone.

In addition to all this "The Juggernaut" has as its climax the sensational railroad wreck referred to in the opening paragraph, and which was described by the New York American at the time of its taking, as follows: "Dashing at headlong speed a locomotive and three cars plunged over a bridge and into the icy water of the river below, resulting in many deaths and including among its victims the president of a railroad company and his daughter.

"The wreck occurs, as the girl is hastening to her father with papers she hopes will save him. Learning that the timbers of the bridge over which she must journey are rotten, the district attorney and the president of the road hasten to the spot: one official to gather evidence for his case against the company, the other to save his daughter's life. The railroad official runs across the marsh signaling the train to stop, but no one sees or heeds him, and the train wavers on the rotten timbers and then plunges into the river. The director of the road's destiny is overtaken by his own."

Next Bosworth Release

As its next release, Bosworth, Inc., announces Dustin Farnum, the popular star of both the screen and stage, in "Captain Courtesy," a thrilling drama of the early California mission days, by Edward Childs Carpenter.

The production of this photo-play was one of the most stupendous undertakings yet attempted by the well known West Coast producers and many large scenes were secured in the face of unusual difficulties and expense. A vast ranch was leased especially for the taking of the subject, which offered one of the most beautiful locations in the picturesque country among the mountains. So inaccessible was this location that quarters had to be built for the company in order to avoid the dangerous traveling on the adobe soil during the rainy season and to waste as little time as possible.

Across the street from the main Bosworth studio a special stage, seventy-five by ninety-six feet, was constructed as a reproduction of an early California mission. The whole of Southern California was scoured to secure loans from missions, of altar pieces, paintings, etc., and permission was asked in each case for the privilege of photographing in and around the mission.

The play is of the red-blooded variety and is presented as the supreme effort of Bosworth, Inc., for scene and realism. The drama is laid in 1840 when California was ruled by the Mexicans, who robbed and killed the early pioneers to satisfy their own greed for gain. One of the important thrills of the play is presented when Dustin Farnum, mounted on a magnificent steed, plunges through a stained glass window of the ancient San Fernando Mission to warn the old padre of a raid planned by the Mexicans.

Mr. Farnum is supported by an exceptional cast, including Herbert Standing, who enacts the role of the padre of the mission; Courtenay Foote, as the spy; Winnifred Kingston, as Eleanor the ward of the padre; Carl Von Schiller, as Jocoso; and Winona Browne, in the role of an Indian servant.

Carlyle Blackwell Talks of Career

BY MABEL CONDON

IF IT weren't that Carlyle Blackwell cautioned "This is not to be printed," and then went on to tell the incident of the lunch counter—if it weren't for this and the fact that Carlyle kept his eye, the left one, on my Christmas pencil, to see that it performed not, why I'd give you the story and let you decide for yourself what and why is a conscience. However, Carlyle said the lunch counter wasn't to go into print, so I'll see that it doesn't. It happened so long ago, anyhow — fourteen years, to be exact.

Carlyle Blackwell.

It was just after Carlyle's father had received a sheaf of forbidden bills from tradespeople around and about Cornell University. Summoning Carlyle, he handed him him five twenty dollar bills with the advice, "Son, buy yourself one hundred dollars' worth of railroad fare."

Son Carlyle did, and found himself in South McAllister, where he got a job as day express driver and night messenger. Then he let nine crates of chickens loose one night as he was hurrying to transfer them from the 12:04 to the 12:17 train and yet not miss the next dance in process a block away.

The escaped chickens were responsible for the driver-messenger's receipt of a bill for forty-nine dollars. It over-balanced his month's pay by nine dollars, so Carlyle settled the bill, as far as he was concerned, by riding into Dallas, Texas, on a freight train and soliciting insurance until he saved up one hundred dollars, which sum took him into Mexico City and San Antonio. And then he went plain "broke."

So Carlyle the fastidious, as we know him, found employment in a department store during a Friday-Saturday bargain session. His was at the sock counter, where he sold this article at seven and nine cents a pair. His Saturday pay envelope brought him $2.07, and after rescuing his trunk from his boarding house by the process of suspending it from his window at one in the morning by means of knotted sheets he dragged it to the depot and expressed it as far as the $2.07 would take it, which destination was El Paso, Texas.

"There I met Bill Hicks," Mr. Blackwell reminisced, as M. H. Blackwell, his good-looking brother, likewise his business manager, hurried out of the Favorite Player's private office with a handful of mail and his stenographer seized her notebook and followed.

"Bill could play the guitar and I could play the mandolin and sing," went on Carlyle. "We introduced 'Good Old Summer Time' into El Paso. For one week we played and sang only that and made $210. The next week we made 'Bedelia' famous, but only with $150 as our proceeds."

It was after the "Summer Time" and "Bedelia" money was gone that Carlyle and the hungry stranger made the lunch counter famous. So I'll skip that part and take you to Denver. There you see Carlyle meeting with friends and the Elich Gardens giving him a three-year engagement on account of his singing. At the end of that time, of course, he had money and confidence in his own ability, so came east and played Keith and Proctor vaudeville, and then went onto the legitimate stage, where his final appearance was made in "The Right of Way."

The Blackwell hair, which is black and plentiful, the Blackwell eyes, which are brown and direct, the Blackwell face, which is particularly expressive, the Blackwell physique, which is slender and athletic, not to mention the Blackwell ability to wear clothes well; all these attributes had been noted and as a result the Vitagraph Company gave Carlyle Blackwell an offer to join its screen company. After nine months he left and went to the Kalem Company, where he remained for a little more than four years.

Last June he resigned from the Kalem Company and came east to incorporate the Favorite Players Company, which was to be his very own. While waiting for the eventful papers to be drawn he played in two Famous Players pictures and then, the last week of July, left for the west with his own company and on August first began work on the Favorite Players' first feature picture, "The Key to Yesterday." Then followed "The Last Chapter," "The Man Who Could Not Lose" and now "The High Hand" has had an initial showing and will go out to the public within a few days.

"It was my anxiety to see that 'The High Hand' was printed and cut correctly that brought me to New York," explained Mr. Blackwell, as the sun glinted through the curtain edge and showed his tanness of face and hands to be considerable, though he declares he is quite white now.

"I'm still as nervous about making a picture as though it were my first attempt, and the actual number of pictures I have made totals 318. I don't know how long I shall continue to appear in pictures myself. I intend, though, that my company shall continue—forever! I formed it so as to establish myself; to make it keep me after I have quit acting. I am to take a leading woman back west and form a second company, in which I shall not appear at all. So, you see, the Favorite Players Company was not formed just to exploit Carlyle Blackwell, but was more of a strictly business investment. I do not like business—brother does not like acting, so he manages the business and we agree perfectly. He's my only brother, and we always did agree."

The Blackwell brothers' parents live in Syracuse, where the boys, who have a twenty months' difference in age, were brought up. They were born in Troy.

Essanay's New Star

Viola Allen, the famous actress, after years of success on the legitimate stage, playing leading classical, Shakespearian and comedy roles, has decided to make her debut in photoplays. She has been engaged by the Essanay company at a very large salary and soon will start the production of "The White Sister," the novel by F. Marion Crawford. The dramatization of the novel will be filmed by Essanay at the Chicago studios. Viola Allen is declared by photoplay experts to be an excellent photographic subject, and with her beauty and genius in acting, there is no question but that she will make a phenomenal success in photoplay work. "The White Sister" will be one of Essanay's great multiple reel special features and bids fair to surpass any drama yet screened. Miss Allen needs no introduction to the public, having had a long and successful stage career. She made her debut in Boston in "Esmeralda" at the age of 15, played leading roles with Joseph Jefferson, Lawrence Barrett, Tommaso and William J. Florence. She starred in Hall Caine's "The Christian" and "The Eternal City." Later she took up Shakespearian plays, reviving the old English classics.

McDowell Puts Over Another

Still another use has been found for motion pictures. The inimitable Lloyd W. McDowell, who, when press agent of the Great Northern Railway, secured so many scenes of Glacier National Park in the Pathe Weekly and other topical films, is now making use of pictures to boost the Rose Festival to be held in Portland, Oregon, on June 9, 10 and 11.

A wonderfully unique poster has been prepared announcing the Rose Festival and whole pages of newspaper matter have been devoted to pretty little Miriam Schiller, declared the perfect child. Mr. McDowell has cleverly combined the poster and the little girl and filmed the two. Now in every picture theater in Oregon, Washington and many portions of California, an arrangement has been made by which this film is flashed on the end of the regular reels shown at the picture theaters, and as a result the Portland Rose Festival is being advertised far and wide.

Magnificent Detroit Theater

The Majestic Theater, Detroit's newest and alleged to be "most beautiful photoplay house," is opened. It is located on Woodward avenue at Willis street, and was erected by the Majestic Theater Company, Inc., of which A. Arthur Caille is president, Henry J. Guthart, secretary-treasurer, and M. W. McGee, managing director.

The building is of stone, steel and concrete, was designed by C. Howard Crane and the Woodward avenue frontage is faced with glazed, polycrome terra cotta, treated in the most modern architecture style. The entrance is in the center of the building and has three stores on either side and the second floor is laid out for high class shops or offices.

The lobbies and foyers are so spacious that the entire seating capacity of the theater can be easily accommodated in them. In addition to the foyer there is a recessed loggia or lounging room that contains an open fireplace to add to its attractiveness and provide a cozy atmosphere. On one side of the foyer are spacious lounging and rest rooms for ladies, with a maid in attendance, while on the other side is a large smoking room for gentlemen.

In the theater itself there are 2,160 seats, and 40 boxes grouped about both sides of the auditorium and across the center, being designed for comfort and to accommodate box patrons. Ivory, gold and old rose form the basic color scheme and the decorations conform to the Adam period.

The ventilation is so arranged that in the cool season the air is heated in a specially constructed chamber, then forced from beneath the seats into the auditorium, while in the summer the air is washed, cooled and forced into the theater by powerful electric fans. Two large pipe organs are installed, one on either side of the auditorium, and Frank Fruttchey, a noted recitalist and composer, will preside at the organ while the Majestic Symphony Orchestra will be under the direction of Prof. W. J. Hutton, a celebrated musician.

The Majestic will not be affiliated exclusively with any particular program, but will pick and choose the cream of all the pictures being released. For the opening the program was made up of a Majestic topical review, a gorgeous, hand-colored Pathe travel picture, George Kleine's multiple reel masterpiece, "The Woman Who Dared," a medley of southern songs, rendered by the three Dixie girls, and a one-reel World Comedy Star production, Richard Carl, in "The Dancing Beetle."

Motography extends heartiest congratulations to Detroit upon the opening of such a magnificent theater and wishes it every success.

De Luxe Settings for Feature

Thursday evening, April 1, Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer gave a private showing of Daniel Frohman's de luxe presentation of "The Eternal City," produced by the Famous Players Film Company, at the Studebaker theater in Chicago.

The throng who filled the theater to its last seat went away immensely enthusiastic over the wonderful production unreeled that evening and particularly pleased over the masterful way in which Jones, Linick and Schaefer have staged the picture.

The story of the film has already been told in Motography's pages on the occasion when it was first shown in New York City, so it is needless to review the picture again. Pauline Frederick undoubtedly does the greatest work of her entire career, ably supported by a large cast.

Special mention should be made, however, of the elaborate manner in which the picture is introduced. At the rise of the curtain, one beholds a stage in the center of which hangs a graceful curtain of Roman design, flanked on either side by statues typical of the Roman era.

The center curtain is raised to disclose a beautiful panorama of the city of Rome and a silver moon slowly sinking behind the dome of the distant Vatican. The illusion is a perfect one, and one is under the impression that he is actually viewing the Eternal City in all its grandeur, and the accompanying music placed the audience at once in a receptive mood. As the moon sinks to rest behind the mimic city, the curtain descends for a moment and when raised again discloses the screen on which the picture begins.

Part two of the picture was introduced in a similar de luxe fashion, the moonlight effect over the city of Rome being replaced by a sunrise scene behind the Colosseum, the ancient ruins of which form the foreground of the stage setting. The picture was so beautiful that as the sun rose in all its glory, flooding the ancient ruins with its rays, the audience involuntarily broke into applause. Again the curtain was lowered for a second, and on being raised again, the second part of the great production was screened.

The public showing of the picture began on Friday morning, April 2, and will continue for an indefinite run, one which will undoubtedly extend many weeks into the future, since Chicago has had few, if any, opportunities of seeing pictures staged in such a lavish manner as Jones, Linick & Schaefer have inaugurated this one.

The Growth of Bosworth Inc.

This week marks the completion of eighteen months since the organization of Bosworth, Inc., of Los Angeles, and that concern takes pride in the record it has made since August 8, 1913, when Bosworth, Inc., made its debut in the film world, beginning with the seven-reel production of the "Sea Wolf." The firm has also released such pictures as "The Valley of the Moon," "Odyssey of the North," "The Traitor," "Hypocrites," "False Colours," "It's No Laughing Matter," "Buckshot John," "The Caprices of Kitty," "Sunshine Molly," "Pretty Mrs. Smith," "Captain Courtesy," and have under way productions of "Little Sunset" and "Help Wanted."

In November, 1914, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company was organized for the purpose of producing for the screen in association with Bosworth, Inc., the successful plays of Mr. Morosco and his associates. These companies now possess large studios in Los Angeles, an up-to-date laboratory, and have recently secured ground space and building permits that will permit them to fully double their present plant in size. Recently a new director was secured in the person of Oscar Apfel, and Mr. Morosco is said to have just returned to the studios bringing with him several new contracts covering rights on plays and stars which will be filmed immediately.

New Publicity Scheme

A most original publicity scheme for actors has been instituted by Hugh Hoffman, the well known motion picture publicity man. It is an automatic stereopticon in the window of his publicity office, in the Gaiety Theater building, New York. The window is very large and the portraits appear to good advantage. Broadway at this point is probably the heart of New York City where many thousands of strangers from other cities pass every day, not to mention the number of important people in the photoplay business. This makes Mr. Hoffman's idea doubly valuable inasmuch as Broadway publicity is national publicity.

Winifred Allen

Winifred Allen, pretty, charming of personality, and gaining steadily in popularity, is now appearing regularly in Reliance releases under the direction of Lawrence B. McGill. Although a newcomer to the Reliance New York studio, where she is working in special one-reel subjects, Miss Allen is by no means a stranger in the motion picture art, having played leads with the Edison company a year ago, and since appeared in principal parts with several other companies. Just previous to joining the Reliance staff Miss Allen played opposite William Elliott in the Famous Players production soon to be released, "When We Were Twenty-One," which was formerly Nat Goodwin's starring vehicle. She has all the fascination of youth, being but eighteen years of age, photographs splendidly and has that faculty of being delightfully natural, while yet acting. Her latest picture under the Reliance banner is "The Jeweled Dagger of Fate," in which she plays the part of Marion Giles, the old curiosity shopkeeper's daughter.

New Hamburger House

The new Pine Grove theater on Sheridan road near Broadway, Chicago, which opened its doors under the direction of Alfred Hamburger on Saturday, represents the last word in ideal surroundings for the showing of moving pictures, and is the tenth property of this class under Hamburger direction in Chicago. No theatrical structure here represents more leisurely care in building, or more attention in detail of comfort, or cost for elegance of surroundings. Julius Born, the owner, has taken two years to materialize his ideals in this fine and substantial investment befitting the neighborhood in which it is located. The lighting effects on Sheridan Road are distinctive and a crystal kiosk in front is something new in illuminated placarding of attractions.

The facade in vitrified brick with gray stone trim is substantial and attractive, and a sweeping cochere with bronze trimmings and glass roof to protect the broad entrance. The lobby of blocked granite, 25 feet wide and 30 feet deep, has at the left a broad green marble staircase leading to the balcony, with newel lights and all ornate metal trimmings of the balustrade in verde antique. The box office, beneath the rise of this solid architectural feature, is in green marble and is completely equipped with automatic ticket printer and bookkeeper—a most complete and ingenious mechanism. The floors are in tarazza Roman mosaic and the light fixtures are all specially designed to comport with the mission design which prevails in the interior. The tint of the walls is a dull red, matching the tufted carpets, and the lofty paneled ceiling is in cool greys, giving the interior a warm yet spacious effect. The ventilating ducts and heat radiators are all sunken in the walls, and fronted with classic grills.

The main auditorium has 400 seats, with plenty of room between rows, and side aisles on all sides. The music-pit has a fine two-manual pipe-organ and a grand piano, while masked behind the heavy ornate trellis of polished gum wood at the sides are all the strange noise producers that make pictures realistic in effect. The picture screen is unusually large, and the floral fresco decoration springing from the heavy grill work and spraying high over the proscenium furnishes a most attractive color note. On either side of the orchestra pit are unique ornaments, stone fonts throwing sheena of colored ozonated perfumes.

The balcony is spacious, easy in its inclination and perfect in lines of sight. The projecting room, high up in front of the house, is most complete in its double equipment. The exits are so numerous that the house can be emptied in a moment. The gallery has all its side exits from inclined planes to the iron stairways that web the side walls over the wide cement walks all about the building.

New Cohn Invention

The Universal Animated Weekly has just patented a mechanical scheme whereby the effectiveness of its pictorial news is already showing a higher state of perfection than ever.

The new invention, which is the result of several sleepless nights on the part of Jack Cohn, who edits the weekly, is little more than a straight-jacket in appearance. It consists of a steel plate, three feet wide, in the bottom of the tonneau of the car, fastened securely, to which are attached upright sections, the height of the camera man, with straps. The straps go about the body of the camera man, and the tripod of the camera is also fastened to the bottom of the car. This enables the camera man to film any scene which he must get from the automobile, and at any speed. Tests have been taken with this apparatus at forty miles an hour, and the result has been exceedingly steady photography. The illustration shows U. K. Whipple operating the device by which several remarkable pictures have already been taken. The outfit is never taken from the car; the camera is kept under the seat in a strong box, and when in use is hooked onto the tripod, which is stationary in the car itself. The car is a particularly tractable one, and was obtained for all kinds of quick and tricky service, as it is used on a moment's notice, and must stand all of the abuse which might be heaped upon a poor fire horse.

U. K. Whipple in Jack Cohn's new invention.

Mr. Cohn has a patent already pending in the patent office at Washington, covering this invention.

Edison's New Comedian

Edison has augmented its string of comedians by what they consider a stroke of good fortune in securing, for his first appearance in motion pictures, the services of the noted English comedian, Fallas Welford. Mr. Welford has been starred both in this country and in England. He hails originally from Scotland, his family being well known in theatrical history and his father owning a theater in Aberdeen, his birthplace. He played child parts innumerable and then, for seventeen years, appeared in many of the famous old dramas and melodramas popular during that period. Although he had earned his name in serious roles, nature had made him a natural comedian and when the distinguished English actor, Charles Hawtrey, was attracted by his work, Mr. Welford naturally followed the course of nature and appeared in principal parts with his distinguished associate. Mr. Welford gives promise that he will surpass in motion pictures, the marked success he has had on the stage, as the camera's closer and better view will allow him to get over better the face of a comedian with which he is blessed—a face that in its grotesque, yet unexaggerated, expressions heighten the humor that is, fortunately, refreshingly distinctive and original.

Fallas Welford.

Director Lewis Gets Horse

Director Edgar Lewis, now at Dahlonega, Ga., producing "The Plunderer," by Roy Norton, was presented with the horse he has been using in his quest for new places in which to lay the scenes of the photodrama.

Mr. Lewis rented the horse from its owner, Colonel Valentine Bowene, and has been making use of it for several weeks in the Blue Ridge range, which is the very center of the Appalachian belt. On April 5 he was surprised to be informed by the colonel that since the latter was moving away from the neighborhood he could not use his favorite horse. Mr. Lewis plainly showed he felt as if he were losing a valued friend and members of the company, learning it was the director's birthday, clubbed together and purchased the steed, which was presented to Mr. Lewis. Needless to say the latter was delighted.

Roberta Hickman

"Not that gowns can make an actress, but it certainly gives a woman an assurance, and clever is the actress who understands gowning. Men appreciate it and women demand it. Half the world is much more interested in how the other half dresses than how it lives. Yesterday the actress on the screen imitated sadly fashionable dress in cheap materials. The effect was too evident to relate. Today as much care is given to gowning a role for the screen as behind the footlights." So says Roberta Hickman of the Bosworth-Morosco studios, recognized as one of the best gowned actresses of the screen. For years a musical comedy beauty, being one of the most famous show girls on Broadway, Miss Hickman was known as a New York fashion artist. In moving pictures she is wearing wonderful Poiret, Baskt and Lucille creations.

Filming the European War

In a recent issue of the Scientific American, Ernest A. Dench treated a subject of more than passing interest to the motion picture world—the filming of the European war. His article follows:

In taking pictures at the front, the motion picture camera man has been confronted with no ordinary task. He is exposed to as many risks as the soldiers themselves, not counting the fact that he is greatly resented by the warring powers, who place various restrictions in his way.

Cherry Kearton made many attempts to film exploding shells at the Battle of Alost, but he found that they were barely noticeable on the screen—there is a flash and that is all. When one strikes a poor soldier he slips forward a little and stirs no more. Mr. Kearton states that if there are dense volumes of smoke and the soldiers fling their rifles up in the air, then die in a pose, such films are fakes. In warfare today smokeless powder is the only kind used, it being in universal demand because it does not give their position away to the enemy.

The operators of a well-known French company had their cameras equipped with a telephoto lens, by the aid of which it was possible to cinematograph soldiers at work in the trenches at a distance of six hundred yards. By this means they could get close range views of the fiercest fighting; the ordinary lens is limited to a range of two hundred feet.

Most other camera men have dispensed with the cumbersome motion picture machine and instead used an aeroscope camera, which is minus a tripod and, therefore, easy to carry about. But even this does not frighten all the difficulties away.

To keep the camera steady when carrying out his work Mr. Mason was obliged to adopt sundry plans. The most successful one was to strap the camera to the trunk of a tree, which also afforded protection for the operator. At another time, wanting to obtain pictures of the Belgians fighting in the trenches, Mr. Mason laid himself flat in the middle of the street and held the camera up in front of him.

His one great scoop was a set of remarkable panoramic views of the German army. To photograph these he attached a coil of wire to the machine, tying the other end to a button on his coat. He then climbed up a telegraph pole, and after reaching the top he tugged at the wire and thus got the camera up safely. The final operation was to hold it tightly and focus the camera on the magnificent sight ahead of him.

M. Bizeul hit on the ruse of employing the second-story room of a restaurant opposite the Ghent town hall. He opened the window just wide enough to permit the lens to pass through, and when the Germans did arrive he filmed continuously from 3 o'clock to 4:15 in the afternoon.

The greatest task of all is getting the stuff past the censor at the front, who hacks the film to pieces unmercifully. Smuggling, therefore, is often resorted to, and many are the methods by which the officials are dodged. Paul Rader, a plucky American, managed to film pictures of an artillery duel between the French and Germans, after which he rushed to the nearest vacated house and hid both camera and film in the cellar. A few days later, when the fighting had shifted to another part of the country, he returned for his belongings and was successful in eluding the vigilance of the authorities on his journey to the coast, en route for England.

Working on Harem Story

Nell Shipman, on arriving at the coast to be in personal contact with the Princess Hassan while writing a book on the latter's life, was met at the train by a delegation of the Los Angeles Press Club, which bestowed upon her an honorary membership in the organization. Miss Shipman tendered her thanks in a pretty speech and then was conducted to Universal City, where the Princess is engaged in the leading role of the serial film in which she is depicting her life as lived in the harem of her Egyptian husband, Prince Hassan. Miss Shipman wrote the scenario for this feature film and is at work now putting the story into book form.

Princess Hassan, working in six-reel Universal harem picture, Isadore Bernstein and Nell Shipman, author of the six-reeler at "U" studios.

Brevities of the Business

Will E. Ellis, a former member of the Mutual California scenario department, passed away early on the morning of Thursday, March 25, at his Hollywood home, leaving a widow and one child. He was well liked in the studio and all are deeply affected at his sudden death.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Nan Jacobus of Montclair, N. J., and William L. Barry of New York City. Miss Jacobus is a young woman of much popularity both in Montclair and New York, and Mr. Barry, well known as the manager of publicity and advertising for the Nicholas Power Company, is a man with many friends. The wedding will probably be a June event. Motography extends congratulations to both.

Chester B. Clapp, recently of the Biograph Company and previously on the staff of the New York Dramatic Mirror, has been engaged by Script Editor Frank E. Woods for the Reliance and Majestic scenario department at Los Angeles, Cal.

President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company has purchased the motion picture right of the novel, "The Girl from His Town," by Marie Van Vorst, from the publishers, Bobbs-Merrill Company. It will be produced as a multiple-reel feature in the American studios at Santa Barbara, Cal., under the direction of Harry Pollard, with Margarita Fischer in the leading role.

Mildred Adams, the Denver society girl, has been chosen by Hobart Bosworth to play an important part in his first production under the Universal Film Manufacturing Company management.

Marshall Stedman has been appointed as business manager to four of the Universal companies. Stanly Twist takes another lot and Don Meaney still another.

Colin Campbell, the veteran Selig director, is to add one or two short film stories to the regular Selig releases, while waiting for final sets for the feature, "The Ne'er Do Well."

The Vitagraph Company announces it has secured for picturization two of the most popular plays of the past decade—"The Writing on the Wall," which was originally produced by Olga Nethersole, and "Glorious Betsy," in which Mary Mannering starred with success.

During the past week the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was established in its new offices, 120 West Forty-first street, where it occupies the entire fifth floor.

William McDonald, who formerly played burlesque lover parts with the Keystone players during the last eight months, has been engaged by President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company and assigned a part in the production of the coming four-reel American Distinctive Creation, "The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs," adapted from the novel published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

For the present, Gene Gauntier, who was recently added to the roster of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will appear in pictures released under the Bison brand. The first production on which she and her director-lead, Jack Clark, are now working is a story of the Canadian Northwest.

Lloyd Inghram, formerly of Essanay and Universal, has joined the Mutual Film Corporation forces at Hollywood, Cal., to act as director.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 27—Selig—April 5.—Submarine L-1, the latest type of U. S. under water vessels, is given official test at Quincy, Mass.; University of Wisconsin students hold exposition of class work; President Wilson and former President Taft and Miss Mabel Boardman, head of American Red Cross, lay cornerstone for new Red Cross headquarters, Washington, D. C.; steamer Magnetic bearing survivors of crew of steamer Denver arrives in New York; Washington American League baseball team at practice; President Wilson and Josephus Daniels visit the Argentine dreadnaught, Moreno, Annapolis, Md.; limestone hill blown up by nitro-glycerin, Riverside, Cal.; war views from scene of action in Europe.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 28—Selig—April 8.—Last blasts are fired which opens navigation up Columbia river, thus giving Idaho a seaport; bicycle riders compete on saucer track, Newark, N. J.; suffragette leaders of Pennsylvania plan to ring liberty bell when women get votes in that state; training high prized horses at Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.; a second story at elevated railroad terminal erected without stopping traffic; Harvard football team reports for its spring practice; Grace Darling drives train up Mount Tamalpais, Mill Valley, Cal.; battleship Alabama arrives at Newport News, Va., to enforce neutrality as German cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich prepares to sail; war views from Russia, Russian Poland and East Prussia.

The Gambler's I. O. U.—Biograph—April 12.—At the assay office in town, Jim Bevins turned his gold into dollars, then sat into a game because he felt lucky and broke the gambler. On the way home two observers of his luck held him up. Badly wounded, he contrived to reach the mine and died in his partner's arms. Dick Smith, the porter, found the gambler's I. O. U. in his pocket and kept it, because he hoped to "meet up with the cuss some day." Drifting to the oil fields, he went to work for Daddy Wilson. He did not know that the old man, hard up, had borrowed $300 from that fellow Dawson, who was hanging around his girl. He learned the fact when Dawson, furious because Nell turned him down, demanded instant payment of the note. Then Dick learned that this was the Dave Dawson whose I. O. U. he had found on Jim's body. Grimly he forced payment of the I. O. U. and returned the money to the gambler in payment of Daddy's note. When Dawson proved that he did not commit the murder Dick let him go. Dick was then gloriously surprised to learn that Nell loved him.

A Deadly Hate — Edison — (Three Reels)—April 12.—Marc MacDermott is here seen in the dual role of two brothers, John and Charles. The latter, a victim of epilepsy, bitterly hates his more fortunate brother, a strong, high-minded chap, and shows his dislike in every possible way. His persecutions are petty, however, until John notifies Henry Castleton not to lend his brother any more money. Charles' fits of anger then become so violent that John has him placed in an asylum. He escapes the night before the day set for his brother's wedding to Lady Constance (Margaret Prussing), makes his way back to Fernleigh Grange and attacks John. Thinking his brother dead, Charles decides to impersonate him, and throws John's body into the sea. Lady Constance notices a slight change in her fiance, but attributes it to his excitement over the events of the morrow. John is rescued from the sea and revived. He has considerable difficulty in convincing the asylum warden that he is not Charles, but finally obtains his release by means of a little financial persuasion, and returns to Fernleigh Grange in time to prevent Charles' marrying Lady Constance. The epileptic dashes madly from the house and, in attempting to escape from the asylum warden who pursues him, falls over the brink of a precipice, and is killed below. The double-exposure work in the picture is exceedingly clever. Much credit is due Director Ridgely for his handling of the story and its staging. C. R. C.

A Night in Kentucky—Essanay—April 12.—Jack Westlake leaves a train which is stalled in the Kentucky mountains and wanders into the hills. He is warned by Kentucky, a pretty mountain girl, that "they are after him." A few moments later he is captured by the three Jordan brothers, who bring him before their father, Colonel Jordan. They accuse him of having deserted their Mary and are about to kill him when the girl appears and says that he is not her husband. Jack is then given an opportunity to explain and says that Tom, his brother who had married Mary, died during a visit to the North, and that they were never able to get word to the girl in the mountains, as they did not know how to reach her. He is freed by the Jordans and returns to the train just as it is pulling out, followed by the love-lit eyes of Kentucky. Albert Roscoe, Ruth Stonehouse and Lester Cuneo featured.

The Girl and the Bachelor—Kalem—(Two Reels)—April 12.—Mrs. Blandon wishes her son to marry, but he is a woman hater and refuses. Jean, a distant relative of the family, visits Blandons, and George's mother conceives a plan to force him to marry. She treats Jean cruelly and his sympathy is aroused when she refuses to allow the girl to mingle with the famly. George realizes his sympathy has turned to love, and asks her to become his wife. Mrs. Blandon then takes the girl in her arms and confesses her part of the plot, and the young people admit that they are very grateful for what she has done.

The Face of Fear—Lubin—April 12.—The second of the "Road O' Strife" series, featuring Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson. Caleb Jerome, a respected and industrious private banker, adores his son, Gilbert, and willingly supplies money to permit the boy to lead a fast life. He is haunted by a strange fear, however, and at last confesses to Gilbert that it was he who killed Professor Gershom, in order that the strange old man might never expose the fact that it was his money rather than Jerome's which was being used to pay Gilbert's bills. Caleb says that after he struck down old Gershom he threw the body into the river and that certain documents must also disappear, as well as the girl, Alene. Shortly after his confession Caleb dies, a victim of his own avenging conscience, and Gilbert vows that the documents shall be found and destroyed and that Alene shall not live to become of age. Meanwhile Alene has been tenderly cared for by Dr. Duncan and his wife and has fallen even more deeply in love with Robert Dane. The young man, however, refuses to take advantage of her love and marry her, for he feels that she is entitled to know something more of the world before becoming his wife.

The Poetic Justice of Omar Khan—(Two Reels)—Selig—April 12.—A two-reel story of the desert and the unusual revenge of Omar Khan for the mistreatment of his friend, Philip Hyde. Neva, Philip's wife, elopes with David Harcourt in the absence of her husband from the city, and Omar Khan arranges that she be captured by the wild followers of Amir Pasha, a desert chieftain, Harcourt being left to die in the desert sun, while Neva is taken to the harem of Amir Pasha. Years later, Philip finds happiness in the true love of his wife's cousin, Joan. See review on page 565, issue of April 10. N. G. C.

PASSED BY NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP

The films of all the companies are now being submitted to the National Board of Censorship and when approved by them bear official stamp which is shown above. Screen productions having been thus approved are certain to entertain an audience of any kind without offending even the most sensitive person present.

Mr. Jarr's Magnetic Friend—Vitagraph—April 12.—Fifth of the "Jarr Family" series, in which Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley are featured. Fatima, the sentimental sister of Mr. Jarr's friend, the shipping clerk, determines to commit suicide because her lover, Dinkston, cares nothing for her. The shipping clerk calls on Mr. Jarr to help him console Fatima, and Mrs. Jarr tells her husband that it is his duty to do what he can. They visit Fatima, but as she has placed her bed against the door and gone to sleep, her immense weight keeps them from forcing an entrance. Vera Grimm, the lady reformer, learns of the case and handcuffs Dinkston. Fatima then tries to tell her lover how much she cares for him, but he flees and takes refuge in a power house. A rival suitor turns on the power of the dynamo, under which he is hiding and he is magnetized. In this condition he causes those near him much trouble, but eventually Jarr gets away from the mess and hurries home, vowing never to "butt in" again.

Lorna Doone—Biograph—(Two Reels)—April 13.—The enmity between John Ridd and Carver Doone began when John, as a lad, saw his father slain in defense of the Earl of Lorne's family, whom the marauding Doones killed with the exception of the little girl they spared, adopted and christened Lorna Doone. Grown to manhood, John was given cause to remember his oath of vengeance. The Doones, led by Carver, harried his estates and drove off his cattle. And Carver began a relentless persecution of Lorna, who loathed him. John met her in the forest and loved her. She saved his life when he was near drowning; again, she saved him from the sin of murder when, at sight of Carver, the memory of his wrongs made him draw his pistol. John, in turn, rescued her from Carver after the death of old Sir Ensor Doone left her defenseless and took her to his home. Carver, in revenge, informed the king's chancellor that Lorna was the heiress of the Earl of Lorne. Ordered to court, Lorna seemed lost forever to simple John, but fate led him to detect a conspiracy of the Doones against the king, and he was knighted. On the wedding day Carver attempted to kill John at the altar by firing through a window of the church. The bullet struck Lorna. Believing his darling dead, John executed a terrible vengeance upon Carver. But Lorna did not die, and years of happiness lay ahead of them.

His Sad Awakening—Edison—April 13.—A Wadsworth-Housman comedy of a little different type than its predecessors, but fully as amusing. Here Arthur Housman is seen as a decrepit old man and William Wadsworth, as his son who sends his father off to work on Sunday. A policeman informs the old man that he is not allowed to work on Sunday, and sends him back home. In the meantime Nowerk has had a wild dream about being carried off by an heiress who is infatuated with him. He is awakened suddenly by his angered parent who sends him into the house to help his mother wash the dishes.

The Turn of the Wheel—Essanay—(Two Reels)—April 13.—This picture, which presents Richard C. Travers, E. H. Calvert and Lillian Drew in the important roles, at times is complicated, but carries enough dramatic action to assure its success. The settings are particularly worthy of mention on account of their artistic decoration and the photography is exceptional throughout. Ralph Herbert, a railroad president, loves a young widow, but she appears to favor Jack Deerforth, a "plunger." Deerforth attempts to ruin Herbert's road and almost succeeds through the trickery of one of the president's associates. The plunger also has some letters in his possession which the young widow is more than anxious to secure. Herbert turns the tables on Deerforth and crushes him in a business deal, and then forces him to hand over the letters which the widow desires. He fears, however, that the widow's past may come between them, but is happy to hear from her that the letters were written to Deerforth by her cousin when the latter was only a school girl.

The Pollywogs Picnic—Kalem—April 13.—General Information hangs his uniform on the back porch and Ham and Bud steal it. The general has been invited to a picnic given by the Ancient Order of United Pollywogs and Ham, masking in the uniform, attends as the worthy general. A tug-of-war and pie-eating contest gives Ham and Bud an opportunity to take two prizes, but they meet their Waterloo when attempting to catch the greased pig. About this time General Information arrives, mad as a hornet, and denounces the fakers. They then flee for their lives, followed by the Pollywogs.

Black Art—Lubin—April 13.—Mr. Color is only a janitor, but when he sees his artist-boss receive a large sum of money for one of his pictures he determines to become a painter. Success is his from the start and he receives an invitation to display a picture at an art exhibition. He draws a picture of a jackass and at the same time draws a picture of his favorite aunt, whom he desires to "keep in with." The pictures become mixed and much trouble results, until the aunt learns that her picture, which has been exhibited, has won the first prize. On the same reel:

Cleaning Time—Lubin—April 13.—John Heringbone thinks he is a strong-minded man and teaches his wife to be the same kind of a woman. She takes to the lessons kindly and soon is John's boss. She forces John to do the scrubbing, washing and general housework, during the performance of which many comical incidents occur. When he is finished inside the house, he is sent out to water the lawn, but when he sees a young lady lift her skirts too high he gets so careless with the hose that he gives several people a drenching, with dire results for himself.

Mrs. Murphy's Cooks—Selig—April 13.—A laughable Tom Mix western, depicting life at the boarding house of Mrs. Murphy. Mrs. Murphy has much trouble in keeping a cook, since every time she secures one, the girl is induced to marry one of the cowboy boarders. After losing several cooks, Mrs. Murphy tries a negro tramp, but the cowboys chase him off the premises, and Mrs. Murphy has to engage another girl cook. This time she selects a man-hater, but though all the cowboys are snubbed by the new cook, Tom Mix finally comes along in the role of the right man, and the last cook, like the others, falls in love and elopes. Mrs. Murphy is finally forced to marry a down-and-out actor who can cook, and thus make sure that harmony will prevail in the future.

Between the Two of Them—Vitagraph—(Three Reels)—April 13.—George Gray, a playwright, writes his manuscript for the $10,000 play contest, while his wife looks over his work and makes suggestions. Seeing something that does not meet with her approval, the wife consults a dramatic critic and asks his opinion. He sees possibilities in it and the two set out to strengthen the points they believe weak. Neighbors tell Gray that his wife and the critic are intimate and this causes a quarrel between the playwright and his wife. He finishes his play and submits it for approval. Some time later he learns that the corrected version of the play has been awarded the prize and he now realizes that his wife must have sent in the corrected version. On the night the play is produced the audience calls for the author and Gray, appearing behind the footlights, gives all the credit to his wife. She is in the theater and leaves as he speaks. He follows her home, where a reconciliation takes place. Sidney Drew and Mrs. Sidney Drew featured.

The Fable of the Men at the Woman's Club—Essanay—April 14.—The woman's club holds weekly meetings, and Josephine attends because she has nothing else to do, though they prove an awful bore to her. The members, in turn, tolerate her presence because her mother owns a mansion which is very well fitted to housing their gatherings. The gala affair of the year is given and the men of the town invited. Josephine at last comes into her own, and completely disorganizes the meeting by flirting with all the men. She is expelled from the club, but cares very little, as she has become the most popular girl in town. Ruth Stonehouse featured.

The Cook's Mistake—Edison—April 14.—This comedy is so strenuous in its action that it was necessary to have a man playing the woman's part, a role that is taken by William Fables. James Harris impersonates the sailor who attends a mask ball in the same kind of a costume chosen by Fixt Post, a policeman. Post, it happens, fails to arrive, but his sweetheart, Bridget, thinks that the sailor is her lover, and showers on him all the persecutions that were laid in store for her policeman-lover. The affair ends in the water tank on the roof of one of the neighboring buildings.

A Voice From the Taxi—Kalem—(Two Reels)—April 14.—A cry for help from a passing taxi causes Jean and Warrington to follow the machine. It stops at a little cottage near the outskirts of the city, and the girl is carried from it to the building. Jean follows her into the house, telling Warrington to secure help from the police. The girl detective is also captured and, with the heiress, is imprisoned in the cottage. She sees the men force the heiress to sign the paper and learns from the girl that if they can reach her trustees with the document her entire estate will be lost. Warrington returns with the police and rescues the two girls. The entire party then hurry to the office of the heiress' trustees, where they arrive in time to frustrate the plot of the swindlers. One of them is captured, while the other leaps to his death. An episode of "The Girl Detective Series," featuring Cleo Ridgeley.

A Prince of Peace—Lubin—(Two Reels)—April 14.—Jim Allen sends his oldest son, Lite, to inform Tom Hurley that he intends to foreclose a mortgage on his home in the Kentucky mountains. Lite quarrels with one of the Hurley boys and a feud results. The matter is tried in court and the entire Allen family, with the exception of Lite and his youngest brother attend. Ord, one of the cowardly Hurley boys, attacks Lite and one of his brutal brothers, who is with him, is shot. He hurries to the Allen home and says that Lite fired on them from ambush. The Hurleys attack the Allen cabin and in the battle Lite is severely wounded. Rose Hurley, who formerly loved Lite, finds him and her hate of his clan is overcome by her womanly instinct; she nurses his wound. The Hurleys place a mine in the path of the Allens' advance and kill several of them by exploding it. The Allens then offer to call off the feud, but the Hurleys refuse to agree unless Lite is surrendered to them. The Allens refuse this request, but Lite, learning of the condition and desiring to save the lives of all his family possible, surrenders himself. Ord, who has left the mountains, is overcome by his conscience in the meantime and on the day the fight is raging Rose receives a letter confessing that he lied when he told the story about Lite. Just as the Hurleys are about to execute Lite, Rose, with Ord's letter, arrives and a general reconciliation follows. Edgar Jones and Justina Huff featured.

Iole the Christian—Selig—April 14.—Virginia Kirtley and Robyn Adair are featured in this one-reel story of the early Roman era. Laius, a gladiator, preparing to defend the Roman honor against the Greek, Darius, meets and falls in love with Iole, a Christian maiden, brought as a slave to the palace of King Midas. The king himself has been smitten by the girls beauty and when Laius asks him to free the Christian, he refuses. The king then plans to do away with the gladiator by stealth, but through a mistake kills Orpheus, a friend of Laius,' thinking him the latter. Laius then visits the palace, and aided by Latona, the king's favorite, escapes with Iole. N. G. C.

His Phantom Sweetheart—Vitagraph—April 14.—Jack Courtney, a young millionaire, falls asleep at his club while waiting for a friend to keep an engagement. He dreams that in a theater he meets a strange young woman and that later he finds her alone in the lobby. She tells him that she has lost her escort and he takes her home. Within a few moments they are engaged, but her strange affection bewilders him. She leaves the room and returns in a few moments, apparently transformed into a wild beast. Without warning, she rushes at him and begins to choke him. Courtney wakes up at this point and enjoys a good laugh as he realizes it was only a dream. Earle Williams and Anita Stewart featured.

The Test of Sincerity — Biograph — April 15.—When the girl he loved proved false, Marvin sought forgetfulness in hard work—the excessive physical labor

"Exhibitors as a class are boneheads"—you hear it said every day.

Now on the contrary we believe that exhibitors are an extraordinarily shrewd set of men—we mean the successful exhibitors.

Men who spend thousands of dollars annually catering to a varying public taste and make few mistakes must be shrewd. They make instant decisions and are right more than half of the time.

Instant decisions are hard to get right, but here is one that every exhibitor will "get."

Every mail brings us from 1 to 5 letters or post cards from exhibitors or theater managers expressing this thought in one form or another:

"My newsdealer is sold out on your last issue. I am saving your synopsis, etc. Enclosed find stamps for this issue, etc."

Now here is the punch. You are paying your newsdealer $5.20 a year for your copy of Motography.

which dulls the brain. As a hewer of woods on the outskirts of civilization he had begun to forget when fate brought another girl across his path. She was wealthy and already provided with a suitor. Marvin feared another bitter experience when he discovered her interest in him. Therefore he contrived an unfailing test of her sincerity. He shaved off his beard and further disguised himself by altering his manner and tones of his voice. In this guise he presented himself at her ball as a friend of the woodsman, who was ill. The ruse worked; she cared enough to seek out the man she had known, and wept at the prospect of losing him. Convinced of her sincerity, Marvin no longer restrained his love for her.

The Bouquet—Essanay—April 15.—The girl gets a beautiful bouquet of flowers from her fiance and Sweedie, the maid in her home, who also loves flowers, determines to make the bouquet even more artistic. She goes into the woods and secures nettles, which she places among the flowers. The guests arrive and all admire and smell the bouquet. All are affected the same way, and at last the cause is discovered. A policeman is called to attend to Sweedie, but he also is attracted by the flowers and suffers as the others do. The last scene shows all running to try and get away from it.

Rated at $10,000,000—Lubin—(Three Reels)—April 15.—Samuel Ellis and his second wife plan to feather their own nest by having Ellis' daughter by his first wife marry a man of wealth. "High-Brow" Joe, a crook, steals identification papers belonging to Robert Leeds, a young man who has just inherited a fortune, and comes to the hotel where the Ellis' are staying, posing as Leeds. The plotting pair immediately arrange to trap "Leeds" for Lily, but she finds him stealing from the guests and, when she threatens to expose him, is kidnapped. Leeds rescues her and is the means of having "High-Brow" Joe and his crook followers arrested. Leeds then tells Lily who he is and they are married, but Ellis and his second wife find that they have been left out in the cold. Jack Standing and Lilie Leslie featured.

The Amateur Nurse—Mina—April 15.—Polly, an amateur nurse, is inclined to be absent minded and almost forgets to take the baby out for a walk on the particular morning of this tale. Harry, the town sport, meets a very pretty young lady and accompanies her to the store, waiting outside until she gets through shopping. Polly arrives with the baby and carelessly gives it to Harry to watch while she is in the store. The young lady returns and finds Harry with the baby and leaves him on the spot. The baby begins to cry and Harry has numerous troubles in trying to quiet it. Polly returns home from the store without thinking of the baby, but the cook reminds her of what she has forgot and a chase follows. Policemen join in and excitement runs high for a while. Harry, sitting down, has a dream in which he sees himself surrounded by babies. In the end Polly discovers the baby and a reconciliation between Harry and the young lady takes place and all ends happily.

Strength—Vitagraph—April 15.—Jim Vaughn, a young miner, continually searches for gold without striking it and his wife becomes dissatisfied. Franton, a prospector, meets with an accident near the Vaughn home and he is cared for by Mrs. Vaughn. She is friendly to him, but Vaughn misunderstands and is about to kill him, when Franton becomes frightened and leaves. A note which Mrs. Vaughn receives from the prospector causes Vaughn to be even more jealous and he follows the man, determined to kill him. Mrs. Vaughn learns what has happened and also follows. Vaughn forces Franton to search for gold with him, saying that the one who finds gold first can claim his reward, while the other must commit suicide. Franton proves a coward and is about to kill Vaughn when the latter's wife saves him. Mrs. Vaughn sends Franton away from the place and a reconciliation between husband and wife takes place.

The Girl and the Matinee Idol—Biograph—April 16.—Infatuated with Horace Morse, the romatic actor, the stage-struck girl secures a place in his company and shamelessly makes love to him, never dreaming that this heart-breaker has a charming wife and two children, whom he adores. Her suitor, whom she disdains because he does not measure up to her romantic standards, is in despair, and implores Morse, whom he knows, to disillusionize the girl. Morse arranges a clandestine meeting at his house, where the girl is received by Mrs. Morse, disguised as a maid, and shown into the actor's den, purposely disarranged to shock her. She hears his children calling for daddy and is stunned by the realization that her idol is married. Morse then introduces his wife. The outraged girl sees her suitor appear from behind drawn curtains, bursts into tears of mortification and rushes out of the house. Her lover follows, does the right thing at the right moment, and is accepted—not without a sigh of regret for her lost illusions.

A Woman's Revenge—Edison—(Two Reels)—April 16.—Evelyn Nesbitt, Frank McGylnn, Bigelow Cooper, Mabel Dwight, Bessie Learn and Carlton King comprise the cast. Effie Dorgan vows vengeance on Roger Davis, a "respectable family man," who had her put out of a cafe, claiming that she made advances to him. The real reason is that she interfered with his plans to drug his companion, Bessie Aumes. Deciding to strike him through his child, Effie abducts the little girl and holds her for ransom. She relents on learning the suffering that the child's absence is causing Mrs. Davis, and returns Kathleen to her. Detectiv Smalley attempts to fasten the crime on Effie, but the child fails to identify her, Effie being disguised while in her presence. The small portion of the ransom which Davis was able to pay Effie sends to an orphan's home.

The Face at the Curtain—Essanay—April 16.—A strong dramatic picture, in which the lighting effects play a prominent part. G. M. Anderson appears in a role which is somewhat new to him—that of a burglar, who breaks into an apartment occupied by a man who is given to drink and his wife, who suffers because of his conduct. The husband returns in a drunken condition while the burglar is at work and attempts to force his caresses upon his wife, who objects. The burglar proves to be the real man of the two and defends the wife. The police are called by the husband, but before they arrive he realizes his unworthiness and shields the burglar. When the husband and wife are reconciled, the burglar slowly leaves, after returning all the valuables he has taken. This picture will undoubtedly be popular in the average picture play house.

The Third Commandment—Kalem—(Three Reels)—April 16.—Nell, Roth, Fane, Holly and Cornwall reside in the same boarding house. Roth loves Nell, and when he learns she is to marry Holly, plans to do away with his rival. He succeeds in getting Holly and Fane to quarrel and later, when Fane is found dead, Holly is arrested for the crime and convicted. When Roth swears that he saw his rival commit the deed Nell refuses to have anything to do with Roth, and when Cornwall meets Hess, the murdered man's cousin, who strongly resembles him, he determines to right matters, if possible. Hess dresses in Fane's clothes and confronts Roth, whose conscience troubles him. He goes to a dive and there meets "Dope," a tough character and Fane's real slayer. A fight ensues, in which Roth mortally wounds "Dope." The police enter in time to capture Roth, and "Dope," dying, makes a confession which exonerates Holly.

The Accusing Pen—Lubin—April 16.—Nathan Frost, owner of a large ranch, objects to John Howe, a smaller ranch owner, courting his daughter. Frost also incurs the enmity of Howe's Mexican foreman by abusing him when he is caught shaking dice with his (Frost's) cowboys. That night Frost is shot through the window, but before dying writes a note. A hand reaches through the window and tears part of the note from the dead man's hand. The remaining part is read when the body is discovered and accuses Howe. Frost's daughter discovers the other half of the note in time to save Howe from being lynched by her father's cowboys. The torn portion of the note tells that it was Howe's Mexican foreman rather than the young ranch owner himself that committed the deed. The real culprit is then pursued and shot by the sheriff and the cowboys.

The Strength of a Samson—Selig—April 16.—A one-reel Selig burlesque comedy in which a messenger boy reading a "penny dreadful" entitled "The Strength of Samson" becomes interested in the story of Jack Leftington, a strong man, who is in love with Gwendolyn, though her father makes strenuous objections. The two elope and in the jungle have many exciting experiences, though Leftington by his strength, is able to bring her safely through the perils. As the picture ends the messenger boy yawns and exclaims, "Gee! he was some strong man." William Stowell and Marion Warner featured.

The Love Whip—Vitagraph—April 16.—Business worries cause Jack Wright to apparently neglect his wife, though he really loves her as much as ever. She is advised by her older married sister to try the "love whip" of coolness and jealousy on him. This she does and Jack fights back with her own weapon, treating her with indifference and doing everything possible to arouse her jealousy. Both Jack and his wife hire a detective to watch the other, and when the male detective makes love to Mrs. Wright and the female sleuth tempts Jack the truth is revealed. Both forgive and they come to an understanding. Lillian Walker featured.

One Hundred Dollars — Biograph — April 17.—The price tag on the little Buddha read, apparently, $1.00. Young Mrs. Harvey charged it and did not discover her error until the bill came in. One hundred dollars—and Billy had scolded because she had spent a dollar on the "junk!" She resolved to return the image, but the tramp to whom she had just given a handout had taken it as the only thing of seeming worth in the house. Billy was very good about it—he borrowed the money. She did not know that he had taken it from his employer's safe. And she had something else to think about—something wonderful. On the day when the baby came Billy faced discovery. His employer was checking up the cash. He paused long enough to congratulate Billy and give him $100 as "something for the boy." Then he let fall some of the bills. Billy picked them up and slipped the hundred dollar bill among them. Fate had saved him from the consequence of his theft.

The Landing of the Pilgrims—Edison—April 17.—The exact locale of this historical event furnishes the backgrounds for Langdon West's photoplay reproduction. Duncan McRae impersonates Myles Standish, and Richard Tucker takes the part of his friend, John Alden. Margaret Prussing is seen as Priscilla. The wooing of Priscilla by Standish and her interrogatory proposal to Alden who has come to ask her to marry Standish, whom he represents by proxy, seem a bit sketchy. The picture's greatest asset is in being an authentic re-enactment of one of the most familiar epochs in American history, the landing and early Indian troubles of the Pilgrims, taken at Cape Cod, as the story in itself does not contain any great amount of romance or excitement. C. R. C.

The Return of Richard Neal—Essanay—(Three Reels)—April 17.—An expensive portrait is stolen from the home of Blake, an art collector, and his daughter, Doris, is found to be suffering from a peculiar mental ailment. Richard Neal is called upon the case, and at once suspects that Count Nikola, a clever criminal, has cast a spell over the girl and forced her to steal the picture for him. When Neal learns that Hall, Doris' lover, has been forced to introduce Nikola into society because of a debt he owed, he sets out to capture the count. A battle of minds takes place, in which Neal is victorious. The portrait is restored to Blake, and Doris' mind is freed from Nikola's influence. Review appears on page 570 of the April 10 issue.

The Girl Engineer—Kalem—April 17.—Episode of "The Hazards of Helen" railroad series, featuring Helen Holmes. The interests which own the smelter offer to purchase Williams' or Walker's mine, the choice to be made from a carload of ore submitted by each. Knowing Walker's mine possesses a richer grade of ore, Williams determines to hold up his rival's shipment, but Helen foils the plot by jumping into the engine cabin and pulling the throttle wide open. Williams is notified of Helen's act and plans to offset it by having the cards changed so that Walker's ore will be labeled as his. Again Helen foils the plot and this time exposes the unscrupulous mine owner and is the means of having Walker's mine purchased.

Just Look at Jake—Lubin—April 17.—Dr. Bob Stone is engaged to Elsie, daughter of millionaire Bond, but the old man suddenly terminates the engagement and announces that his daughter shall wed a polished society man. On the night of the wedding, Bob, rather than see Elsie married, visits Jake, a good-natured plumber who is a great friend of his. A water-pipe begins to leak and Jake is summoned to the Bond home. Bob goes with him and passes as an invited guest. The two manage to cause the wedding guests no amount of worry and eventually succeed in breaking up the entire affair. Jake switches the lights out as Bob hurries Elsie and the minister to another room, where a hasty marriage is performed. When the lights are switched on Bob and Elsie are man and wife and everybody is seen hugging someone else. Having done his work, Jake packs up his tools and returns to the shop.

The Jungle Stockade—Selig—April 17.—One of the very popular Selig jungle-zoo pictures in which wild animals are featured. Robert Barker, a newly arrived missionary, bears gifts to King Lomba and later tutors Kahma, the king's younger brother, who later saves the life of Grace, the missionary's daughter, when she is attacked by a lion. Fearing lest his brother become a Christian, King Lomba orders Kahma thrown into the jungle stockade, but the animals do not harm him and in the morning the king, conscious-stricken, liberates him and he himself becomes a Christian. Lafayette McKee and C. B. Murphy featured.

Elsa's Brother—Vitagraph—April 17.—Andre Hoffer, an old Swiss watchmaker, cares for his grandchildren, John and Elsa, after the death of their mother. The girl is quiet and lovable, but John is wild, dissipated and selfish. In time John goes West, where he believes an opportunity awaits him, but his conduct leads to a quarrel with Phil Lessing, a clean-living young engineer. John is shot and Phil's employer advises him to flee, which he does and eventually meets Elsa. He believes John dead and this obstacle rises between their love. It is removed when John returns home one day, he having only been wounded. He tells Elsa and Phil that his experience has taught him the lesson which he needed and that he is going to live straight the rest of his life. Norma Talmadge, Van Dyke Brooke and S. Rankin Drew featured.

quet, and then learns that the food has been stolen from the refrigerator. Silas and his guests start out in pursuit of the thief. The marshal, in the meantime, has divested the thieving tramp of his spoils and is just starting to eat the food when Crank and his party spy him. The marshal is disgraced. The disappointed banqueters then desert Crank for Judge Short. Willie and Susie are left to make love in peace.

The Poet and the Peaks—(Two Reels)—American—April 12.—Vivian Rich, Harry Von Meter and David Lythgoe have the leads in this beautiful story of the mountains, staged amid the superb backgrounds for which American pictures are famed. A review of the story will be found on page 605, this issue.

His Bachelor Dinner—Reliance—April 12.—At Thornton's bachelor dinner the unexpected arrival of an old friend makes thirteen at the table. Although loudly defying the old superstition of the unlucky number. Thornton nevertheless is worried by it. Meanwhile, Edna, his fiancee, has been entertaining some of her girl friends. Apparently she cares nothing about the old saying that a welsh rarebit produces wild dreams, but she secretly fears its proverbial power. That night both Thornton and Edna have dreams which are perturbing, to say the least, but it all works out happily in the end.

Persistence Wins—Beauty—April 13.—Virginia Kirtley in this picture has the role of Alice Longshore, a bachelor girl, beloved by Peter Parks, a young architect (Joseph Harris), and Phil Broughton (Webster Campbell). Alice rejects some score or more of Peter's proposals, insisting that she is going to remain a bachelor girl, but after Phil and other admirers seek to win her hand by forcible means, Alice decides for self protection she had best marry Peter. Once her mind is made up, she loses no time, but drags him off in his shirt sleeves to the minister, lest the ceremony be delayed.

The Little Matchmaker—Majestic—April 13.—Margaret, a pretty school teacher, and Joe, professor in a nearby college, are lovers. Margaret's little sister, Mildred, and Joe's brother, Paul, are childhood sweethearts. One day Paul lifts Mildred's bunny by the ears and is made to believe by the enraged Mildred that he has committed a heinous crime. Joe and Margaret soon afterward quarrel and the children, heartsick over the broken engagement, forget their own differences in their efforts to fix up the misunderstanding. Joe rescues Mildred and Paul from the blazing schoolhouse, and he and Margaret are brought together again.

The Moment of Sacrifice—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—April 13.—Van Vorst, a spy, is commissioned to obtain the plans of the army post of which Colonel Darrell is in command. He gains the confidence of the Darrell family and succeeds in stealing the plans. Later, however, he is captured. At his request he is granted a hearing before the colonel and his son, Clyde. His statement that Clyde is his son is supported by Mrs. Darrell, who confesses that she adopted Clyde on Mrs. Van Vorst's death to gratify her husband's longing for a son. Clyde makes a daring attempt to recover the stolen plans, but is discovered and saved by Van Vorst, though at the cost of the latter's life. Morgan Jones, Peggy Burke, Arthur Ashley and Fan Bourke featured.

The Wishing Stone—American—April 14.—A splendidly photographed, thoroughly interesting little love story, in which Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen have the leading roles. As children, Barbara Moore and Allan Day are constantly together, and playing one day near a large stone they pretend it's a wishing stone, and make the wish that when grown up they may marry. Later years cause a separation, but neither ever forget the wishing stone, and still later years unites them at that trysting place, where their wish comes true.

The Sons of Toll—Domino—(Two Reels)—April 15.—Guy Ford circulates the report that Jim Denton is a spy of John Wesley's, the mine owner, and has him ejected from the town. Soon after the miners strike and the militia are called in. Jim, who is a sergeant in the army, cannot bring himself to fire upon his old associates, and virtually deserts. He meets Marsden, the strikers' leader. They make up their quarrel and Jim aids the other to escape. Arriving at the cabin in which John Wesley has taken refuge, Jim prevents Marsden from harming the capitalist. When the soldiers come, demanding Denton, the deserter, Wesley tells them that Denton came there to defend him. Jim is accepted back into the troop.

Shorty Turns Actor—Broncho—(Two Reels)—April 14.—Shorty takes a correspondence course in acting, and is starred by Ketchem and Skinnem, the heads of the school, as the gladiator in "The Gladiator's Triumph." The two crooks rob a store and hide some of the loot in Shorty's grip. The sheriff arrives on the scene just in time to share with Shorty the volley of eggs showered by the audience. The cowboy reaches home safely, finds the roll of bills in his bag and exhibits it to convince the other boys that the show business pays. Shorty Hamilton featured.

The Job and the Jewels—Reliance—April 14.—Kid Kennedy, released from prison, resolves to go straight. He reads of a robbery which he knows to have been the work of Spider Morrissey, goes to his old pal's rooms, removes the stolen jewels and returns them to their owner. A detective, suspicious of Morrissey, searches his den in vain. Morrissey later realizes that Kennedy's visit saved him from arrest and the penitentiary and he calls on his friend and tells him that he has decided to live an honest life.

The Actor and the Rube—Falstaff—April 16.—Crabed old Hi Jenkins is in bad with the spinster whom he would like to make his wife. Continually losing at poker does not sweeten his disposition any. While he is on a trip to New York, an actor who sees him disguises himself to represent Hi and makes an instantaneous hit with the spinster. Hi's counterpart is so congenial that the folks begin to think that they had misjudged the old man. In the meantime Hi has had a streak of luck in New York. It changes his nature entirely, and he never returns to his former crabbedness.

The spinster is delighted with her old suitor, the actor having explained, and they become married.

The Taking of Luke McVane—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—April 16.—William S. Hart, Enid Markey and S. C. Smith play the principal parts. While playing cards with "Crooked Jack" Ashley in a gambling hell, Luke McVane is attracted to Mercedes, a beautiful girl whom he sees there. Finding that Ashley has cheated, Luke shoot him, and escapes to the desert. Mercedes rides to warn him that the sheriff is on his trail, but the sheriff and he meet, and Luke shoots him. He then nurses him back to health and accepts his suggestion to return for a fair trial. On their way back, in a thrilling scene, they repulse an Indian attack.

The Light in the Window—Reliance—April 16.—Miserly Roger Blake refuses to allow his hard-working son, Joe, any spending money, so the boy attempts to steal a few coins from his father's treasure. He is caught in the act and banished from the house. Joe's sister promises to intercede for him. The signal of the father's forgiveness is to be a light in the window. After several nights of fruitless watching Joe sees a light in the window. He bursts into the house just in time to prevent two rowdies from robbing his father. Roger Blake relents and takes Joe into partnership with him.

A Man for All That—Reliance—(Two Reels)—April 17.—Elmer Clifton and Miriam Cooper play the principal parts in this drama of recognized Reliance standard. A young convict is seen to shake hands with the warden and state detective, and exit from the prison. As he walks down town he sees a pale-faced boy thrown from the doorway of a cheap clothing store. He helps the youth to his feet and hears his story. The boy is of good parentage, and ran away from a beautiful country home to see some of the world. The ex-convict takes him home with the money given him by the warden and the grateful mother insists on his staying. He does for a time, but flees when the boy's sister falls in love with him. He leaves a note telling of his past. Luckily, the state detective meets him, hears of his late experience, and induces him to return to the girl, where he (the detective) clears his past by relating how the former convict was the victim of misguided justice.

When Youth Won Out—Royal—April 17.—The deacon and Mrs. Brown quarreled when children, and years failed to close the breach. The widower and widow strongly object to the affection which has sprung up between their children. Tom induces Lillian, Mrs. Brown's daughter, to pose as a cabaret dancer. He then entices his father, the deacon, to the cafe, where Lillian flirts with him. Tom notifies Mrs. Brown. While she and the deacon are fighting it out in the restaurant, the young folks run away and get married. The belligerent parents are inspired to follow suit on seeing how happy their children are.

Ethel's New Dress—Komic—April 18.—This is Chapter Twenty-One of the "Bill" series. Ethel attends Mrs. Climber's reception in honor of the Countess de Shilac, resplendent in a new dress. On the countess' failure to arrive, Ethel is induced to masquerade in her place. A crook and his wife intercept the titled personage's message of regret, and decide to pass themselves off as the countess and a friend. Mrs. Climber manages to keep the impostors in the reception room while Ethel is the center of admiration in the parlor. At the first opportunity Ethel escapes. The guests miss some of their jewelry and suspect the absent one of being guilty. Things really look bad for poor Ethel when the real countess arrives, unraveling the entire mix-up.

The Highbinders—Majestic—(Two Reels)—April 18.—Maggie Gallagher, to prevent being forced into a marriage with a bully and protege of her father's, takes refuge in Hop Woo's shop in Chinatown, just around the corner from her father's saloon. The Chinese merchant persuades her to marry him. Thus she exchanges a miserable existence for one even more repugnant. Years later finds Hop Woo selling his daughter by his white wife into slavery. The girl's brother and a young fellow named Donavan rescue her after some thrilling experiences and hair-breadth escapes from the law and the Chinese secret societies. Donavan sells his saloon and buys a ranch, where he takes his bride, Ah Woo, and her brother. Billie West, Signe Auen, Walter Long and Tom Wilson take the principal parts.

Big Brother Bill—Thanhouser—April 18.—Helen is very fond of Jack because he always protects her, but when he has to lick Tim for teasing Helen and Tim threatens him with his big brother, Helen becomes scared. That night she dreams that Tim's big brother is a giant. The next day she advises her brother to run, but instead he takes off his coat, and when the real "big brother Bill" appears, gives him a trouncing to Helen's great delight. Helen Badgely featured.

Universal Program

Animated Weekly No. 161—Universal—April 7.—Mustering all forces possible for the front at London, England; scenes from the Venice, Calif., road race, which was won by Barney Oldfield; Champ Clark leading fire fighters at Pass Christian, Miss.; the Panama-Pacific Exposition visited by Vice-president Marshall and Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Roosevelt; opening of Universal City, Calif.; five of Uncle Sam's divers leaving the Brooklyn Navy Yard for Honolulu to raise Submarine F-4; President Wilson and ex-President Taft assist in laying the cornerstone of American Red Cross building, Washington, D. C.; St. Louis, Mo., trade marks impersonated by living characters; Vice-president Marshall delivers an address in the open air Greek Theater of the University of Calif.; cartoons by Hy. Mayer.

The Fatal Note—L-Ko—April 7.—At the wedding dinner the disappointed rival makes disparaging remarks about the groom, and passes them under the table to, as he thinks, the bride. Instead the groom receives them, and makes an appointment with the rival in a room across the hall. He, thinking that it is the bride, goes willingly, but soon learns his mistake. He proves the stronger in the fight which follows, and the groom is obliged to flee for his life. A great mix-up follows.

The Law of the Open—Powers—April 10.—Tom Clark loses his job in the iron works and decides to go West, there being no prospects of things brightening up in the East. He promises his wife that just as soon as he has saved up enough money for their passage, she and the children will follow him. Clark falls under the evil influences of Flores and joins him in a cattle-rustling project. The Bar Z men attack the band and capture Clark. According to the law of the open, a cattle thief must hang, and Clark meets his fate. Granger, the foreman, finds a letter from Mrs. Clark in the dead man's pocket, telling him how happy she was to receive the money for the trip. The foreman meets the woman at the railroad station and breaks the news to her of her husband's death, but conceals the cause. Realizing her dire straits, Granger and the cowboys make up a collection for her relief. Sydney Ayres and Dorris Pawn featured.

Life's Furrow—Laemmle—April 11.—Jack's mother idolizes him, and on receiving a letter from him asking for $500 with which to purchase law books, she does not hesitate to ask Lawyer Robbins to mortgage. While trying to raise the money the lawyer learns that his daughter is in love with Jack, and also that the young fellow is leading a wild and extravagant life in the city. Robbins and his daughter decide to investigate for themselves. They find Jack in his apartment gambling and dissipating with a group of friends. The old man reprimands him sharply for his ways, and tells him that he ought to be at home working on the farm and trying to help his poor old mother. The lawyer's words burn through Jack's blase exterior and he returns home to make up for his past selfishness.

The Grind — Rex — (Three Reels) — April 11.—Pauline Bush, Lon Chaney and Ray Gallagher featured. Jean is the head of the Chesney household, which consists of herself and her two sisters, Rita and Lilly. As Jean is engaged as extra girl in one of the theaters, she does not have much time to spend with her sisters, one of whom is employed as Henry Leslie's stenographer, and the other as clerk in a department store. Rita tell Lilly of the many kindnesses shown her by Henry Leslie, but they keep it secret from Jean, believing her too old-fashioned. Leslie's son Bob is attracted by Jean, but she repulses his advances and throws away his daily gift of flowers. This convinces him that she is different from the average show girl, and he falls seriously in love with her. The elder Leslie invites Rita out to his summer home and she accepts. Lilly, who has been compelled to give up working because of her weak constitution, explains her absence to Jean. Realizing with horror Leslie's intentions in inviting Rita, Jean engages a taxi and speeds to the rich man's summer home. Bob Leslie also makes haste to reach his father to tell him that Mrs. Leslie is on the verge of death. Jean arrives just in time to save Rita. Bob, arriving shortly afterwards, mistakes Jean's reasons for being there and believes that his ideal has fallen. After his mother's death he learns the truth and is happy in Jean's forgiveness.

Wild Irish Rose—Gold Seal—April 12.—Rose Farley, while attending school, is seen by Captain Allen as she passes his manor one day. They fall in love and the captain tells her of his possession of an insane wife whom the doctors have just said will live indefinitely. The news shocks Rose and the captain quietly leaves Ireland. Rose's grief is great and she repulses Terrance McCoy, whom she dislikes but who insists that she marry him. He schemes toward this end and finally she consents after being misinformed as to the death of Captain Allen. As the ceremony is about to begin the captain appears, tells her that he is now free to marry her and she becomes his bride.

The Streets of Make-Believe—Imp—April 12.—Wall, a dry goods clerk, puts an order down on his cuff and the card of a customer in his pocket. That evening he sees Katherine alight from the auto belonging to a chauffeur friend, they get acquainted. Wall offers the card he had put in his pocket that day. Each thinks the other rich. Wall's cuff goes to the laundry and is seen by Katherine. She goes to the store to take advantage of the order written on it and when she sees Wall, leaves disgusted. Wall goes to the laundry and sees Katherine. They forgive each other and love is the result.

Saved by a Dream—Victor—(Two Reels)—April 12.—Harry Myers, Brinsley Shaw, and Rosemary Theby featured. Lucien Arthur, Jr., becomes infatuated with Cora du Ford, a woman of questionable character, and neglects his sweet and innocent fiancee. After losing a large amount of money in Cora's gambling rooms, Lucien returns home partly intoxicated and is met at the door by his father. An argument ensues, ending by Lucien's being struck by his father and sent up to bed. He falls asleep, and has a dream in which he sees Cora in her true light. It cures him of his foolish love for her, and he renews his attentions to the girl of his father's choice.

Skipper Simpson's Daughter—Joker—April 12.—Ned and Bill have Artemus as a rival for the hand of Nettie Simpson. Artemus and Nettie will be enriched by the money of a deceased uncle who had ordained their marriage. Bill and Ned kidnap Artemus and have a tramp appear to the bride-to-be with a note purported to be from the skipper, Nettie's father, stating that the new arrival is the real Artemus. Nettie refuses to marry the awful looking person and Artemus, escaping, arrives. Ned and Bill are forced to confess having hired the tramp and the marriage of Nettie and Artemus is celebrated.

The Old Tutor—Big U—April 13.—Stanton is warned that his death may occur any minute, if he gives way to anger. He has chosen as the husband of his daughter, a wealthy man his own age. The daughter sends her lover to her father to ask for her hand, and in his anger, the old man dies. The son and daughter are impoverished and kept alive only by the small sum their old tutor is able to earn. Ralph, the lover, who went away after the tragedy of Stanton's death, upon returning learns of the condition of his friends. He sets the old tutor up in a book store and marries the girl, Agnes.

When the Spider Tore Loose—Laemmle—April 14.—The Spider learns, on being released from the penitentiary, that Helen Arnold, a slum worker, has been kind to his wife, and has saved Amy Gray, a girl of the slums, from Gyp Carter. That night Spider, returning to his old profession, attempts to break into the home of Thomas Arnold, Helen's father. He is surprised in the act by Arnold. Learning from Amy that Gyp Carter has sent Helen a fake message, he snatches the gun from Mr. Arnold's hand, and hastens to the saloon to which Carter and his accomplice have taken the slum worker. He arrives just in time, and Gyp and his pal are handed into the custody of the law.

Under the Table—L-Ko—(Two Reels) April 14.—After the honeymoon the young husband and wife quarrel, and hubby goes out in the park and flirts with his mother-in-law without knowing her. Prompted by spite, wifey also flirts and lands a doubtful-looking fellow named Hank. Hank's wife is also afflicted with the flirting habit, and fascinates Mrs. Newlywed's father. Unfortunately they all pick out the same restaurant in which to dine. The logical place to hide, of course, is under the table, so they all try it, but with poor results. Patrons, waiters, and the proprietor become mixed up in the affair, and it takes four policemen to straighten things out.

A Man and His Money—Rex—April 15.—Helen breaks her engagement with Warren because of his extravagance. He possesses plenty of money but uses it recklessly. One day she sees him mistreat a newsboy and later he lights his cigar with a five-dollar bill. Helen is disgusted. Later when Helen and her mother, their finances gone, find themselves in poverty, Helen, paying her rent with her last bill, notices it to be the one with the burned edge, the one with which Warren had lit his cigar. The bill happens to be turned into Warren's office and the sight of it reminds him of the woman he had loved. Through the bill collector, he locates her and the engagement is resumed.

The Nomnay Buddha—Imp—April 16.—Barnard Power and his wife are made prisoners by Hindoos because of their possession of a golden statue of Buddha, which Power has insured for $100,000. The Powers hide the statue in a pool and plan to collect the insurance on it and still retain the statue. The insurance investigator discovers this. Meanwhile a band of Hindoos make the Powers confess the hiding place of the Buddha. When they look for the statue it is gone, and the insurance investigator makes his appearance with the information that the statue is in his possession and that the Powers are his prisoners as are also the Hindoos because the latter had stolen the statue originally, and were wanted by the Bombay police for this crime.

All in the Same Boat—Nestor—April 16.—Jack is fired by his boss and Billie, daughter of the boss and Jack's sweetheart, also turns him down. Jack accepts the offer of $100 a week for being the husband in name only of Miss Dillpickle and they start abroad. Billie and her father leave on the same boat and the four meet. Miss Dillpickle's first husband also appears and charges his wife with bigamy. Thus Jack's marriage is declared void and he and Billie and Jack's former boss are reconciled.

The Doorway of Destruction—Bison—April 17.—The Irish regiment, at the time of the Sepoy rebellion, is laughed at by the English troopers. Colonel Freeney and his three brothers, in the Irish ranks, receive an Irish flag made by their mother. The general's daughter laughs at it and the four Freeneys for their respect of it. The colonel places it inside his coat. During the rebellion the Irish regiment is ordered to take the city gate. Waving the Irish flag the colonel leads his Irish regiment to victory and wins the regard of the troops, his general and the general's daughter.

The Way He Won the Widow—Joker—April 17.—The widow refuses the drummer's proposal of marriage, because he is too sporty. In order to keep young, the widow keeps her son's age a secret. Consequently poor Aggie is still wearing short trousers when of age. He becomes ill and Doctor Smart, the widow's favored suitor, puts the "dear boy" to bed and feeds him medicine. The drummer decides that what the chap needs is exercise. He has some toughs torment him when he is out with the nurse, and then trains Aggie to whip them. The result is that Aggie becomes a famed prize-fighter. He revolts against having Doctor Smart courting about the house, and induces his mother to accept the drummer.

The Love That Lasts—Powers—April 17.—Reuben Burdell and Case Maxwell, country boys, are both in love with Hope Stanley, an orphan. She marries Case, an idler. Their first child dies at birth, but Doctor Hamilton conceals the fact from the sleeping mother who is in a precarious condition. Reuben, meanwhile, has become married. His wife dies on the eve of the birth of their first child. Dr. Hamilton also attends this case. Realizing the necessity of the living baby's having a mother to nurse it, and the other mother's need for a baby to love, he persuades Reuben to give his child into Hope's care. Meanwhile, Case, Hope's husband, is killed in a saloon brawl. Reuben takes care of Hope and his child, and later marries the young widow.

The Things in the Bottom Drawer—Laemmle—April 18.—Mary appeals to her mother for money with which to obtain proper medical treatment for her little baby, but wealthy Mrs. Van Stark, unable to forgive her daughter for marrying against her wishes, refuses. The baby dies. John, Mary's husband, searches in vain for employment, and finally seeks to drown out his sorrows in drink. This leads to separation, and Mary returns home to her mother who endeavors to interest her in Alberts, a foppish society man. John secures employment, works industriously, and succeeds. He joins a fashionable club where he meets Alberts. The latter twits him with the threatened divorce proceedings, and boasts that he is to be the next to possess Mary. Mary thinks of the past, and returns to her former home where she broods over her baby's clothes. John, too, is overcome with a longing to see the little cottage again. He and Mary thus are brought together, and become reconciliated.

The Girl of the Night—Rex—(Two Reels)—April 18.—When a child Nance is rescued from drunken, abusive parents by Jerry, a thief, and grows up in the company of crooks. Arthur Langham, the district attorney, collects enough evidence against the Riley gang, of which Jerry is a member, to send them all to the penitentiary. Jerry is arrested on a burglary charge. Nance visits him in jail, and he instructs her to enter Langham's home, and secure the papers. The girl is surprised in the act by the attorney, but he frees her on hearing the story of her life and obtaining her promise to lead a better life. The gang plots to waylay Langham on a lonely road. Nance writes a note of warning, and steals into his house. She surprises Mrs. Langham about to elope with one of her husband's friends. Hearing Langham approaching, Nance arranges things to look as though she has been caught in the act of stealing. Mrs. Langham sees her mistake in wishing to elope, and remains with her husband. Jerry in the meantime has broken jail. Nance joins him, and they start a new life on the money given the girl by grateful Mrs. Langham. Pauline Bush and Lon Chaney featured.

Feature Programs

Fox

The Clemenceau Case—Fox—(Five Reels).—Miss Theda Bara, supported by William E. Shay, is featured in this picture made from the novel of Alexander Dumas. As the story begins Pierre Clemenceau visits the studio of his friend, Ritz Constantin and there meets and falls in love with Iza Dobrownska. Iza's mother plots with Baron Sergius, a Russian roue, to sell him her daughter, but when Iza discovers the plot she escapes and marries Pierre. Later Sergius meets her and she becomes involved in an intrigue. Ritz discovers this and tells Pierre, who challenges and kills the baron in a duel. Iza is left a fortune by the baron and sails to America, where later come Pierre, now broken in heart and out of work, and Ritz, who is now happily married. Ritz meets Iza in a cafe and soon becomes involved in an aliasion with her. Pierre volunteers to find where Ritz is spending his time and in order to save his friend determines to make Iza love him. Pierre induces Ritz to visit Iza's apartment at midnight, where he finds her in Pierre's embrace. As Ritz bursts into the room, Pierre stabs Iza and then calls up police headquarters and requests to be arrested.

General Special

Mutual Masterpictures

Enoch Arden—Majestic Features—(Four Reels).—An adaptation from the famous poem by Alfred Tennyson with Alfred Paget, Lillian Gish and Wallace Reid in the leading roles. Enoch Arden and Philip Ray love Annie Lee and the former wins her. Two little children are born to them and they are very happy until a bad season forces Enoch Arden to leave the little fishing village. He goes to sea and as the years pass and he does not return Philip pleads with Annie to marry him. At last she consents. Enoch, who was shipwrecked and stranded on a desert island, returns after their marriage and when he sees them happy together he again goes away. Reviewed on page 603 of this issue.

The Outlaw's Revenge—Reliance—(Four Reels).—The story of the life of General Villa in which the role of Villa is played throughout by R. A. Walsh. Appearing in the cast are other such popular Mutualites, as Irene Hunt, Teddy Sampson, Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and Spottiswoode Aitken. See review on page 604, this issue.

Paramount

The Unafraid—(Four Reels)—Lasky—House Peters and Rita Jolivet are featured in this romantic story based on the novel by Eleanor M. Ingram. Michael Balsic of Montenegro is hired by Austria to stir up a revolution. Sent to Paris to purchase ammunition, he meets and proposes to Delight Warren, an American heiress, who follows him back to Montenegro, there to be married, since she declares she is "unafraid." Michael's brother, Stefan, kidnaps the girl and himself marries her for the purpose of thwarting Michael. Michael eventually takes his financial backer away from Stefan by force and carries her off to his castle, but Stefan follows them there and while a party of Montenegrans are attacking the castle, Stefan and Michael fight a duel in the dark. Michael is killed and Stefan rescues Delight, telling her that she is free to do as she likes, but Delight decides to remain Stefan's prisoner for life.

A Hydro-Aeroplane Flight at Palm Beach—(One Reel)—(First of the Paramount Travel Series)—Paramount.—In beginning the travel series, the Paramount Film Company takes us from New York to Palm Beach, Florida, en route to South America. The beach scenes are wonderfully pretty, as are the glimpses given of fashionable folk. From the aeroplane excellent views are obtained of "the largest hotel in the world," of the golf links, shaded walks and a bird's eye view of the whole panorama. The film closes with views of orange groves and colorful sunsets, while as a final hit there is a cartoon comedy drawn by C. R. McCauley.

When We Were Twenty-One—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—The film version of the famous story enacted the country over by Nat Goodwin is thoroughly satisfying, being produced as it is by Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford with William Elliott in the role of Richard Audaine, nicknamed "The Imp," ably supported by Marie Empress in the role of "The Firefly." Dick Carew, guardian of Richard Audaine, called "The Imp," thinks that a marriage between "The Imp" and Phyllis would be an ideal one, though the girl does not agree, much preferring Carew himself. Finally "The Imp" meets "The Firefly," is infatuated and "The Firefly," learning that he is to inherit a fortune on his twenty-first birthday, sets her cap for him. While Carew and three of his friends are waiting the coming of Dick to celebrate his twenty-first birthday, the young man is off being married to "The Firey" and when he returns to celebrate his wedding, "The Firefly" learns he has no money and at once jilts him and elopes with an old gentleman, who has won a great deal of money at roulette. Carew soon realizes that Phyllis is not after all in love with "The Imp," and "The Imp" discovers that Peggy has all of "The Firefly's" beauty and none of her worldliness.

Pathe

The Price of Fame—Pathe—(Three Parts).—The sterner side of life is allowed to take its natural course in this story, and the title of the series, "Who Pays?" of which this is the first release, suggests itself in one's mind as a natural sequence of the events. Henry Merwin, a young man in ordinary circumstances, marries Ann Booth. They live happily in a little bungalow, until Opportunity beckons to Merwin. His rise to fame as a singer is rapid, so rapid that he has no time to think of his wife and child. Divorce results. Later, Merwin loses his voice, sinks lower and lower, and is finally consumed by his vices. Henry King and Ruth Roland featured.

Pathe News No. 25—Pathe.—This issue of the topical shows U. S. army recruits sailing from Fort Slocum, N. J., for Hawaii and the Philippines; the burial of Lincoln Beachey at San Francisco, Calif.; a group of perfect babies at the eugenic congress at Los Angeles, Cal.; first work of the Columbia crew on the river at Edgewater, N. J.; Glacier Park Indians' arrival at the San Francisco exposition; in the war section, views taken at Lausanne, Switzerland; Galicia and Przemysl, Austria.

Pathe News No. 26—Pathe.—This issue of the topical shows President Wilson and ex-President Taft laying the corner stone of the National Red Cross headquarters at Washington, D. C.; the opening of the bicycle racing season at Newark, N. J.; Vice-president Marshall arriving at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco; close-up views of a fourteen-inch gun being shipped from Sandy Hook, N. J. for the Panama Canal and, in the war section, views taken at Sommeilles, France; Colchester and London, England, and near Ypres, Belgium.

Colonel Heeza Liar in the War Zone—Pathe.—This is another of the wonderful adventures of Heeza Liar, a character immortalized in J. R. Bray's animated cartoon comedies. While fishing in the war zone, the colonel hooks a submarine, and rides in tow at the rate of several miles a minute. The race ends by the submarine's coming to the surface to get a glimpse of its persistent pursuer. The irate commander reprimands Heeza Liar severely for causing him so much trouble, but this does not console the colonel for the loss of the whale which he thought he had caught. C. R. C.

The Serpent Sign—Pathe—(Episode One of the New Exploits of Elaine)—(Two Reels).—The New Exploits of Elaine gives promise of becoming even a greater serial than was its predecessor, all the former stars being cast in their familiar roles in the new serial, and in addition Edwin Arden appearing in the role of Wu Fang, the Chinese master-criminal. See review on page 607, this issue.

Runaway June—Reliance—(Episode Thirteen)—April 7.—After Durban's death in the swamp June is seized with a sudden fear of Blye. She flees to the shore, and hides under the nets in an old fishing boat. Blye follows but fails to find her. From a distance Ned witnesses the incident, and also sees a ragged, unkempt-looking man jump into the boat, and push off to sea. Hiring two sailors, he gives pursuit in a small craft. Blye, also, is soon scouring the bay. Meanwhile, June's struggles with the half-witted barbarian overturn the boat. She is rescued by a fairy-like girl who takes her to the throne of Hierophant, a charlatan mystic, where she dances with the rest of his fair captives. Hierophant wishes her to dance before him in a filmy costume. Shocked, she makes her escape, aided by one of the girls, and rejoins Ned. The man with the black vandyke appears on the scene, fells Ned, and drags June into his boat.

Universal Special

The Black Box—Universal—(Episode Five)—(Two Reels).—Quest attempts to prove that he was struggling with the operator in the signal tower at the time the Salvation Army girl and his secretary were found dead in his apartment, but when he learns that the operator is dead, he is without evidence. Mrs. Reinholdt's jewels are also found to be missing from his safe. He is placed in jail, but Lenora discovers Craig trying to burn a piece of the Salvation Army girl's dress in the professor's fire place and sends Laura to free Quest. Laura and the criminologist manage to change clothes and the latter escapes. Lenora makes Craig a prisoner, but while she is guarding him the mysterious hands seize her and drag her away. When Quest arrives at the professor's estate he can find no trace of the girl. A review appears on page 610 of this issue.

World

Hearts in Exile — Shubert — (Five Reels).—Clara Kimball Young featured in a story founded on the novel of the same title by John Oxenham. Miss Young as Hope Ivonovna has one of the best roles of her career, the environment in which she is placed being deeply romantic and exciting. The power of Russian police officialism, the cruelties to political prisoners exiled to Siberia, life in convict stations, Cossack fights and a wolf chase are only a few of the incidents amid the innumerable scenes of the drama. The picture was directed by James Young.

Housekeeping Under Cover—World—(One Reel).—Kathryn Osterman has the lead in this production. Mr. and Mrs. Gramercy and their niece Mabel live in the fashionable Gorham Hotel with their friends Mrs. Richman and son, Frank, aged twenty-five. The Gramercys try to economize by preparing breakfast in their own apartments, but endeavor to keep the fact secret, lest it may ruin the love affair of Frank and Mabel, and since it is also against the rules of the hotel. After Mr. Gramercy drops some breakfast food on the floor of the hotel office, Mrs. Gramercy spills the cream, the birds steal the food placed on the window ledge, and the electric stove, short-circuited, sets fire to the hotel, the Gramercys enter the Richman apartments to discover that the Richmans like themselves are cooking their breakfast in their rooms.

Health by the Year—World—(One Reel).—Jeff De Angelis is featured in the role of Mackenzie Finch, who thinks he is sick of many complaints, but is only an invalid of imagination. One after another he quarrels with his doctors, until only David Harrison, who is in love with Finch's daughter, Maud, remains in town. Harrison is poor, so Finch will not allow his daughter to become engaged to him, but in fear of death he is compelled to summon Harrison. The doctor tells Finch that he will surely die, and finally draws up a contract by which it is agreed at the end of a year if Finch is alive, Harrison is to receive $500 and Maud is to marry him. If either breaks the agreement he forfeits $1,000. Near the end of the year, Finch being well, tries to break the contract, but is made so wretched by the doctor that he finally surrenders.

The Magic Bottle—World Comedy Stars—(One Reel).—Tom Wise is featured in this one-reel comedy, which relates how Bender and his friend, the widow Templeton, decide that bachelor life does not agree with Jenkins, and therefore, start a hunt for a wife for him. Jenkins eventually marries the widow and Bender, to get even, presents the newly wedded couple with a bottle of water, telling them it will change color in the event of either one digressing from the path of fidelity. While traveling, Jenkins flirts with a young lady on the train, and Bender, who is lunching with Mrs. Jenkins, pours ink in the bottle. Jenkins, seeing it, is panic-stricken. When the wife finds it she also attempts to hide the bottle, but eventually empties it and fills it with clear water, much to Bender's amazement.

Miscellaneous

The Curious Conduct of Judge Le Garde—(Five Reels)—Life Photo.—The picture is based on the play of the same title by Victor Mapes in which Lionel Barrymore enacts the chief role of Judge Legarde whose mind is deranged when he is knocked down by an automobile and leads to his becoming a Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. At night he is a thief and a gangster, leader of a band of crooks; by day he is the kind and lovable Judge Legarde, presiding over his court in a dignified manner and apparently totally ignorant of his doings of the night before. Eventually an alienist discovers a way of curing his sick brain and Judge Legarde becomes at all times the man he is by day. See review on page 610, this issue.

The Man Who Vanished—(Four Reels)—Apex.—Happiness reigns in the home of James Dell until Lieutenant Scott, one of Mrs. Dell's old admirers, comes to visit them. Mr. Dell at once becomes jealous and, noting an old photograph of himself and its remarkable resemblance to Robert Jones, the butler, he determines to take the butler's place and watch his wife. Next morning Mr. Dell is missing, and a watch and fob belonging to him are found in possession of the butler, who, though protesting he is really Mr. Dell, is dragged away to a sanitarium and confined. Meanwhile, Robert Jones, the real butler, reads in a newspaper of what has happened and returns. When Dell later escapes from the sanitarium and tries to kidnap his own daughter he is captured and a little later brought face to face with the real butler, when all is explained. Mrs. Dell than produces a letter from Lieutenant Scott which proves she loves her husband truly.

John Redmond, the Evangelist—(Four Reels)—Great Northern.—After losing his parents, who died over grief of their son's being sentenced to jail, John Redmond obtains his release and devotes his life to the evangelistic movement. The leader of a gang and his followers are planning an act of burglary. One of the gangsters who had decided to lead an honest life appeals to John for moral aid, and the preacher tells him the story of his own life and the man turns over a new leaf. Nellie, the reformed gangster's sweetheart, rejoices over his reformation and Redmond continues his life's vocation.

O-18—(Three Reels)—Cosmofotofilm.—Otto and William Bergmann are apparently peaceful foreign merchants conducting an importing business in a strange land, though in reality they are government spies. The two Bergmanns are watched by their stenographer, who is really "Operative No. O-18," an agent of the secret service. The Bergmanns receive a message from the sky ordering them to blow up a bridge across which a troop train is soon to pass. They surprise the stenographer listening at a dictaphone and render her unconscious, together with a man who is assiting her in her spying, and the girl is carried away in a motor car, though the Bergmanns are followed by a motorcyclist, also a secret service man. The girl is eventually saved and through the information she gives the secret service men the train is prevented from crossing the bridge and the bomb in exploding kills the Bergmanns.

Pages From Life—(Four Reels)—Gloria—Fanny, an orphan, wastes the riches of her heart on Tony, a worthless scoundrel. He forces her into the underworld, but though she mingles with vile and wretched creatures, she remains pure in heart. When the den in which she is confined is raided, she is captured and thrown into prison, but on regaining her liberty finds employment, and later falls in love with one of her former jailers. Later her husband learns her whereabouts and asserts his legal right to again live with her. The husband is now employed as a spy, and compels his wife to go to a nearby fort to secure some fortification plans, when to her surprise, she finds the officer in command of the fort the same man with whom she is in love. She steals the plans because her husband had promised to take her child away from her if she failed to get them, but in doing so is discovered, imprisoned and condemned and on her deathbed she hands a last message to one of the sisters who attends her and from the message the story of the picture is alleged to have been taken.

Was He a Coward?—I. S. P. Company—Barney Crawford is ordered from his home by his father, when the latter gets tired of paying the enormous bills contracted by him. He embarks on a tempestuous career that ultimately lands him in jail for picking pockets. He escapes and returns to his old haunts, and while in a Chinatown resort, prevents the robbery of Lois Jordan, daughter of a millionaire mining man, and in the fight that follows Barney is shot. Lois' father takes him to a hospital and while there Lois frequently visits him. Barney determines to turn over a new leaf, and one day while walking across a bridge he beholds a woman fall overboard from a passing ship. He leaps from the bridge and rescues her, his act being seen by Lois and her father, who take him to their home. Jordan gives him a position in his office and he and Lois become lovers. Storms, a clerk in the office, has been robbing the safe, and when Jordan discovers it the blame is laid on Barney, who denies his guilt. The detective who arrives recognizes Barney as an escaped prisoner, and though the latter leaps through the window, the detective eventually captures him. Meanwhile Storms confesses his guilt and, though proved innocent, Barney is compelled to return to jail and serve out the balance of his term. Upon regaining his liberty he visits Lois, and the two are clasped in each other's arms when Jordan enters and orders Barney from the house. He realizes he cannot ask Lois to become the wife of a social pariah, and though she sends for him to come back, as she is ready to elope with him, he manfully leaves her, because he believes himself unworthy of her love.

The Last Round—Apex—On the night that Captain Jack Fordyce wins the army middleweight championship, he is invited to take dinner with Mary Mollet, daughter of Colonel Mollet, and accepts. The colonel owes Ralph Morton, a money lender, $10,000, and Morton threatens to foreclose, but tells him if a marriage with Mary can be arranged he will drop the bill. Mary, next day learning her father's story, resolves to marry Morton, and Jack learns that $10,000 alone can save her from becoming Morton's wife. Later, Jack meets Jim Connor, a hitherto unknown pugilist, who looks like a wonder. That night at the club, Morton boasts that he has found a man whom he will back for any amount to beat all comers, Jack takes his wager and arranges to have Jim Connor matched against Morton's man. Morton, learning of Jim's prowess, tries to bribe him, but is roughly handled, and through treachery disables the fighter. At the last moment, Jack is compelled to himself enter the ring, and finally in the tenth round knocks out Morton's man. Jack's winnings are used to clear the colonel from debt, thus leaving the way open for Jack to marry Mary.

Kriterion Program

The Amateur Burglar—Punchinello.—Mrs. Jones takes the latch key away from her husband because he insists on staying out nights at the club. Davis of the club ridicules the police and bets he can rob a house without being caught. He goes to his own home to don his burglar disguise and there captures a real burglar. He locks the man up and then departs to rob a house. Attempting to get into the Jones' mansion, he is hit over the head by Mrs. Jones, who is waiting her husband's homecoming. Jones, hearing the noise within, thinks he is trying to enter the wrong house and goes across the street to the Brown's. Meanwhile the real burglar escapes from the Davis home and is captured by the police, but later escapes. Mrs. Jones 'phones the police she has captured a burglar and it is only when they arrive that Davis' identity is discovered. The real burglar takes advantage of the situation to rob the Jones' home. Davis, escaping from the policemen, bumps into the burglar carrying the loot away from the Jones' home, seizes it and returns to the club, where he claims to have won his bet. His fellows refuse to believe him and visit the police station where they return the silver to the Jones', who are lamenting their stolen property.

The Power of Prayer—Alhambra—(Two Reel).—Dan Ashton, finding farming unprofitable, goes west to dig for gold that he may pay back the money he has borrowed from a money lender, who is in love with his daughter. In the west Ashton is sold a worthless mine by two rascals. The daughter, meanwhile, is pursued by the money lender, who agrees to tear up the mortgage if she will marry him. The young bank clerk, whom she really loves, is about to rob the bank that he may loan the money to his sweetheart, but is saved by an old maid who is fond of him and advances the money herself. With it the claims of the money lender are satisfied. The father meanwhile falls into evil ways and takes to drink, but his daughter prays for him and her spirit leads him, in a dream, to the abandoned mine he had bought, and urges him to dig deeper, with the result that he finds gold. The father returns home rich, pays the old maid back the money she loaned and the young people are bethrothed.

The Only Son—(Two Reels)—Trump.—Chester Crane grows to manhood surrounded by luxury and naturally becomes somewhat lazy and wayward. He eventually falls in love with Camille Yvonne, a notorious actress, and though his father warns him, he continues to pay her attention. Determined to teach the boy a lesson, the father visits Camille and makes love to her, resulting in her forgetting Chester. At a cafe one night the son discovers his father in a private dining room with the actress and is amazed. Thoroughly disgusted and cured of his love for the girl, Chester returns home with his father, where everything is explained and forgiven.

A Mother's Awakening—(Two Reels)—C. K.—Thelma Monsby is compelled by her father to marry Jack Davenport, a wealthy young man to whom her father is indebted, though she loves Anges Cameron. Thelma is unhappy in her married life and after her baby girl is born still continues to receive attentions from Cameron. One night when she is attending a dance with the latter, Davenport applies some medicine which is poison to his gums to deaden the pains of toothache, and while his back is turned the little girl drinks some of the medicine from the bottle. The nurse who is summoned manages to save the child's life, but when the mother returns from the ball, she realizes her heartless conduct and love awakens at last.

The Cowboy's Sweetheart—(Two Reels)—Kriterion.—Jim Lawson, a cowboy, while visiting in the city is beaten up in a saloon and taken to a hospital where he is nursed back to health by Mary Denney. Upon returning to the West, Jim secures a good position on a ranch, and later Mary comes there to nurse the ranch-owner's wife. Jim is eventually made foreman, and when Mary has finished her task, she becomes his wife.

A Smuggler's Love—(Two Reels)—Alhambra.—John Kingsley, while at a fishing village marries a young girl secretly, and later is called back to the city on business. In his absence the girl gives birth to a baby girl, and the townspeople look upon her with contempt, but Luke Martin, a smuggler, takes care of the mother and child. One day when attacked by revenue officers, Martin escapes, and a stray bullet kills the mother. Years pass, and Kingsley, having learned of his wife's death, marries again and lives in luxury with his new wife, their two children and Tom Walsh, an adopted son. When the little girl, who was left an orphan by her mother's death, grows to womanhood, she visits the city to seek employment and becomes a governess in the Kingsley family. Tom falls in love with her, and one day the two chance upon her mother's grave where they find Martin, who recognizes the girl and tells her his story. Kingsley agrees to care for her and later Tom and she are married.

The Emigrant's Peril—(Two Reels)—Santa Barbara.—Donatello, an Italian musician, adopts Julia, the daughter of a friend who died in Italy, and secures her a position in the orchestra where he plays. Unknown to Julia, her foster father is head of a band of crooks, who steal among the fashionable folk who visit the restaurant. Frank Walsh, a detective, suspects Donatello and shadows him home. When the girl learns the true nature of her foster father she determines to leave him, but he forces her into a room and locks the door. Walsh enters the house, arrests Donatello and rescues Julia, and as time passes the two fall in love and marry.

The Hidden Treasure—Alhambra.—Rena and the housekeeper are willed the house of old Scroggs when he dies, and told that they may occupy it jointly for one month, during which time they may search for the fortune hidden somewhere about the premises. Rena attempts with the aid of Fritz, her sweetheart, to scare the housekeeper off, so she may search the whole house. While Fritz is disguised as a burglar, a real burglar enters the house. Fritz chases the burglar, seizes an old blunderbuss and takes aim at him. His shot goes wild and hits an old grandfather's clock in the library, smashing it, and revealing the jewels within. Rena claims the legacy and the housekeeper recognizes in the burglar her long lost husband, so is satisfied.

Filmdom's Weekly Activities

Officers have been elected for the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig, Essanay, Inc., an announcement of whose plans appeared in the issue of MOTOGRAPHY dated April 10, together with more detailed information regarding the union of these four big producers in the issue of last week. These officers are: Albert E. Smith, president; Seigmund Lubin, vice-president; William N. Selig, treasurer, and George K. Spoor, secretary.

As already stated, the object of the combination is to release big feature productions direct to the exhibitors, and branch offices will, within the next week or ten days, be established in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Kansas City, Dallas, Atlanta, Portland and San Francisco.

Selig Discusses New Combination

The Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay Motion Picture Company, incorporated in Albany, N. Y., on April 5, with a capitalization of $500,000.00, has opened offices at 1600 Broadway, New York City.

The union of these four great motion picture concerns to market their more pretentious features direct to the exhibitors is a most important sign of the times that has occurred in filmland in many years. These four great manufacturers expect to release regularly through the General Film Company as heretofore, with the exception of the greater film dramas of four or more reels in length.

William N. Selig, treasurer of the new combination, while in New York last week, was interviewed regarding the plans and prospects of the new affiliation, and said:

"The Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay Motion Picture Company is destined to fill a long-felt want. The question of proper distribution channels for the more elaborate motion picture plays has been one puzzling to us manufacturers for some time. We believe this question has been satisfactorily settled for all concerned and especially for the exhibitor of motion pictures, who now will be permitted to select his own feature program direct. We are confident that the exhibitor will be delighted over the new plans just now announced, for we shall in every respect, in quality of service, in expediency of service and in all publicity details, fulfill a necessity on the part of the exhibitors in filmland.

"For some time the Selig Polyscope Company has been engaged in the production of Spectacular Specials, a name we have coined for Selig photoplays of five reels or more in length. We have spared neither time, thought nor expense to make these Spectacular Specials noteworthy in every detail. Strong stories, convincing acting, clear photography and proper scenic background are essentials to the worth of any multiple reel pictureplay, and we believe that our forthcoming Spectacular Special releases contain all of these qualifications.

"Harold MacGrath's novel, 'The Carpet From Bagdad,' now ready for release, is to my mind an unusually beautiful photoplay. It contains proper atmosphere of the Orient, an unusual plot, and the sandstorm on the desert, I think, will be found to be very realistic.

"I also look for Edward E. Rose's drama, 'The Rosary,' which we have placed in motion pictures, to prove not only entertaining but appealing. Kathlyn Williams and other well known players of our western stock companies are featured in both of the above productions.

"The novels of Anna Katherine Green are known to almost every reader. 'The Millionaire Baby' is perhaps her most popular work. There a number of unusually elaborate scenes, in which hundreds of supernumeraries are utilized. Harry Mestayer, the well known actor now assuming a leading role in 'On Trial,' has a prominent part in the cast.

"There is more of a need for comedies of a refined nature on the motion picture screen. A series of the legibly funny falls and chases will not always incite laughter unless the situations are developed through a logical plot. Charles Hoyt's comedy, 'A Texas Steer,' is a comedy of the refined classification. It is a comedy of true American life. Tyrone Power makes his initial appearance in Selig Spectacular Specials, by undertaking the role of Maverick Brander.

"I recently accompanied a party of our players to the Canal Zone, where they filmed the most striking scenes in Rex Beach's novel, 'The Ne'er-Do-Well.' The filming of this Spectacular Special has been completed. I believe I can safely say that this film drama will be unusually pleasing to the photoplay public, and will prove a worthy successor to 'The Spoilers.'

"The Selig Polyscope Company has other Spectacular Specials in the course of preparation and releases will be announced in proper time. We are endeavoring to give each and every one proper attention, and no expense will be spared to uphold the standard previously attained by our multiple reel programs."

The interview given by Mr. Selig is significant. He is a man who gives only infrequent interviews, and he is certainly enthusiastic over the prospect of the new feature film combination, which he thinks will be beneficial not only to exhibitors, but to the motion picture public.

It is said that the Selig Polyscope Company has a large number of elaborate Spectacular Specials in the vaults ready for release when the proper time comes. The company has also secured the exclusive rights to many unusual stories from the world's leading authors. These plots include not only standard and popular novels, but the scenaric output of many of the leaders in this difficult line of work.

To Aim for High Quality

The formal announcement last week that the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies had combined for the purpose of producing the highest type of feature photoplays ever made has created widespread interest and marks a decided epoch in the motion picture industry.

According to Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, the combination was formed in order to enable the manufacturers to get in closer touch with exhibitors and to produce the finest grade of features possible at moderate prices.

"The new combination," said Mr. Lowry, "will mean a big thing for the exhibitor. We are all pledged to produce the very highest quality of feature film and these features, which will run from four thousand feet upwards, will surpass by far anything that we have ever made in the past. For some time we have been studying the demands of the public for feature pictures and we have arranged our plans accordingly.

"It is impossible to put too much emphasis on the type of productions we intend to make. Neither time nor money will be spared in making each feature a masterpiese in every sense of the word and it will be possible for the exhibitor to obtain these at moderate prices. Offices have been opened in New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Salt Lake City, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas, Atlanta, Boston, Philadelphia, Columbus and other cities and we shall be in direct touch with the exhibitors.

"The new organization, which will be known as the 'V-L-S-E, Inc.' will have the entire direction of the exploiting of the features and will be in close contact with exhibitors in every section of the country. The releasing of features will begin immediately.

"As an indication of what the public may expect in the way of features, I might mention some we have completed in our own studios which will be released under the new arrangement and direct to the exhibitor. These include "Eagle's Nest," by Edwin Arden, in which Arden and Romaine Fielding are featured; "The Sporting Duchess," Cecil Raleigh's comedy drama with Rose Coghlan and Ethel Clayton, supported by George Soule Spencer; "The Valley of Lost Hope," a spectacular drama by Shannon Fife, in which Romaine Fielding is featured; "The District Attorney," Charles Klein and Harrison Grey Fiske's well known drama with George Soule Spencer and Dorothy Bernard; "The College Widow," George Ade's sparkling comedy, featuring Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer; "The Evangelist," Sir Henry Arthur Jones' powerful drama in which Gladys Hanson is starred, supported by George Soule Spencer, and "The Climbers," by Clyde Fitch, in which Gladys Hanson is featured and supported by an all star cast of Lubin players.

"Among the other big productions now in the making or shortly to be produced are "The Light Eternal," by M. V. Merle; "Mrs. Dane's Defense," by Henry Arthur Jones; "The Great Divide," by William Vaughn Moody; "The Woman in the Case," "The Truth," "Captain Jinks," by Clyde Fitch and many others.

"In every production made a prominent star will be featured and supported by the strongest cast obtainable."

Famous Players' Third Birthday

On April 12 the Famous Players Film Company celebrated its third anniversary as a producer of features of undeniable merit. It was in April, 1912, that Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter founded the company and began to turn out films which they believed would meet with public approval.

Those in the trade well remember the success of "Queen Elizabeth," with Sarah Bernhardt in the title role and "The Prisoner of Zenda," featuring James K. Hackett. After these two productions had been circulated, the popularity of Famous Players was firmly established and exhibitors asked for similar releases at more frequent intervals. Mary Pickford was made a permanent member of a stock company which was formed and the manner in which the films featuring her were received is too well known to need repeating. The same applies to the other production made by this company.

When the Paramount Pictures Corporation was formed, the output of the Famous Players Company was increased to thirty-six per year and at the present time extra releases bring the total up to forty-eight. The company holds the film rights to the Frohman and Henry W. Savage plays.

Universal Establishes Eastern Studio

On May 1 all of the Eastern Universal Manufacturing Company players will move to their new quarters in New Jersey, vacating the New York City studios where the Imp and Victor brands have been produced for some time past. In the future all Eastern Universal productions will be made in the New Jersey studios, this being in accordance with the idea of making all pictures under one roof, which has been so successfully worked out in the West by this firm.

Marie Dressler to Lubin

Marie Dressler, probably the funniest woman on the stage today, and widely known in filmland for her "Tillie's Punctured Romance," has signed a contract with the Lubin Company at a very large salary and is to be starred in a number of featured comedies written especially for her.

Miss Dressler will be seen only in five reel comedies and she will make three of these each year. Elaborate preparations are being made for the first of these big reelers. The comedienne will arrive at the studios in Philadelphia the first of June, the close of her present theatrical season, and the work of producing the first feature comedy will begin then. For her supporting company Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, is selecting the most expensive list of players that has ever been used in a Lubin production.

During her theatrical engagement in Philadelphia, Miss Dressler spent several days at the Lubin studios and also at the Lubin ranch at Betzwood, Pa. The things that interested her most were the mechanical departments, for Miss Dressler knows the technical side of the motion picture business from the ground up and she had, as she expressed it, the time of her gay young life in the laboratories at the ranch inspecting the new inventions for improving photoplays and watching the experts there carrying on their experimental work with new printing devices and natural color motion photography.

New Carbon Plant

America will suffer no longer from a carbon famine if the present plans of J. S. Speer, president and general manager of the Speer Carbon Company, St. Marys, Pennsylvania, materialize, for Mr. Speer announces that within the next three months additions will be made to his plant, which will virtually double its capacity.

Ever since the European war caused a shortage of the German made carbons in this country, Mr. Speer has been attempting to perfect a carbon that he hoped would prove the equal, if not the superior, of those manufactured abroad, and recent tests given these carbons by experts seem to prove that Mr. Speer's ambition has been achieved.

Last week ground was broken on Blaisdell avenue for a plant 60x150 feet in dimension, which will be devoted solely to the manufacture of carbons. The building will be of brick, steel and glass construction throughout, and will be equipped with modern machinery electrically driven.

The new factory, when completed, will involve an expenditure of from $50,000 to $75,000, and will have a capacity of 25,000 carbons per day.

Securing Noted Stars

The Metro Pictures Corporation, now under full steam and going at a fast clip, startled the trade this week with an offer of $25,000 to Geraldine Farrar, the noted opera singer, for her appearance in a gigantic spectacle of the great historical play, "Barbara Fritchie." The offer was made through Richard Herndon, a theatrical broker, and was communicated to Miss Farrar after she had practically signified her willingness to listen to reason. Mr. Herndon had already spoken to the famous singer and then approached the Metro directors, asking them if they would be interested.

Speaking for the Metro Corporation, Dr. Rowland, president of that concern, said: "We are in the market for the world's greatest stars, and our flexible distributional policy permits us, I presume, to go farther than any other firm to make bids for noted stars and plays. We were instrumental in securing Mr. Faversham for $15,000, and have offered another almost unapproachable star $20,000 for one picture. And now even Farrar's name came to us from a most substantial source; we were quick to see the commercial value of the great singer's name and it will be a regular Metro release, as will the Faversham and Petrova pictures."

Olga Petrova, whose second screen production, "The Heart of a Painted Woman," is but just released, is now a regular star on the Metro roster, she having contracted with the Popular Plays and Players Company for a period of two years, and to appear in sixteen plays. The biggest and most emotional plays will be furnished her.

In addition to Faversham, Petrova and Farrar, if that artist accepts the Metro offer, Orrin Johnson, Jane Grey, Olive Wyndham, Thomas Jefferson, Adelaide Thurston, Emily Stevens, S. Miller Kent, Lionel Barrymore and Edmund Breese will characterize the various Metro releases for the forthcoming three months.

Ernest Shipman Resigns

By mutual understanding with the directors of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Ernest Shipman who has been conducting the feature department handling territory outside of Greater New York on "Neptune's Daughter," "Damon and Pythias" and Williamson Submarine Pictures, will terminate his services in this department some time during the month of April in order to become actively connected with plans that have been under consideration for some time in connection with the feature end of the film business. Mr. Shipman has planned a temporary rest before plunging into the maelstrom of new events and will make a trip to the Pacific Coast, of about six weeks' duration, stopping at Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Denver and Chicago. His business plans will be divulged at a later date.

Sidney Olcott Engaged

The Famous Players Film Company last week made an important addition to its producing staff by the engagement of Sidney Olcott, one of the most prominent and capable feature directors in the world. Not alone is Mr. Olcott one of the oldest directors associated with the screen, having produced motion pictures constantly for the past eight years, but he also possesses a degree of versatility and a store of varied experience rare indeed to directors of either the spoken or silent drama.

The noted director, as is commonly known, was responsible for the production of those two celebrated screen successes, "From the Manger to the Cross," and "Colleen Bawn." More recently, Mr. Olcott has been producing independently under the name of "Sidfilms," which activity he was induced to abandon by the offer of the Famous Players Film Company to become a member of its producing staff.

Actors Thrill Tourists

Passengers on a Southern Pacific train bound for San Francisco one day last week were thrilled by a mad race between two automobiles on a long roadway bordering the track. The first car was a low rakish roadster and the man at the wheel apparently was cut and bleeding about the head.

The pursuing auto was an official looking big car and the occupants were shooting their revolvers continuously at the driver of the fleeing car. The train crew and passengers, watching the death like race, suddenly realized that just ahead a short distance the rail road track crossed the path of the racing machines.

Evidently the driver of the roadster was planning to have the train cut off his pursuers and thus give him a chance for a getaway. Closer he came to the crossing; the engineer was blowing the whistle frantically and everyone in the richly furnished cars was on tip toe. Just as the cow catcher of the big locomotive touched the crossing the roadster's driver, giving his car more power, leaped the car across the perilous path to safety.

Then it was the engineer discovered a little group of men gathered around a motion picture camera, the operator of which was unconcernedly grinding the crank.

And then as the Pullmans pounded past, each window decorated with blanched faces, the "Flying A" dare devil company, making "The Diamond from the Sky" gave a lusty cheer to tell the tourists all was well. Irving Cummings who plays Arthur Stanley in the forthcoming picturized novel was the driver who startled the engineer.

The scene was just part of a sensational chain of thrilling exploits in which not only Mr. Cummings, but Lottie Pickford, William Russell, Charlotte Burton, George Periolat and Eugenie Forde figure. The story of strong dramatic qualities is punctuated with dare devil stunts, that enter logically and as part of the story interest rather than merely to give a thrill for thrill's sake. The first release of this great picture is scheduled for May 3.

Making Convention Arrangements

Marion S. Pearce of Baltimore and M. E. Cory of San Francisco, national president and vice president respectively of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, are in New York this week on business connected with the National Convention and Exposition which is to be held in San Francisco July 13 to 16. Mr. Cory has been made chairman of the committee in charge of all arrangements. He will be assisted by a committee of San Francisco exhibitors. The other members of the general executive committee are President Pearce, Secretary W. R. Wilson of Columbus, Ohio; Treasurer, P. J. Jeup of Detroit and A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles. Judge Tugwell will have charge of the arrangements for the entertainment of the visitors while in Los Angeles.

San Francisco has the reputation of knowing how and with the added attraction of the great Exposition now open, and the great picture studios at Los Angeles, this should be the most successful convention ever held.

Mr. Cory announces that the Selig Company's Coast Special will arrive in San Francisco on the morning of July 13 and remain the entire time the convention is in session, including the grand ball, with which the convention closes, Friday night, July 16. This ball will no doubt witness the greatest gathering of motion picture stars ever known.

Headquarters of the convention committee will be established in the offices of the California Exhibitors' League, room 306 Mechanics Bank building, Market & Mason streets, San Francisco. There will be a general information bureau maintained and hotel reservations and all other matters will be gladly attended to for anyone who will address the committee. Full information will be published in MOTOGRAPHY each week as the plans of the committee are completed.

Manufacturers of pictures and accessories and supplies are urged to take advantage of this opportunity of placing their business personally before large numbers of exhibitors who have never been able to attend any of the national conventions that have been held in the east. These western exhibitors on the whole are ahead of their eastern brothers in every way. They have better houses. They get higher admissions. They buy more and better equipment. Manufacturers will miss an opportunity if they are not at San Francisco with a big exhibit. If they have an exhibit at the Panama Pacific Exhibition, it is especially to their interest to help get the exhibitors to attend the convention. They can maintain simply an information booth, distributing invitations to visit the exhibition, and giving its location.

New Bill in Pennsylvania

Pennsylvania is going to continue its board of censorship, though the Stein bill, providing for the repeal of the censorship law, which was backed by the motion picture people in the Keystone state, was pigeonholed indefinitely. The new bill, introduced in the senate by Augustus F. Daix of Philadelphia, which creates a new board of censorship, higher salaries and a greatly increased number of subordinate employes, seems likely to pass.

The Daix bill meets with the approval and endorsement of Governor Brumbaugh, Attorney General Brown and State Censor Breitinger, and will probably be put through the senate without amendment, thus throwing the battle over its final adoption onto the floor of the lower branch of the House of Representatives.

Meanwhile the joint legislative committee of exchangemen and exhibitors is preparing to conduct a fight against the new bill, which concedes very little more to the motion picture interests than does the present censorship law. A strong fight will be made for lower fees for examination of films, for a provision requiring the state, and not the picture men, to maintain the cost of projection rooms, and for the right to appeal to a court of justice from what are considered unjust decisions of the censor board, a right which, under the present law or proposed Daix bill, is not conceded.

The bill is now in the hands of the Senate Judiciary General Committee, of which Senator Henry A. Clark, of Erie, is chairman, and late this week will be reported out, and an attempt made to railroad it through the upper branch of the legislature.

August Joins United

Edwin August, late of Kinetophote, has been added to the producing staff of the United Film Service and will make films to be released under the Pyramid brand. He is at work at the Cliffside, N. J., studios of that company at the present time, having Ruth Blair and Iva Sheppard as supporting leads.

Lubin Producing Many Comedies

The first of the Lubin comedies in which Billy Reeves, the widely known English comedian, pantomimist and acrobat, is featured, will be released on the regular service Saturday, May 15. It is called "The Substitute," and is one of the liveliest and funniest farces ever made by the Lubin Company. According to the present plans, a Reeves comedy will be released each Saturday.

The Lubin Company is giving special attention to comedies at present and has an elaborate program ahead. Mr. Reeves and a special company of fun makers are in Jacksonville making one and two reel comedies. Jac Tucker and Eva Williams, who won much fame in vaudeville, are also at the Lubin southern studio with their own company making comedies, as are Pat Rooney and Marion Bent, known from coast to coast.

In following out plans adopted some time ago the Lubin Company is securing the services of the best fun makers in the country regardless of expense, and will make comedies and farces running all the way from split reels to five reelers.

Plan of "June" Beauty Contest Announced

Norma Phillips, who has been playing the leading role in "Runaway June," the Reliance serial, is busy preparing her wardrobe for her trip to the west coast, during which she will act as hostess to the most beautiful woman in each state who wins the beauty contest being conducted by the producers of the George Randolph Chester play.

By arrangements recently made, an exhibitor who has been showing the picture and who now wishes to reap the benefits of the national advertising campaign which is being conducted by the Reliance Company may do so before he has completed the fifteen episodes.

The rules of the contest call for fourteen votings in each theater. This does away with voting on the day the contest is introduced into the house. This first occasion being reserved to the nomination of the candidates. An exhibitor may enter his house in the contest any time up to the eleventh episode and make up for the time lost by conducting contests between the showings of the following episodes.

Thousands of women who have learned of the contest through the various national mediums which Reliance has been using, are hard at work planning to represent their state on the trip and it is needless to say that exhibitors in all parts of the country are almost as interested in the affair as the contestants themselves.

Limits Standing Room

A bill limiting the number of persons permitted to stand during performances in motion picture houses to one person for each three feet square of space in the enclosure between the seats and the walls of the theater recently passed the New Jersey house of the legislature after a contest, during which several attempts were made to amend the measure.

William N. Selig recently observed his fifty-first birthday.

Universal Beauty Contest

There is little doubt but that the Universal Film Company's Beauty Contest, a happy thought of Joe Brandt's, is going to be one of the biggest things of the year, as far as publicity is concerned, for, at present forty-two of the leading papers of this country are working in conjunction with the Universal to find just who is the most beautiful girl in each state.

The contest began in the majority of the forty-two papers on the first of April and already several thousand photographs have been sent in by girls all over the country, and each mail is adding large numbers to the list.

On or about May 22 the winners of each state will be announced and these winners will board a special train at Chicago which will carry them to Universal City. Upon their arrival there a committee will decide just which one of the group is the most beautiful and she will be offered a position as a Universal star in one of the West Coast companies, at a star's salary. She will be known as the most beautiful girl in America, or, the American Beauty.

Arrangements are now being made with one of the largest theatrical concerns in the world to give this American Beauty a week's engagement at one of the best theaters in New York City, where she will exhibit the latest fashions of the season. After this engagement she will return to Universal City and at once start work in one of the Universal companies.

While on the coast the party will make Universal City its headquarters and will make detours to the San Diego and Panama-Pacific Expositions. The Universal has been fortunate enough to obtain Mrs. Champ Clark as leading chaperone of the party.

Tennessee May Have Censors

The creation of a Tennessee board of censors for moving pictures is the purpose of a bill introduced in the lower house of the Tennessee legislature on Tuesday, March 30, by representative Nichols. The proposed board which was recommended in a message by Governor Rye is patterned somewhat after the National Board of Censors.

The bill provides that each reel of film shown in the state must first be inspected by the board, which is to be composed of two men and one woman. The board members are to receive $15.00 each annually, and the censors will tax each film inspected $1.00, if it be the ordinary one thousand foot length, and $2.00 if the subject is a multiple reel.

Before any film can be exhibited it must be preceded on the screen by a leader reading "Approved by the Tennessee Board of Censors" followed by the number of the film. The bill, if passed, will take effect within ninety days following its passage.

Mutual Adds Child Players

A distinct novelty is provided for small motion picture "fans" in the foundation of an entire company of children, all under the age of ten, for regular work at the Reliance-Majestic studios at Hollywood, Calif. This company, which is under the direction of C. W. and S. A. Franklin, is to work out a series of photoplays especially for children.

The plots to be handled will be designed to appeal first of all to the children, and will constitute a regular Reliance offering. It is felt that with other childhood subjects, released by the Reliance, many photoplay theaters will be enabled to afford their small patrons regular children's days.

"The Commuters" Ready

George Kleine will give a private exhibition of his latest photoplay "The Commuters" featuring Irene Fenwick, supported by Charles Judels and a superb Broadway cast, at the Candler theater, on West Forty-second street, New York, Monday, April 19, at 10:30 a. m. All exhibitors and their friends are invited. "The Commuters" will be released April 26.

Chicago Theater Installs Pictures

The La Salle Opera House, Chicago, Ill., became the temporary home of moving pictures this week. The much discussed film, "Three Weeks," was on view there from 9 in the morning until 11 at night, running continuously, with all seats selling at 25 cents. This motion picture feature was the object of a royal battle between the Chicago censor board, controlled by Major Funkhouser, and Mayor Harrison. No children will be admitted.

Successor to "Neptune's Daughter"

Contracts have been executed between a syndicate of motion picture producers and Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, author of "Neptune's Daughter," under the terms of which "The Mermaid" will be released in seven reels as a special feature for September bookings. The plans include a trip to the Bermudas utilizing the wonderful scenic effects used in "Neptune's Daughter."

Simultaneously with the launching of "The Mermaid," Captain Peacocke's play of the same name which was orginially constructed for Annette Kellerman will appear upon the legitimate boards. Arrangements have been made to feature Nell Shipman in the part of the Mermaid and it is more than likely that Miss Shipman will collaborate with Captain Peacocke upon the construction of the photo drama.

A unique feature of the production is that one hour after contracts were executed, enough foreign territory had been sold to more than pay for the cost of production. Frederic Shipman who bought the rights to Australia and New Zealand on "Neptune's Daughter" has secured the first refusal to "The Mermaid" which will follow up the tremendous success he is now having with "Neptune's Daughter" in Australia. Three other contracts of importance have already been closed. The picture will be exploited upon a percentage basis in the first class theaters of the United States and Canada.

Rolfe Secures Another Big One

R. A. Rolfe announces the signing of contracts between the company bearing his name and the famous writer, George Ade, by which Mr. Rolfe comes into possession of the screen rights to the author's celebrated play and book "Marse Covington," which, as a play and as a novel enjoyed the widest vogue and in the pictorial production the Rolfe people will have the aid of George Ade, who will work on the scenario. Edward Connelly, who originated the role of Marse Covington in the play, will have the lead. The production will be staged at the Rolfe studios, Yonkers, N. Y.

The Master Producer and His Masterpiece

BY TERRENCE EUGENE RAMSAYE

I HAVE just spent two absorbing, intense hours with the master producer the man whose genius in organization is going out to the millions in "The Diamond from the Sky." This man is S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company. Hutchinson—when a man gets in to his rank you don't call him mister any longer—has solved the most difficult problem ever presented to a producer of the film drama. "The Diamond from the Sky," from the very unusual nature which makes it so powerful a story, presented perplexing technical problems without precedent or parallel, problems of cast, problems of action, problems of photography.

The author of this wonderful romance over-rode every convention in writing his burning, heart compelling story. He mastered his own problems of technique and left a hundred others for the master producer of the picture to solve. It is probably because of the very nature of these difficulties that Hutchinson has been inspired to the attainment of his striking success in the pictorialization of this story.

Hutchinson, I expect, is the only man who could have done it. When I talked to him, he all unconsciously made me think of Thomas A. Edison's indefatigable application, of Arthur Brisbane's chain lightning imagination, of the art that is known as Belasco's, and of the judgment that is second nature to Connie Mack.

The master producer.

Some weeks ago Hutchinson came to Chicago and waited, as the hour of the decision of the judges neared, to get the winning manuscript. Then for three days and two nights he sped westward to Santa Barbara in uninterrupted study of his chosen jewel. The appealing story of "The Diamond from the Sky" was read and re-read in those thousands of miles of plain and mountain. The master producer, spurred to thought by the impelling story, was concentrating on his task—the business of taking the written words, those personalities of the cold typed line, to cast them into form and flesh, putting the spark of life, of essence, of actuality, into the novelist's conception. It was Hutchinson's task to paint a thrilling, tense panorama of human life, to reconstruct history that never happened except in the imagination of the writer of "The Diamond from the Sky."

To this end he must choose of men and materials. He was as a painter before a black canvas, fired with a great conception. On his palette we see all of the color properties of the film art of pantomime, we see the helplessness of little children, the innocence of girls, the bravery and daring of young men, we see cunning, avarice, hate, love, adventure, success and failure, hope and despair, the curve of pretty lips, the brawn of a villain's hairy arm—and these the master producer is blending for his masterpiece a painting to be made of life and people for the depiction of this romance.

"Long before I stepped off the train into the sunshine of Santa Barbara I had decided on the man who should do the producing," Mr. Hutchinson related reviewing his labors. "One reading of 'The Diamond from the Sky' has shown me that this was the time for the master stroke, the time to 'burn all the powder' for my greatest picture.

"In choosing this man and in the making of the choice of those who were to assist him I had all the talent of the motion picture business to choose from, and I gave it very much the same earnest attention a commander-in-chief would give to the choice of a general for the decisive battle in the war over there.

"The man I chose was Jacques Jaccard, the director who is now putting 'The Diamond from the Sky' into films. He combines with inborn ability extreme accuracy and artistic conscience as a scene builder. His experience has been of just such range as best fits him for his assignment. And great among his qualities is youth. Romance is illuminated only with the fire of youth. I early resolved that the energy and inspiration of youth must shine through this production in every line.

"In selecting a camera man my thought fell almost automatically on George Hill—George 'Tripod' Hill. I took pains to investigate particularly the quality of his work, and when I came to his good work on 'The Hypocrites' I knew he was the man.

"Then there came the matter of the technical director. There is only one Fred Priest, and that was the answer. The selection of exterior scenes and the construction of interiors is a particular and special part in the production. It has been a part of his work to take the old Virginia with all its cavalier atmosphere and set it down in California to give it a place in the sun.

"With this technical phase of the problem solved

I came to the, perhaps, more difficult and intangible problems of the cast.

"In the selection of the actors I considered hundreds and talked to scores of them. Again I had the best of all that America had to offer in moving picture talent to choose from. Every possible candidate for a place in the cast was weighed and analyzed in the light of the exacting requirements of the wonderful story and the conception of the finished picture. The list of rejections and reasons would be a mighty tedious array. It was a process of winnowing, testing, sifting, trying, a sort of smelting of art and talent in personalities. I was determined that there should be no dross in this cast.

"In the first place, because of the nature of the plot, it became instantly necessary to enroll two sets of actors of star quality—and in the use of that word 'star' let me remark that nobody was chosen because of a name, because of a reputation. It was not stars that I sought, it was the capability in each actor and actress which would mean that they could best and most significantly re-live before the camera the powerful story of 'The Diamond from the Sky.'

"The action of the piece rapidly eliminates the actors who first appear, hence the double set of stars.

"Then, for the highly important purpose of preventing the confusion of personalities in the story on the part of the moving picture patrons, I had to seek the height of contrast in the types of actors. It would never do to permit the slightest possibility of the spectator mistaking the identity of a single character for a single scene.

"In the opening of the romance it is necessary to represent the hero and heroine as babies.

"That baby business certainly was a problem. As the novel relates, both of the babies were born on the same day—these changeling children of fate. We had to have two babies, a boy and a girl, each four weeks old, a dark infant to represent Arthur Stanley, the gypsy child, a fair baby as Esther, true heiress of the title and the diamond from the sky."

"And just who are these babies?" I interrupted, with a grab at this very human phase of the story.

"That I am not free to tell now," Hutchinson replied. "You see we had such a hard time finding the particular kind of babies necessary that we had to go on a baby hunt first and get the parents to consent to their appearance in the film afterward. Once we located the babies it took a good deal of diplomacy to induce the rather prominent parents to let us cast them in the play. We promised we would not tell, and I guess that only I and the parents know just who the babies in 'The Diamond from the Sky' are."

So these two infants will go out before the millions of people who are to laugh and cry at the heart tugging play of situations in this romantic picturized novel, probably never to be known in their actual personalities. And the babies themselves will not remember and never will know, unless it is repeated to them in the after years to come.

"It is not often," Hutchinson continued, "that babies are so important to the trend of the plot. Usually babies are incidental. Here they are everything.

"Then as the action progresses the principals appear in their early youth. The role of Esther made it necessary to get a young girl. The lead calls for a girl with all that is lovely and desirable in a girl. I had to find an actress with that indescribable charm of youth, pretty, fresh, vivacious, innocent, ingenuous, magnetic. It was necessary not only that the actress have these qualities, but that she be able to 'get them across' from the screen to the audience effectively. It was necessary to find the girl whose charm and magnetism was infectious, and communicable in the expressions of the silent drama.

"Human beings are more interested in other human beings than anything else. People are interested in people. And all of this interest is focused, centered to a brilliant point in the woman. Probably the young girl as a type is of more interest to more people than any other possible single subject.

"You can imagine how seriously and earnestly I studied and considered the question of the girl for Esther's role.

"In this connection I interviewed about twenty-five prominent moving picture actresses. The choice was made when I talked with Lottie Pickford.

"In this choice the Pickford name, made famous through the successes of Lottie's sister Mary, had absolutely no weight. Lottie was chosen for herself alone. And she would have been chosen for the part if the name Pickford had never been heard in filmland before—because of all the actresses available she is so pre-eminently the one for the part. She is so thoroughly capable of conveying all those great vital elements of the story which center about her. She wins sympathy and understanding as readily with a smile as with tears. She is able to carry over the great, gripping suspense, the trembling uncertainties of the story.

"Then we come to the almost equally important part of Arthur Stanley. Here again the high quality of youth was required. I chose Irving Cummings because he is a young romantic actor. He is clean cut, aggressive and cast in the mould of the gentleman adventurer. His ideal fitting to the part may be indicated pretty well by calling him of the cavalier type, the strain of the southern cavalier tinged with the French influence and the grace of the Bourbons.

"For the part of Blair Stanley, calling for a 'silk hat or gentleman heavy' the possible actors were considered one by one until the elimination left the ideal man for the part, William Russell, otherwise known in the film world as 'Big Bill.' An actor could not be better chosen for his delicate business of being both a gentleman and a villain, a suave, polished gentleman of unscrupulous purpose in rivalry and avarice. Also he furnishes the required contrast to Cummings in the role of Arthur Stanley.

"A vitally important choice had to be made in casting the role of the adventuress who appears as the accomplice in the genteel villainy of Blair Stanley. Here again I was fortunate in being able to use Charlotte Burton, a most accomplished actress, for the purpose. In the vivid play of motives and impulses this actress must portray all of the cunning of a clever woman, she must have the world-wise knowing eye, the impressive personality, and yet there must be no suggestion of grossness. It must be done with consummate delicate skill—and we have the woman for the part.

"I made a ten strike in the selection of George Periolat for the part of the 'mean heavy' who appears in the deeds of daring and violence inspired by the circumspectly careful villian, Blair Stanley. Periolat has the reputation of being the best make-up artist in the country. Also I have never seen his rival in facial expression. He handles his face as a sculptor would clay.

"Then there is William Tedmarsh as a lucky human fact in the cast. He appears in the part of Quabba, the hunchback gypsy. He is convincing and compelling of attention on the screen. None of the characters could be chosen with cursory consideration. Every part is an important part and I have put all that is in me and all that experience has taught me in the building of the production.

"In the plant at Santa Barbara where the play is being filmed, nature herself is making a great contribution to this great romance. In Santa Barbara we have such wonderful qualities of light that I sometimes hesitate to talk too enthusiastically of it, lest competitors 'see the light' and move in with us. While 80 per cent of the moving pictures are made in California and the quality of California sunshine is shouted to the world I believe that we, in Santa Barbara, have an advantage even over the other sections of the state. The lay of the land conduces to a remarkable clarity of atmosphere, a striking crispness and clearness of light. On the west the ocean mists and winds are broken and warded off by the Channel Islands, and to the north are the mountains that have sheltered the old town of Santa Barbara through the centuries.

"An unlimited range of photographic and scenic possibilities is presented by our location. Natural settings that range from the tropical to the temperate zone in flora are available in easy distance. There is inspiration in Santa Barbara itself. It was the home of the old Spanish dons and grandees centuries before civilization had pushed west of the Atlantic seaboard. The relics of these old days of Spanish occupation remain, and the spirit and grace of Spanish cavaliers and beautiful senoritas still hovers in the air. There is the indefinable flavor of romance that we want for the bewitching story of 'The Diamond from the Sky.'"

Hutchinson paused in one of those moments of reflection when his busy mental processes speed on ahead of his deliberate, careful speech.

"I was thinking," he resumed," of the great and probably much underestimated value of environment in the production of moving pictures. We have done everything that can be done to give the players in this romance film the advantages of environment. It is one of the measures taken to guarantee perfection that we have given them inspirational surroundings.

"For the time in which this picture is being taken they are as people transformed—they are from day to day actually living the story of "The Diamond from the Sky.' They are surrounded by the beauty, charm and romance that they are transmitting to the film. Not even the most minute detail has been neglected. Even the fittings in the dressing rooms have been considered to prevent the introduction of a jarring note.

"The proper sort of environment makes for excellence of acting just as a becoming gown makes a girl step with pride.

"The actors in this production are leading a sheltered life. I have spared nothing to preserve their pose, to keep them happy, absorbed and concentrated in their work. There is not the possibility of professional jealousy or flare-ups of 'artistic temperament.' Even the words of helpful criticism are carefully given that they may not carry the least tinge of disappointment to the actors.

"The romance must be vibrant with sympathy, suspense and immediate, gripping interest.

"We have gone to limits before unknown in the making of films to secure this.

"And the world will know how well we have succeeded when the first release is made May 3."

There you have it—Hutchinson, the master producer, and his masterpiece.

The Cruise of the Universal Special

BY ED MOCK

WHATEVER follows may be charged directly to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, New York, for it was as early as last December when Mr. Laemmle expressed his wish that I be present at the opening and dedication of Universal City, California. At that time the date had not been determined, but I made the promise, health permitting, that I would be among those who would answer to roll call.

* * *

I am something of a stickler for details and having a tale to tell, shall begin at the beginning and finish at the end. I have confessed the secret. This story was wished upon me. Mr. Laemmle was the wisher and I the wishee. Incidentally, should others be inspired along similar lines, I see no reason, measured by the complete pleasure I have experienced, to accept all like offerings. My initial trip to the Pacific coast was delightful.

* * *

Those of you who read MOTOGRAPHY have been advised from week to week regarding the "Cruise of the Universal Special" which left Dearborn Street Station Sunday night, March 7. Many pictures have been printed in these pages which gave a partial idea of the fun the party was having. It seems absurd that there is more to say and that more pictures might find interest. But to those of us aboard that special de luxe train, the half hasn't been told. While names have been printed, they were handled in slap stick fashion and without regard to classification. There have been exaggerated statements both regarding the number aboard and why they were there. Better have another look at the list.

The Ladies—Mrs. Carl Laemmle, Mrs. Maurice Fleckles, Mrs. Herman Fichtenberg, Mrs. James V. Bryson, Mrs. John A. Gilbert, Mrs. Hugh C. Weir, Mrs. Edward Bauer, Mrs. Homer Croy, Mrs. Jack Marks, Mrs. R. D. Craver, Mrs. Harry E. Wolff, Mrs. Harry E. Vestal, Mrs. Pierpont J. Morgan, Mrs. Ned E. Depinet, Mrs. F. A. Van Husan, Mrs. Vernon R. Carrick, Mrs. Lewis M. Swaab, Mrs. M. Henri Hoffman, Mrs. D. B. Lederman, Mrs William A. Johnson, Mrs. E. S. Pearsall, Mrs. Ed J. Mock and the Misses Kitty Kelly and Celia Schnitzer.

Identified with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company—Carl Laemmle, president; P. A. Powers, vice president; George A. Magie, special representative; Charles V. Henkel, Hugh C. Weir, C. M. Stevens, U. K. Whipple, Harry E. Wolff.

Exchangemen—Herman Fichtenberg, New Orleans; Maurice Fleckles, Louis Laemmle, Chicago; James V. Bryson, Minneapolis; William Oldknow, Atlanta; Claud R. Plough, Frank J. Flaherty, Chicago; J. I. Schnitzer, Indianapolis; George W. Weeks, Detroit; R. C. Cropper, Kansas City; C. D. Mattingly, Oklahoma City; C. E. Van Duzee, Minneapolis; James Arthur Eslow, Boston; Clair Hague, Toronto; Ed. T. Exhibitors—Edward E. Bauch, Freeport, Ill.; R. Kershaw, Winnipeg, Can.; Harry H. Burford, La Crosse, Wis.; John A. Gilbert, Chicago; Edward Bauer, Schenectady, N. Y.; T. W. Franke, Chicago; Louis M. Ridout, Denison, Tex.; William A. Mustard, St. Paul; Oliver A. Rowe, St. Paul; Jack Marks, Clarksburg, W. Va.; E. S. Pearsall, Eau Claire, Wis.; H. E. Jenkins, Salisbury, N. C.; R. E. Spraker, Rich Hill, Mo.; William Roper, Council Bluffs, Ia.; J. D. Thatcher, Jr., Kansas City, Mo.; J. J. Germaine, Chicago; J. A. Shugert, Buffalo; A. E. Elliott, Kansas City.

The Press—Hy Mayer, Puck; Homer Croy, Leslie's Weekly; Joe Mitchell Chapple, National Magazine; Wright A. Patterson, Western Newspaper Union Lists; W. J. Page, Billboard; Miss Kitty Kelly, Chicago Tribune; Wm. A. Johnson, Motion Picture News; Ed J. Mock, Motography.

Miscellaneous—J. F. Condon, Buffalo; Carleton J. Birchfield, Chicago; Harry E. Vestal, Columbus; D. J. Chatkin, Chicago; P. J. Morgan, Cleveland; Eugene T. Smith, Rochester; Alfred Milton Handy, Chicago; Dr. W. S. Driscoll, John A. O'Day and George D. Fogarty, Buffalo; and the children, Master Julius Laemmle, Master Jack Warren Kerrigan Mustard, Master Weir, Master Marks, Master Bauer and his sister.

* * *

The purpose of the party was first, to have the best time of their lives; second, to see all that was to be seen between Chicago and Los Angeles; third, to take in the expositions and fourth, to get back home right side up with a buffalo nickel as a sinker!

* * *

This, then, is merely a preliminary skirmish. It is to give you a hint that my system is overrun with memories of a very long, pleasant and wholly satisfactory journey with a throng of other persons similarly inclined. To rally all these people from the eighteen states, plus the Dominion of Canada, was something of a job. And to have 'em make a train lying in a railroad shed in a Chicago terminal—all without hitch and all hungry for the first dinner—is due largely to Joe Brandt, that tireless hustler whose name and Universal film is pretty much one and the same.

* * *

Those of us who have traveled toward the east and who had been occupied with our packs during the day, were ready for that first meal and were not slow in finding the dinner. This is the program, offered as a specimen of the meals that were to follow for the week ahead of us:

DINNER

Blue Point Cocktail

Fresh Vegetable Soup — Consomme in Cup

Salted Almonds — Bur-Gherkins

Shad with Roe, Hoteliere

Potatoes Persile — Cucumbers

Sweetbread Pattie, Toulouse

Peach Colbert

Filet Mignon, Renaissance

New Potatoes in Cream — Green Peas

Roast Young Turkey, Cranberry Jelly

Water Cress Salad

Nougat Ice Cream — Assorted Cakes

Roquefort — Neufchatel

Coffee

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

Special Party to Opening of Universal City, California

March 7th—13th, 1915.

* * *

The train was our train. It was the picnic-ground all the way from the locomotive to the observation platform. We could do what we pleased to do and we pleased to do pretty much everything a crowd can think of. There were the baggage, buffet, diner, two Pullmans, two compartment and a combination compartment and observation lounging car. These cars were accompanied by the same crew, all the way across the continent. The itinerary included stops at Kansas City, La Junita, Denver, Colorado Springs, Albuquerque, Williams, Grand Canyon, and San Bernardino. But it stopped other places as well and it will be part of my business to make this clear to you.

* * *

Now that I have the party aboard train and dinner being over, we'll scatter to various games of cards in various places with varied scenery. The diner offers a splendid close-up interior after dark, but this installment being without illustration, you must forego the scene till later.

* * *

We will wake up next week at Kansas City.

* * *

It has been so long since I've been on this writing game, I feel rusty, but maybe I'll warm up to it as we go along.

* * *

There is one task before me that will require a lot of time and effort and some of your patience. This was wished on me by P. A. Powers, who was along all the time. I am charged with having been responsible for his middle name as you know it. Mr. Powers had with him the old family bible to prove that my mistake was truly unwarranted. When I said his middle name was Aloysius, I spoke without regard for the facts. Mr. Powers' full name is Patrick Anthony Powers. I want you to respect Mr. Powers' wish and remember that Anthony part. By the time we take another trip together I won't be surprised if his old bible will prove him to be St. Anthony.

* * *

The lingering thought that blended into my first night dreams was the absence of Joe Brandt.

* * *

But we had George A. Magie and it was one gay party always willing to let "George do it." And what was better George did it for all of us.

* * *

This is the life.

Fundamental Principles
TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

CONVERTING THE CURRENT.

WHEN transforming alternating current from high to low voltage, there is considerable loss of volume, although not so much as when a rheostat is employed. In fact, whenever an arc light is used, there is bound to be wasted current, unless it is originally supplied at about 50 volts pressure. In the case of alternating current we have just seen why it is not very satisfactory even at the proper voltage. Therefore the problem is, how to deliver to the arc, with the least possible loss, a direct current at a voltage of about 50.

The most obvious way to do this is to connect up a high voltage motor and a low voltage "dynamo" as shown in figure 28. Motors and dynamos are very much alike, consisting of a large ring-shaped magnet surrounding a revolving "armature" which is also an electro-magnet, or rather a series of such magnets arranged about and turning with the shaft of the machine. Without attempting to explain the operation, let it suffice for the present to say that one of the ball-shaped machines in Figure 28 is a motor, and the other a dynamo.

ROTARY CONVERTER.

The motor receives from the service main a current of (say) 120 volts, which may be either direct or alternating current, and this current causes the armature to revolve. Now the shaft of the armature is direct connected (by means of the "clutch" in the center of Figure 28) to the shaft of the dynamo, which also has about it an armature. When the latter revolves it generates a current of any kind that may be desired up to the "power" of the motor, after allowing for losses.

For our purpose the dynamo would be "wound" for a current of 50 to 55 volts and an "output" of not less than 1 kilowatt (equal to 50 volts times 20 amperes). One horse-power equals about 750 watts, so that if there were no losses a 1 1-3 h. p. motor would suffice, but the friction of the moving parts and the resistance of the wires cause a loss so considerable that in the case being discussed a 2 h. p. motor would be employed, which simply means that we put into the converter 2x750 or 1,500 watts, and get out 1,000 or thereabouts (loss = 500).

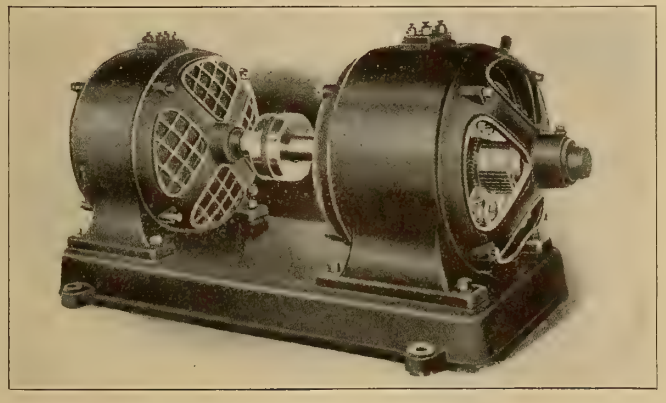

Fig. 28. Rotary converter.

EFFICIENCY OF ROTARY CONVERTER.

This is not nearly so bad as with the rheostat, for in that case we would have to put in more than 120x 20 or 2,400 watts to get out the required 1,000 (loss = 1,400). The advantage of the converter is still greater in the case of higher original voltages, for when the current is supplied at 240 volts, and converted to 50 volts, the figures are something like this.

Current going into motor is the same in power, or 1,500 watts, equal to a trifle over 6 amps. at 240 volts; current coming out of dynamo is the same as above, or 20 amps. at 50 volts and the loss is about the same, but if of a rheostat were used in such a case the loss would be the difference between current going into rheostat (20+ amps. at 240 volts=4,800 watts) and the useful current at the arc (20 amps. at 50 volts = 1,000 watts) or 20x190 equals 3,800 watts, as compared with 500.

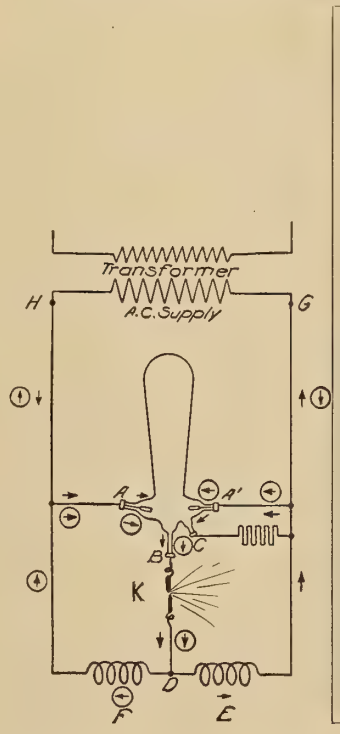

Fig. 30. Diagram of rectifier.

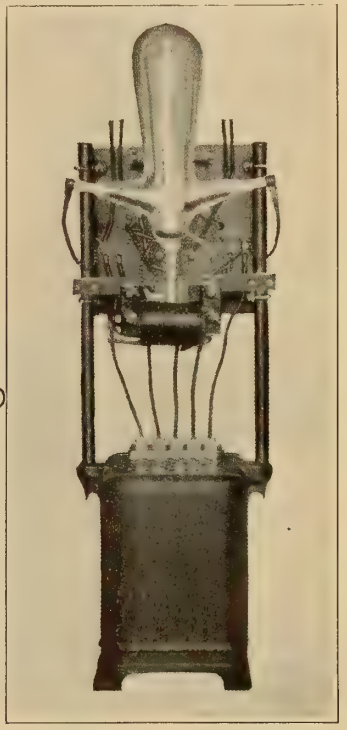

Fig. 29. Mercury arc rectifier.

These figures are about the same when an alternating current motor is coupled to a direct current dynamo, and the result is just as satisfactory.

Several objections can be made to the rotary converter, such as expense of installation, in addition to the smaller but still considerable loss of current, so inventors are still busy with the problem, and especially with reference to converting alternating into direct current. One solution which has promised much is illustrated in Figures 29 and 30. It is known as the mercury arc rectifier, and has the wonderful property of permitting current to pass in one direction only through its main conductor, which is vapor of mercury or "quicksilver."

MERCURY ARC RECTIFIER.

We are all more or less familiar with at least the appearance of vapor of mercury as it shines in the glass tubes of the Cooper-Hewitt light, making everybody look a ghastly purplish green, but helping the photographer to take his black and white pictures almost as well as in daylight.

In the rectifier, as in the lamp, the electric current passes from one end of a glass tube to the other, but in the rectifier, the narrow cylindrical tubes of the lamp give way to the large bulb with two prongs, shown in the illustration.

The alternating current supply, coming from the transformer at the top of Fig. 30, passes first to the right and then to the left, but instead of going all the way around, each impulse is sidetracked, the current from the left following the plain arrows through the "anode" or positive pole, A, then through an "arc" of mercury vapor to the "cathode" or negative pole, B, then through the projection arc or other "load," K.

It then turns to the right through the "reactance" E, where a very strange thing happens. The impulse is literally held back for a small fraction of a second so that it will still be flowing when the opposite impulse starts from the transformer toward the right. This new impulse follows the arrows which are enclosed in circles, passing through the anode A, and thence to cathode, B, through the load and to D, as before, after which it turns to the left and goes back to the source, first traversing the other reactance, F, which also retards this impulse until the beginning of the next cycle.

It will thus be seen that a direct current is always flowing from B to D, although it first comes from one anode and then from the other, and although the transformer is sending forth 120 impulses per second, half one way and half the other, nevertheless the reactances respond just as often but not quite so quickly, and by holding back the excess of electricity when each impulse is at its height, and permitting it to pass along when most needed, the vapor arc is kept alive till the opposite impulse becomes strong enough to hold it.

MERCURY LAMPS.

While speaking of mercury vapor and the electric current, it may be well to get acquainted with the lamps which use these as a source of light, and to find out the reason for its peculiar color, which has its advantages for some purposes.

We learned some weeks ago that light as we ordinarily see it is made up of several different colors, all blended so as to give the impression of a single color or "hue." White light is considered as being composed of all of the so-called "primary" colors, and the primary colors are generally called "scarlet," "green," and "blue-violet," which being mixed (not as paints, but as "lights") in equal intensities will produce white light.

COLOR PRINCIPLES.

Artists and others who are not familiar with the ultimate principles of color, are sometimes confused when they are informed that the "red, yellow, and blue" which the school books used to call primary, are in reality "secondary" colors, and the "paints" or "pigments" which they put on canvas are but crude mixtures and act on the eye by reflecting whatever light they do not absorb. For instance, of all the shades of "red" it has been customary to pick out something between "crimson" and "magenta," and call it primary red. Similarly yellow and "peacock-blue" or "cyan-blue" were chosen on account of the following observations.

It was noted that when yellow and blue paints were mixed, the result was a green paint, and when red and yellow were mixed the result was "orange," while red and blue made "violet" or "purple," so there you are—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet. But how about the indigo? Well that happened this way. You see in the olden days the number "7" had a mystic significance, so the much mystified people who felt called upon to name the colors of the spectrum, thought it would be more appropriate to divide it up into seven instead of five, six, eight or more (for there are an indefinite number of colors) and thereby harmonize with the seven days of the week, the seven planets, etc.

THE MAGIC NUMBER SEVEN.

It is likely that the seven days of the week are with us to stay, for the week is a human institution, and it might as well be that way as any other, but the seven planets that watched over the ancients, and included the moon and sun, but not the earth, turned into eight when uranus was discovered. This seeming discrepancy the mystics took care of by saying that the moon was not really a planet after all, but when neptune was discovered a little later, and several hundred smaller, or "minor" planets besides, the magic seven was shown up as a mere coincidence.

So it has been with the "seven colors of the rainbow." The readily recognized colors were given familiar names, and seven different hues could be distinguished corresponding with the colors of red blood, oranges, yellow gold, green grass, blue sky, indigo plants, and violets, and of course there had to be seven, no more, no less. However, modern science has straightened the matter out, and we now know that there are, of all the colors or hues visible to the human eye, just three simple or primary colors, and of these three all of the other hues are composed.

COLOR MIXTURES.

White is a mixture of scarlet, green, and blue-violet in equal proportions. Yellow is a mixture of scarlet and green; and sky-blue, or peacock-blue is a mixture of green and blue-violet; while purple, crimson, and magneta are mixtures of blue-violet and scarlet. Orange is more scarlet mixed with less green, and yellow-green is more green mixed with less scarlet, etc.

Now how about the artists' paints that make green when you mix yellow and blue? It is this way. Yellow is a mixture of scarlet and green. Blue (sky or peacock-blue) is a mixture of green and blue-violet. Therefore they have green in common, but it happens that a pigment with scarlet in it will absorb or darken the blue-violet rays, and vice versa, so when you mix the yellow and blue paints, nothing remains but simple primary green (provided the hues of the paints were pure).

This effect is better understood by taking a pure white piece of paper, which reflects all of the colors equally well. Then take some yellow paint or stain, and color a portion of the paper. This portion now reflects only scarlet and green (appearing to the eye, yellow), the blue-violet being absorbed by the pigment. If you now put some blue pigment over the yellow spot (so as to mix without making a new coating) nothing but green can be reflected to the eye, for the yellow absorbed all the blue-violet coming from the white paper, and the blue-violet in the blue pigment absorbs the scarlet from the remaining yellow, so nothing is left but green. Similarly if scarlet and green paints were mixed pure and in correct proportions the result would be black, as each absorbs the light reflected from each other. In practice the result is a dirty brown, on account of the impurity of the colors.

SPECTRUM COLORS.

More consideration will be given to color principles later on, but now that we understand in a general way the relations of the various hues, let us get back to the mercury vapor lamp and see what colors it gives us. The first thing we discover when we train the "spectroscope" on the glowing lamp is that there is no red, although technically some of the yellow contains primary scarlet. On analyzing the light we find much yellow, more yellow-green, very little blue-green or green-blue, but plenty of violet and ultra-violet. It is the yellow-green part of this light that the eye mostly sees by, and the violet part that most affects the photographic plate, or film.

Now where does this light get its peculiar color? Simply from the vapor of mercury, for each of the chemical elements (of which mercury is one) gives off its own characteristic color (or combination of hues) when it is heated and in a condition of vapor.

For instance the metallic element sodium, which forms part of sodium chloride, or common salt, gives off a bright yellow light, which is seen in the spectroscope as two "lines" close together. Thus the "spectrum" of each element is different, and mercury was chosen for the Cooper-Hewitt lamps on account of its convenience, and the range of the colors which make it peculiarly helpful in some kinds of photography, and also for certain visual work, as the observation of small details.

This use of the mercury lamp brings us to an interesting optical principle. Some time ago we found that a lens does not focus all colors alike, unless it is "achromatic." Few lenses are, and this is also a defect of the human eye, so that when we look at a black object on a white background (composed of all the colors) it does not seem so sharply defined as when on a yellow background, or one of any other comparatively simple color. The reason is that the colors in the white background "slop over" onto the black different distances, on account of not being in focus at the same time. For some purposes therefore as for sorting small objects, or studying the fine lines of maps, etc., a "monochromatic" light would have advantages, and to a certain extent the mercury lamp acts as a monochromatic (one-color) source of light.

Practically all of the seeing is done by the yellow and yellow and green parts of the light, and these are so close together (similar wave-lengths—similar refraction) that the edge of a black line on a white sheet of paper (appearing yellowish in this light) seems unusually sharp and distinct, while red things look black, and certain shades of green-blue, nearly so.

ADDING THE RED.

Right here, however, is a "shining" example of the old adage that there are exceptions to all rules. We have said that there is not a trace of red in the glow of the mercury lamp, and red things look black when illuminated by it, but here the chemist waves his wand and the reds come back, and by a very strange route. You may have seen mercury lamps comprising several long tubes with red troughs behind them (Figure 31). Well, those troughs do not get their red color directly from the mercury vapor, but indirectly from its other colors which are turned into red light by the chemical substance with which the troughs are coated. This phenomenon is known as "fluorescence" and is little understood. It is supposed that the ultra-violet waves (ordinarily invisible) are turned into longer and visible waves by some obscure action of the chemical, something as "phosphorescent" substances glow in the dark after being exposed to light.

A mercury lamp with a fluorescent reflector sends forth a wider range of colors, but they never blend into white light, as there are too many hues missing. On the other hand it is interesting to know there are many uses for light which is not white, and untold quantities of violet and ultra-violet light (and invisible energy) have been recovered by dispensing with glass for the tubes, for glass acts as a shield to such rays. Instead quartz is used to contain the vapor, and the ultra-violet rays passing freely through the quartz are much used to kill germs or bacteria, particularly in sterilizing water and other liquids.

Burr McIntosh Back

Burr McIntosh has come back to his first love—"The photograph." He has organized the Burr McIntosh Film Corporation to make that work possible. Inasmuch as Mr. McIntosh has an artistic soul and is a trained photographer, and an experienced actor, the moving picture fraternity may look forward to receiving from him and his company features of merit. The first feature to be turned out will be based on F. Hopkinson Smith's masterpiece "Colonel Carter of Cartersville." This is a story which has enjoyed a well sustained vogue among those who appreciate quality, as well as gripping moments. The director will be Howell Hansel, whose reputation is based on the work he did in producing the famous serial "The Million Dollar Mystery." Work has started on this feature and it is to be released on the World Film schedule in June.

Violet Hemming Engaged

Miss Violet Hemming, who has been playing an important part in "The Lie" and is now playing in "Under Cover" at the Cort Theater, has been secured by the Pre-Eminent Films, Ltd., to play a leading part under the direction of James Durkin in its first production "The Running Fight," from the novel from William Hamilton Osborne, and Louis Albions and David Perkins' play of the same name.

The next production by the Pre-Eminent Films, Ltd., will be "The Prodigal Judge" from the book by Vaugh Kester, which has long been one of "the six best sellers." W. E. Greene, who is well known in the motion picture industry is president and general manager of the Pre-Eminent Films, Ltd.

Pictures as a World Power

ONLY a few years ago we were wont to seize with avidity upon any newspaper item which, intentionally or not, presented evidence that motion pictures were a real power in the world. Every time a church or a city or an industry adopted the films to prove its cause we burst into song. We made extravagant predictions and claimed extraordinary values. Sometimes even we, ourselves, could not but feel a little amusement at our own enthusiasm, wondering if it were really justified. Then the purely commercial end of the business began to demand all of our attention—everybody's attention. And while we so busied ourselves, swiftly and silently the old predictions came true, the enthusiasms materialized. Today the motion picture is a world power in the fullest sense.

Take the Panama-Pacific International Exposition as representing all of modern civilization—which it does. There could not be a better example of concentration of the activities of the world in a few acres of ground. And at the exposition reels depicting the leading industries, principal cities, scenes, buildings and other points of interest are shown in almost all of the state buildings and foreign pavilions, while many of the big exhibitors in the palaces have motion picture theaters in connection with their exhibits. Approximately one hundred and fifty thousand feet of film is used in the various buildings. Most of the buildings which have daily exhibitions have a continuous performance. A number of special films are now being made for some of the states who have their equipment ready, but are unable to start their performances until the film arrives. In the California building, each county is represented by some special film. Some of the buildings show comedy films in addition to scenes of agriculture, horticulture and other industries. The Oregon, Idaho, Illinois, West Virgina, Washington, Massachusetts and New York buildings have already proved popular on account of the interesting films which are shown. The Great Northern Railway exhibit includes a film which shows the Glacier National Park and other views of interest. The state buildings and foreign pavilions are giving daily motion picture shows.

In short, the motion picture is one of the most important features of the world's greatest collection of important features. Without it, for all of modern ingenuity, a thousand things could not be shown that the public wants to see. With it, everything can be shown, even those which could not possibly be transported to the spot.

The picture has actually made the Panama-Pacific the greatest fair ever held—because no other similar fair has been able to show anything except what was physically within its gates. The latest world's fair is a living example of the fact that the motion picture is an absolute necessity in our modern complex life.

Chicago's New Administration

NOW that Chicago has a brand new mayor it is time to bring up again the subject of local police censorship. The fortunes of Chicago picture shows are presided over by a second deputy superintendent of police and ten censors. Motion picture censorship, of course, forms only a part of the second deputy superintendent's function; but that part has been considerable. Of late his power seems to be waning, or his indifference growing; for we find pictures O. K.'d for a permit by the mayor, the mayor's wife, and even the mayor' secretary on his own initiative.

The board of ten censors, at annual salaries of $1,320 each, is drawn from a civil service list, and so will not be affected directly by the change of administration. The responsible head of the board, however, the second deputy superintendent of police, holds an appointive position. It is reasonable to suppose that the new administration will appoint a new man to the place.

With picture censorship forming so important a part of the work of this position, it is most desirable that the next appointee be a friend of motion pictures —or, what amounts to the same thing, that he have the knowledge of motion picture aims and ambitions which must make him their friend. So the next appointment of a second deputy superintendent of police, if that office is to continue in charge of picture censorship, is a matter for the motion picture interests of the whole country to watch closely, and a matter for the motion picture interests of Chicago to take a hand in so far as they are able.

It will be noted also that the city council of Chicago has changed considerably, and a practically new element is in control. If the new appointee should not prove friendly, or if the board of ten should assume undue and obnoxious authority, or if any other obstacle appears to check the present opportunity to reform the Chicago method of censorship, it may be possible to effect the repeal of the ordinance which created the board.

Censorship in Chicago has been a veritable Old Man of the Sea to the motion picture business, and has ridden out of it a great deal of its local ambition and spirit. Its only usefulness has been to serve as a horrible example to the rest of the country. Now there is an opportunity to be freed of the nightmare; but even the best of opportunity will not work for those who ignore it. Chicago's change of administration should be the signal for vigorous anti-censorship activity, not alone on the part of local exhibitors, but by the film producing interests of the entire country.

"Movies and Censors"

THERE is a National Board of Censorship of motion pictures and it has done its work admirably, and all the more admirably because it has no power to call on the police or anybody else to enforce its decrees. They need no enforcement, and that is why they are so effective. It is the finest example of genuine self-government now before the country. Its members, about 120 in number, are unpaid, and they command universal respect, because they deserve it.

But it need hardly be said that such a body as this has aroused the hostility of those whose only idea of control is a highly paid political commission and an officer's club. So the New York legislature has been importuned for three commissioners of approved political association, who are to be paid $1,500 a year each and who will have the power of life and death over motion picture productions that are worth millions. And if the legislature does this silly thing—and it is silly enough to attract almost any legislature—it will be a severe blow to the existing board, which will probably be forced out of the business that it is now conducting so irreproachably. A jury of 120 disinterested persons of repute will be replaced by three needy politicians who will probably regard their salaries as the least of their remunerations and who would at once get to work in the production of the inevitable scandal. One is inclined to wonder how long this mania for commissions is to last, how long the public will allow itself to be played on by hungry officials whose one and only claim to attention is the fact that they need the money. The New York legislature would do well to remember that the present board is performing a national service, and that even the need to provide at the public expense for three ward-heelers is not sufficient reason for the curtailment or hampering of that service. There should be an end to this sort of vicious interference with effective and conscientious work.—From The Argonaut of San Francisco.

Episode Three: "The Pearls of Paulette."

(Part One.)

"And now for your story, Paulette," suggested Sue Brett as she introduced her fair friend to the executives of the Jumbo Film Corporation gathered in the big studio to hear another harrowing tale. "Well, it all began the day that mummy arrived," said Paulette. "Uncle was just wild over ancient Egyptian mummies and so when he secured a wonderful specimen he could hardly wait till the wrappings were unwound so that he could behold it. Harold Marvin, my cousin, and Owin Evbody, his college friend, were both present when the mummy was undone and both saw the wonderful pearl necklace which encircled the mummy's neck. Uncle went into ecstacies over it and presented it to me immediately, though it was worth several thousands of dollars. The shock of securing such a wonderful mummy proved too much for Uncle and he died as a result, but a week later I went to the seashore with Harold in an effort to forget the terrible happening. I was wearing the necklace, with never a thought that Owin, or anybody else, could possibly covet it. Owin, seeing me in the surf, deliberately pushed a five hundred pound man, oh, a gigantic fellow, off the pier, in an effort to cause a tidal wave and drown me, when he could secure the necklace, but Harold bravely rescued me. A week later I took advantage of an offer made by "Bird" Mann, a friend of Harold's, to go up with him in his aeroplane and Owin, who learned that I was to go up, wickedly flew a kite directly in the path of our monoplane in the hope of wrecking it and causing my death, but the kitestring fortunately snapped and again I was saved from death. I never, however, even remotely suspected Owin of seeking my life, and so was amazed a few days later, when taking part in an auto race, to have the car start backwards at a terrific speed, when I pulled the starting lever. Owin had connected the starting lever to the reverse rod, and the car in which I sat went whirling around the track at more than 90 miles per hour and running backwards. Every moment I expected to be my last.

"A Man and His Mate"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

HENRY WOODRUFF, celebrated star of the legitimate stage, as the featured player, photography that is unexcelled for its clarity and beauty, a story adapted from the play and novel of H. R. Durant and a supporting cast capable in every respect, makes "A Man and His Mate," the latest Reliance release in the Mutual Master-Picture series, one of the best that has yet been offered the exhibitor.

The opening scenes depict a football game in which Betty, the heroine, splendidly interpreted by Gladys Brockwell, meets Ogden, the star of the eleven, played by Henry Woodruff, and one's interest is instantly aroused. The following events lead along so naturally to the climax and one becomes so intensely interested in Ogden's struggle to free himself from the morphine habit, that there is never a lax moment until the very end of the picture.

Director John G. Adolfi proves himself a master of close-up camera work, for many of the scenes are played with only a few of the players visible at a time, and yet the locale of the scene is never for a moment in doubt. The lighting effects are superb, particularlv on the porch of Betty's home, where the scene shifts rapidly back and forth from a moonlit exterior to the lamp light within the room, which is flashed again and again through the open doorway.

Sam de Grasse in several scenes almost takes the leading role away from Henry Woodruff, for the audience is quick to realize that the Chinese servant loves Betty fully as much as does Ogden, the morphine fiend, whom she is seeking to save from ruin. De Grasse's best work is perhaps done in the tense moments when he is protecting Betty and Ogden, concealed within Betty's room, and waiting to warn them of the approach of Taylor and his gang of cowboys.

Betty and her father go west in search of health, followed by Taylor, a neighbor, who loves Betty, and is trying to sell her father a mine. Betty's father hires Choo, a Chinese engineer and graduate of Yale, to inspect the mine, and when he reports unfavorably upon it, refuses to purchase.

On returning home Betty meets Ogden, whom she had seen years before on the football field, and discovers with horror that he is accused of being a horse thief, he having taken Taylor's horse while suffering from lack of his customary drug. Betty volunteers to cure him of the drug habit, and conceals him first in a barn and later in her room, when a lynching party sets out to capture him. Later, the girl's father becomes suspicious that the girl is entertaining a man unknown to him. One of the most tense moments in the photoplay comes when the father searches the girl's room, the audience knowing all the while that Ogden is concealed beneath the sofa.

Later, Taylor, who has been watching in the house, mistakes Betty's father for Ogden and shoots him down. Betty is told, however, that the deed was committed by a man who fled from the scene, and instantly suspects Ogden of the crime.

She has arranged to elope with Ogden the following Thursday evening, and tells the lynching party that the murderer will be there on Thursday, and that she will summon them by striking a gong three times when he appears.

On Thursday night all Ogden's protestations are unavailing and the girl believes him her father's murderer. After she has given the signal that summons the lynchers, she is convinced that Ogden is innocent, and with the Chinaman's assistance protects him.

The lynchers retire, though Taylor remains behind, suspicious of the story Betty has told him, and when he is found listening at the keyhole, Choo kills him with a knife and announces to Betty that her father's life is avenged.

Betty and Ogden leave to be married, and the Chinaman, lighting a cigarette, calmly strikes the bell three times, summoning the lynchers.

Selig's "The Lonely Lovers"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THOSE who have even the most hazy sort of an idea of the life of a theatrical boarding house will thoroughly enjoy the two-reel Selig release of Monday, April 26, entitled "The Lonely Lovers," for the scenes are all laid in such an institution and the players are thespians of every variety and degree of servitude.

Marion Warner has the leading feminine role, that of Violet Wynne, a simple little country girl about to start on a stage career, and she plays it convincingly. William Stowell is Jerry Phillips, the good looking leading man temporarily out of work, and he makes the character one that the audience will both enjoy and sympathize with.

Clever bits of character work are done by an unnamed player who appears as the negro woman of all work about the boarding house, and by the Misses Gleason and Marshall, who have the roles of two haughty footlight favorites, scornful of every newcomer to the ranks of the great theatrical profession.

Upon Violet Wynn's arrival at the boarding house of Mrs. Sullivan she at once becomes the object of much amusement to the Misses St. Clair and DeMar, both of whom look with scorn upon one with so slight an experience.

The following morning when those gathered at the breakfast table discover that Garrick Wheelock, the great tragedian, is in need of a leading lady for his new production, there is at once a stir and all of the players hasten to the nearest agency to see if there is not a possibility of their securing the coveted position.

One after another those who apply are sized up by Wheelock and rejected as hopeless. Finally Violet arrives and when the great tragedian fails to at once listen to her plea, the girl is so tired and worried that she breaks down. Wheelock at once attracted to her emotional ability believes she has thus involuntarily revealed a hidden talent and some hours after she has departed, believing that there is no hope for her in New York, the great tragedian sends for her, announcing that she will at least be given a trial as leading woman in his company.

In the boarding house Violet's engagement causes a flurry and probably the Misses St. Clair and DeMar are still wondering why such notorious personages as themselves were overlooked by the great Wheelock when he chose his leading woman.

Mrs. Sullivan celebrates by actually serving steak the night that her latest boarder leaps so suddenly into fame, and she is moved to celebrate even farther on the following day when Jerry Phillips also signs up for a long term as a stock company leading man.

Ere the film closes we are given glimpses of a little wedding party gathered in a tiny church to witness the marriage of Jerry and Violet, for the leading man has been so attracted by the girl's youth and beauty that he determines to make her the leading woman of his own little home, much to the surprise of the Misses St. Clair and DeMar.

The picture is filled with human interest touches and moves so naturally along to its climax, that it will prove a most acceptable offering in theaters the country over.

Part Six "The Black Box"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

EXCITEMENT aplenty is to be found in the sixth installment of the Universal serial "The Black Box," which is entitled "The Unseen Terror."

It is in this episode that Herbert Rawlinson, in the role of Sanford Quest, makes his thrilling escape from a burning building by sliding down a rope, and when the rope is burned in two, grasps a telephone cable and makes his way hand over hand along it until he reaches a pole, from which he is rescued by members of the fire department. Also in this episode is a sensational fight in a saloon, caused by Quest's attempt to arrest the two Gallaghers, whom he has previously encountered in another episode.

As the story opens we see Quest anxiously pacing his room and wondering whither Lenora, his assistant, has been taken. By means of the pocket wireless which he has perfected, Quest manages to get in communication with Lenora, who is also equipped with one of the small wireless outfits, and learns from her that she is a prisoner in an attic room, with no window except a skylight, which she is unable to reach. She tells Quest that she has no idea of the locality of her prison, that food is pushed through a door to her, then locked immediately, before she is enabled to even see who her captors are.

After telling Lenora that he will do his best to find and rescue her, Quest steps over to the window and is amazed to behold Craig passing on the opposite side of the street. Immediately Quest takes up the pursuit of this criminal and finally traces him to the apartment house in which he takes refuge. He enters the room and is just preparing to put Craig into a hypnotic trance for the purpose of obtaining some admissions from him when a crackling sound is heard in the hallway and a thin wisp of smoke enters the apartment.

Throwing open the door, Quest discovers the hallway to be in flames and all means of exit down the staircase cut off. Uncoiling a rope, which is in the room, Quest compels Craig to descend and then prepares to follow him.

While Quest is slowly making his way down the rope, hand over hand, the flames enter the room he has just left and burn through the strands of rope, permitting him to fall.

By throwing out his arms as he descends, Quest manages to grasp a telephone cable and with much effort makes his way along this until he reaches a telephone pole, from which he is helped by the fire department, which has just arrived.

Craig, on reaching the street, informs a nearby policeman that the man just rescued from the telephone pole is Quest, who is wanted by Inspector French. Quest, however, dons a disguise and when the policeman approaches him motions in another direction to indicate that the man rescued from the pole has escaped in the crowd.

On returning home, Quest finds a telegram from the sheriff of Bethel, a small town in Connecticut, which informs him that the Gallaghers are there, and asking whether Quest wishes them detained.

Quest at once leaves for Bethel, and after a thrilling fight, manages to overpower and arrest the Gallaghers.

Meanwhile, Lenora, in her attic prison, is startled by having a baseball come smashing through the skylight, the ball having been thrown by a small boy who is playing catch with another outside.

She hastily writes a note asking whoever picks up the ball to inform police headquarters that she is a prisoner in the building, and then throws the ball back through the skylight.

The two boys find it and deliver the message and some fifteen minutes later Lenora is rescued by Inspector French and other policemen.

Quest, returning home once more, calls up Inspector French to inform him that he has the Gallaghers, and that their confession will serve as an alibi for him. Through the phototelsme, Quest sees Lenora in Inspector French's office and arranges to have them all come to his rooms.

After they arrive Quest goes to the safe to once more examine it, but on kneeling before it finds on the floor just at the edge of the safe is another of the small black boxes. Opening this, he finds a message within, telling him that the jeweled necklace is in the drawer of his desk. Acting upon the suggestion, Quest opens the desk drawer and there finds Mrs. Rheinholdt's missing necklace. The story will be continued a week later.

American's "The Castle Ranch"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

RICH in its character creations and carrying a denouement which is not exposed until the last twenty feet, the two-reel comedy-drama to be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company on April 19, entitled "The Castle Ranch," is one of the class which patrons of motion picture houses the world over will never tire of seeing.

Two scenes from the American production, "The Castle Ranch."

It has dramatic moments and its comedy is all of the legitimate variety. Its situations are plausible and its characters well drawn and human. Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood share histrionic honors with John Steppling, the former two appearing as a young Englishman and a western girl respectively, while the latter has the real stellar role of the production—that of the Englishman's valet who is seeing western America for the first time.

The manner in which the players "get over" their roles is no small part of the picture's charm. In the hands of less skillful actors and actresses the characters might have lacked that something which makes them appear to fairly live on the screen. This set of American players can always be depended upon to do good work and, if given the proper vehicle, often surprise even those who have watched and admired their past performances. The important supporting roles are capably filled by Joseph Harris, William Bertram, G. E. Rainey, Josephine Ditt, Harry Edmundson and Frank Nicely.

The settings used throughout reflect the artistic beauty typical of American pictures, while the photography is also fully up to the high standard set by productions of this company.

In the opening scenes we are introduced to Jefferson Todd, a land shark who is attempting to sell Castle Ranch, a worthless piece of land with a cabin on it. In front of the cabin has been erected a high board front, painted to represent a castle. It takes a splendid photograph and, because of this, Todd is able to dispose of it to Lord Hickey, who lives in England.

Lord Hickey presents Castle Ranch to his son Algy and tells him to go to America and live on it for a short time, as a sort of vacation from his regular routine of parties and sports. Algy leaves for the States, taking Simpson, his valet, with him.

Upon his arrival there, Algy discovers what his "castle" really is and Todd gives him the laugh. The young Englishman says nothing but determines to even matters. Todd is in love with Sally Dunn, the daughter of Algy's nearest neighbor, and when she meets the young man from over the ocean she at once falls in love with him and he with her. This leaves Todd out in the cold, but Algy apparently does not consider this the proper revenge.

Todd is offered a ranch in the neighborhood but refuses to buy it. The next day oil is discovered on the ranch and its owner becomes rich over night. Todd is plunged into deep gloom by this and consequently when his assistant discovers oil on "Castle Ranch" he decides it is his chance to put something else over on the man who has taken his girl away. His cunning mind at once evolves a plot whereby the Englishman, whom he is firmly convinced cannot tell dirt from sawdust, may be victimized. He hurries to Algy and offers to repurchase the ranch at the price Algy paid and, though the Englishman was present when the oil was discovered, he sells. Sally and her father discover the deception and tell Algy before Todd gets away but he merely laughs and says that he knew it was oil because he planted it there himself.

With this unexpected twist to the finish and clever by-play, in which Algy's valet and the Indians of a nearby reservation figure prominently, scattered throughout the film, it is easy to see why this picture qualifies for a place in the "out of the ordinary" class.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Tramp"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

"THE TRAMP," which was released by the Essany Film Manufacturing Company on April 12, is a typical Charlie Chaplin picture.

That statement tells about all that is needed to convince the great majority of exhibitors that the pictures is a money-getter. Those who have run Chaplin pictures, or who have watched their competitors run them, know that they are of the "hold-'em-out" variety, for this comedian is, today, one of the most talked of players on the screen.

If one attempts to tell why Chaplin "gets over" his comedy with such success, he is tackling more than a man's size job—it is ever so much easier to simply say that Chaplin was as funny as usual and let it go at that.

In "The Tramp" he appears as a knight of the road who secures employment on a farm, after saving the farmer's daughter from other tramps who attempt to take some money from her. The early scenes are mostly given over to the "funny business" by the comedian himself and are sure to get an audience in the proper mood for what follows. Charlie's first troubles are caused by autos which speed along the road and knock him down. He grows tired of being jolted by them and sits under a tree to enjoy a sandwich he has secured. A tramp replaces the sandwich with a brick while Charlie isn't looking and this put him in ill temper.

The farmer's daughter leaves home with the money and the tramps attempt to take it from her. Charlie hurries to the rescue and chases them away with the aid of the brick which was handed him in exchange for his lunch. In the mix-up he sits on the fire, which the tramps were using, and the seat of his trousers catches fire and he has an unpleasant, but amusing, time until a water main brings him relief.

When the farmer hears of Charlie's bravery he puts him to work and then follows a burlesque on practically everything pertaining to farming. The comedian does chores of all kinds with no end of mix-ups and mishaps attached, tries to milk a bull, drives the other farmhand about the place at the point of a pitch-fork, waters the apple orchard with a sprinkling can, gathers eggs which prove to be both good and bad, and other things too numerous to mention.

In the meantime he has fallen in love with the girl and, when the other tramps threaten him with a dire end if he doesn't help them steal the farmer's money, he is in an awful fix. He figures a way to fool his confederates, however, and after telling them to break into the house that night waits at the window with a mallet. The mallet hits everyone who comes near Charlie, but eventually is put to proper use and the tramps flee. Charlie follows but comes to grief when he attempts to climb a fence.

At this point the action seems to tend more toward dramatic than burlesque and there is a very realistic scene in which the farmer and his daughter care for the injured Charlie. Upon his recovery, Charlie is convinced that the girl loves him but cruel fate is against him and her sweetheart arrives just as Charlie is getting ready to propose. When he sees the lovers embrace, Charlie shoulders his little traveling pack and again takes to the road. A final touch of comedy is given by the way he goes down the road as the picture fades out—slowly and sadly at first and then swiftly and with his peculiar little "kick-step" as he decides it is all for the best.

Mutual's "On the Night Stage"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine.

"ON the Night Stage," one of the latest Mutual Master-Pictures to come from Inceville, or, to be more exact, the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, is one of those rare productions which a reviewer delights in finding.

Its story is not exceptionally new, but it is done in a manner which gives all who see it something to recall with pleasure. William S. Hart, in the role of man's man of the West, does a bit of acting in the five reels which has seldom been equalled on the screen before the eyes of this critic. His character is carefully and consistently drawn and all that he does is natural. In the many scenes taken at close range his facial expression is wonderful and he makes one feel all that is passing through his mind.

Next to Mr. Hart, the work of Robert Edeson, who appears as a "Sky Pilot," is deserving of praise. His facial play is also exceptionally strong and his carriage makes one respect the character he creates. Rhea Mitchell, the girl, and Hershal Mayall, who takes the "heavy" lead, do excellent work, the former going through several trying scenes with no small measure of success.

The exterior scenery is far above the average of western "locations," a mountain trail down which the night stage comes being awe-inspiring. The interiors are well chosen and typical of the early West as the average persons know it. Two big dance hall sets are the most pretentious of the interiors.

A realistic fight in the second reel furnishes a real thrill, while the work of the players in the many dramatic situations, with which the play abounds, will hold the interest of almost any audience. It is hard to imagine what this picture might have been had it been placed in any other hands than those of the director who was responsible for it or had the roles been assigned to any other players than Messrs. Hart, Edeson and Mayall and Miss Mitchell. As it appears on the screen, however, its strength is undeniable and too much cannot be said in its praise, for it is a splendid specimen of the kind of photodrama which "goes over big."

Early in the story of the picture Belle Shields, a dance hall girl who is the sweetheart of Texas Smith, a silent road agent, is much taken with Austin, the new parson who comes to town. The cowboys joke Texas about the parson "cutting him out" and a free-for-all fight follows. Austin, who learned more at school than theology, comes to Texas' assistance, rescues him in a smashing set-to and they become fast friends.

Austin and Belle are married, and Texas keeps a watchful eye on Belle so that she will not go back to the old life. Soon Belle makes a visit to a nearby town and, in a spirit of recklessness, attends the dance hall. Jack Malone, a lady's man, decides that he must have Belle and immediately takes possession of her. It is when they are standing at the bar about to take a drink, and Jack kisses her, that Belle awakens to what she is about to do. She immediately returns home, but Jack is undaunted and sends her a letter telling her that he will expect to meet her at the cross roads that night.

She confides her troubles to Texas, who holds up the night stage and takes Jack out. He walks him across the desert and is about to turn him loose, when Jack wheels around and fires. Pathe's "The Cryptic Ring"

Reviewed by Florence M. Enk.

IN THE "Cryptic Ring," the second episode of the new "Exploits of Elaine," Edwin Arden, as Wu Fang, attempts to take Elaine's life and by so doing nearly succeeds in taking that of Craig Kennedy. From present indications Wu Fang, as a criminal, will be even more clever than the Clutching Hand in the preceding serial and the public is already looking forward with much anticipation to the episodes to come.

There isn't a foot of the film that isn't filled with action, and the chase between Craig Kennedy and Wu Fang, up and down in elevators, across the roof of the hotel in which Wu Fang resides, and then onto another roof, by means of a rope, are among the exciting features of the episode.

Wu Fang is the possessor of the cryptic ring, which he believes will help him locate Bennett's millions. One night while he is out, the tong men rob him and take the cryptic ring. Later Kennedy purchases the ring for Elaine.

Elaine plans an oriental reception and Wu Fang is hired as a magician. He discovers the ring in Elaine's possession. During an intermission Elaine asks Jameson to get her an ice. Wu Fang, meeting Jameson and learning the ice is for Elaine, secures it by his magic powers, pours a drop of aconite into it and then with some more magic restores it to Jameson. In the meantime Kennedy has gone to get an ice for Elaine and both return at the same time. Craig takes the ice Jameson had brought for Elaine and gives Elaine that which he had brought for her.

Now aconite is a deadly poison and when in food can scarcely be detected. After Kennedy has taken two teaspoonfuls he collapses on the floor. Having detected the symptoms and being speechless, he writes the word "aconite" on the sand on the conservatory floor. Jameson, having had instructions from Kennedy regarding the treatment of the poison, rushes madly from the house to the laboratory and after a mad search locates a small bottle containing digitalin, which, administered in a hypodermic, is the only antidote for aconite poisoning.

Jameson does excellent work throughout this portion of the picture and every one is happy when he arrives with the digitalin in the nick of time and after an anxious night Craig is fully recovered.

Wu Fang, still desirous of obtaining the cryptic ring, calls Elaine and tells her that Craig has had a relapse, is dying at his hotel and that she is to bring the digitalin.

The girl, anxious for her lover, hastens to Wu Fang's apartments and Wu Fang then makes known to her his desire for the ring. Elaine and her aunt Josephine endeavor to escape but are caught by two Chinamen and bound.

A few minutes after the departure of Elaine and her aunt for Wu Fang's apartments Craig and Jameson call on her and are much surprised when they learn why she was called away.

They immediately depart for Wu Fang's apartments and arrive just in time to rescue Elaine and her aunt. Believing Elaine's captors to be unconscious, they pursue Wu Fang.

on the roof only to be followed by Craig. By means of a rope Wu Fang escapes from one roof to another, Craig follows and just as he is about to land on the next roof Wu Fang cuts the rope and the weight of Craig's falling body throws him into one of the rooms of Wu Fang's apartments, much bruised.

In the meantime Wu Fang's helpers have recovered consciousness and make off with Elaine. The picture closes with Craig anxious for Elaine but too weak to act. It is not pleasing to think of Elaine in the hands of these Chinamen, but one feels sure that with Craig alive to look after her she will yet be rescued.

Lubin's "The Face of Fear"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

"THE Face of Fear," the title of the second installment of the Lubin serial "The Road O' Strife," serves to introduce two new characters into the story in the persons of Caleb Jerome, a private banker, and Gilbert, his son, who spends money lavishly and leads a fast life.

That Gilbert is to have an influence for evil upon Alene's life becomes quickly apparent when one learns that it was Caleb who killed Professor Gershom and that the deed was committed in order to secure certain documents relating to Alene's fortune, which must be destroyed ere the young girl becomes of age.

The splendid system of sub-titling, using conversation only for the purpose of getting over such explanation as is necessary, continues in this second reel and one is still more favorably impressed with the new wrinkle that Lubin has invented the longer the story continues.

Photographically the second picture in the series is the peer of the first one, splendid though that was, for all of the scenes screened during the presentation of the second episode are crystal clear and sharp cut.

As the film begins we learn that Gilbert, son of Caleb Jerome, has been leading a fast life, and see him quarrel with one of the women with whom he is infatuated, being summoned home by a telephone call at the end of this quarrel, by his father. Arrived at home, Gilbert learns for the first time that his father is haunted by a strange fear, and imagines that he sees the face of Professor Gershom, the man he killed, in that of everyone whom he meets. The camera work in this portion of the picture, in which Gershom's face is really substituted for that of every other character who appears to converse with Jerome, is splendidly done and worthy of particular praise.

Old Caleb Jerome confesses to his son that he is a murderer and tells him in detail the events of the dreadful evening on which he killed Alene's guardian;

how he struck the man down in their quarrel after having failed to secure the papers he sought, and then was forced to conceal himself in a closet when Alene suddenly returned to the house; how, when the girl fled, frightened, he took advantage of the opportunity to carry the body of the murdered man to the river bank and throw it into the stream.

Gilbert is also warned that the documents which his father went to secure must be destroyed ere Alene becomes of age, for if the girl discovers the information contained within them, Gilbert himself will become penniless. The young man promises to protect his own welfare in every way, and within an hour learns that his father has died as a result of a shock he received when imagining the face of his own butler to be that of Professor Gershom.

As the film closes we see Alene still tenderly cared for by Doctor Duncan and his wife, and more deeply in love than ever with Robert Dane, the young man she had met so strangely, and whom she is anxious to marry, though he feels that she is entitled to know more of the world ere she gives her heart into his keeping.

Edison's "Poisoned by Jealousy"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

FOR some unknown reason stories based upon either intrigue or romance seem to be the photoplay lot of sunny Italy and Spain. A play of the latter class and laid in either of the two mentioned countries will be the Edison release of April 30. Entitled "Poisoned by Jealousy," it is in two reels and tells the story of the hatred which arises between two brothers, rivals in love. Although the boys are affectionate chums before the girl enters their lives, jealousy arouses the worst that is in the nature of the older, and no resort seems too ignominious for him to use in his mad endeavor to gain the girl who has favored his brother.

As the play deals with characters of moderate means there is nothing exceptionally striking or luxurious about the settings, but they succeed in suggesting the romantic, bohemian atmosphere of the life portrayed, and furnish a pleasing background for good acting. Supporting these is clear photography. Bessie Learn and Harry Beaumont head the cast as Dolce, the little singer, and Enrico, her faithful husband. Carlton King characterizes the third and troublesome member of the triangle as Stephano.

In a little attic studio in an unpretentious section of the city live two brothers, Enrico and Stephano. Their devotion to each other is unbounded—until the advent of jealousy. In the apartment adjoining that in which the brothers make statuettes which they sell on the street, Dolce, a sweet little singer, lives. The boys are attracted by the girl's singing, and each determines to win her.

Enrico wins her admiration by saving her canary when fire breaks out in her room, and gradually eclipses Stephano in the suit for her love. The worst in the elder brother's nature asserts itself, and he begins to hate his successful rival, concealing his real feelings behind smiles and affectionate congratulations. After their marriage Enrico and Dolce insist upon Stephano's remaining with them. With apparent reluctance he consents. Inwardly he is pleased, for he sees a way of separating Enrico from his wife.

He writes his brother a letter purporting to come from a relative in America, stating in glowing terms the wonderful advantages of the land of the free. His ambition stirred, Enrico sails for the new country, promising Dolce that he will send for her as soon as he has established a home. Stephano takes particular pains to see that the communications of the married couple do not reach their destination.

After a few weeks he writes Enrico that Dolce has died. The young wife also receives a letter, signed in the relative's name, stating that Enrico has succumbed to a fever. So far, Stephano's scheme has succeeded admirably, but there it ends. Dolce's love for her husband will not allow her to encourage his brother's attentions.

Enrico's fame as an operatic star fails to bring him happiness, and he decides to return to his native land. While dining in the cafe in which Dolce used to sing, he is startled by the sudden appearance of the girl. At the same moment she sees him. A touching reunion follows. Enrico's anger is aroused by the sight of Stephano seated at one of the tables. He confronts him and a struggle ensues. Stephano attempts to stab Enrico, but the knife sinks into his own breast instead.

"The Pursuit of Pleasure"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

A DELICATE subject receives clever treatment and points out a moral bearing on present day life in the second release of the "Who Pays?" series named "The Pursuit of Pleasure." It is in three reels, and is a close competitor with "The Exploits of Elaine" for the "star" position on the Pathe program.

Balboa players comprise the cast, chief of which are Ruth Roland as Rita Deane, the girl who realized too late that high life and gaiety do not define Happiness; Henry King as James White, a type of young man common in life, who enjoys the cafes and irresponsible, pleasurable companions while thinking only of the present, but who, on falling in love and becoming married, looks forward to years of home life devoted to his wife and children; and Daniel Gilfeather as Cyrus Deane, a not unusual type of father who fails to temper his well-meant, parental severity with judgment based on a knowledge of human nature's craving for innocent pleasure.

Extraordinary care is being used in the production of the plays of this series, which is receiving the personal attention of H. M. Horkheimer. The scenes are artistically staged, and the action realistic. One of the features of this release is Miss Roland's daring fall down a flight of stairs. A number of other details such as this are graphically portrayed in the picture; things whose place in the story could almost be bridged by a sub-title but which, when convincingly enacted, leave a lasting impression and a sense of realism and completeness with the spectator.

Rev. Dean's anger leads him to acts of violence.

Cyrus Deane, minister of God, rules his household by an iron-bound code. His daughter, Rita, is a vivacious, wholesome girl whose love for innocent pleasure and company remains alive through years of a guarded, convent-like existence. In some inconceivable manner she becomes acquainted with James White, and quickly accepts his suggestion of an elopement as a means of circumventing her father's refusal to their marriage.

A year later finds them living in comfortable surroundings. To the outside world they are a well-mated, happy couple, but in private life they are unhappy. This latter is due to Rita's aversion to children. Several times she finds her husband playing with the chauffeur's little baby, and each time the discovery brings on a quarrel between them. Rita's abnormal, and hitherto ungratified, taste for pleasure finds vent in gay parties, wine suppers and the like.

A newspaper announcement of a dinner to be given at the White home arouses the Reverend Cyrus Deane's wrath, and he bursts in upon the celebration and attempts to punish James for what, he thinks, is the cause of his daughter's conduct. She informs him that he, not her husband, is to blame for her unseemly behavior. The scene wakens in Rita a realization of what a sham her married life has been, and she prays for the blessings of motherhood.

Before her prayers are answered she meets with a serious accident which renders her incapable of ever becoming a mother. The relentless gaze of the Reverend Cyrus Deane, the sorrowful expression on the husband's face, and the anguish plainly written on the countenance of Rita, as the doctor pronounces the sentence, prompts the question, "Who Pays?"
